If passed by the state Legislature, linear tuition will take effect fall 1996.

Although linear tuition has already been passed, final decisions about other regents tuition changes are in June, about 15 months before the next school year.

All changes and decisions made by the board in June 1996 will take effect for the 1997-98 school year, Jordan said.

Hiebert also mentioned qualified admissions but focused on the issue of improving the quality of high-school preparation for universities.

"We may not be giving students a chance if they are not prepared," Hiebert said.

Only 18 percent of Kansas high school graduates have completed the regents' required curriculum, he said.

While it would be difficult to require students to take the harder classes, the board recommends that high school counselors steer students into a college preparation curriculum, Hiebert said.

ACT data is higher for students who take the classes in this core curriculum, Jordan said.

Archaeologists find tomb in Mid-East

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — A nearly 4,500-year-old tomb untouched by looters was discovered in Syria, promising to yield important new information about ancient northern Mesopotamia civilization, archaeologists said Thursday.

The tomb, believed to be a family burial, contained the skeletal remains of at least 10 people, a trove of daggers, beads and unbroken pottery and intact bird eggs.

Archaeologists discovered the tomb in April at Tell es-Sweyhat on the Euphrates River when a sinkhole appeared in a recently irrigated field. The tomb dates from about 2500 B.C. to 2250 B.C. and is part of an extensive cemetery that might contain up to 150 tombs.

"The most exciting thing about this site is the potential there," said Richard L. Zettler, an associate curator of the Penn State's Museum of Archaeology and Anthropology. "If in fact we have about 150 tombs, we have a population to study."

Tombs of comparable age have been found previously in northern Syria, but many of those had been looted, limiting the information available to archaeologists.

"Any well-preserved cemetery is potentially a very significant discovery and we are still very ignorant of many aspects of society in Early Bronze Age Syria," said Joan Oates, a University of Cambridge archaeologist. She was not familiar with the unpublished Penn findings.

The roughly oval tomb is about 13 feet by 16 feet and about 6 feet high. It contained two intact skeletons and pieces of others piled together to make room for later additions, Zettler said.

"They just literally took the bodies and pushed them aside," he said.

Intact bird eggs were found in the eye sockets of one animal, a sheep or a goat. Zettler said the bird eggs may have been intended as food in the afterlife or for a meal consumed as part of a burial ritual.

Archaeologists hope to use DNA analysis and other scientific techniques to look for biological relationships among the tomb's occupants. Comparisons to other finds could provide insights into the people's social organization, trade and economy.

Mesopotamian civilization long was understood mostly through excavations in what is now Iraq, but those perspectives have been altered significantly through discoveries in Syria during the past 25 years.

For example, while archaeologists once considered people of northern Mesopotamia to be illiterate, Italian excavations of Tell Mardikh, ancient Ebla, turned up some 15,000 tablets in a Semitic language, Zettler said.

and, with a grant from the Kansas Health Foundation, the 70-person Integrated Community Healthcare Council began to study how to get the most from area resources.

To better coordinate health care services, the group thought one of the first things the community needed was an electronic network, said Bremenkamp, who headed the health care council.

The electronic network would foster telemedicine projects, allowing various state and local agencies to cooperate with private health care providers and to easily share information among themselves.

Last fall, Rep. Jim Morrison, R-Colby, attended the second annual World Wide Web Conference in Chicago, where he met a regional librarian from Dodge City, who told him about an upcoming grant available for rural computer networks from the National Public Telecomputing Network.

Using a grant from private foundations and the National Telecommunications and Information Administration, a Department of Commerce agency, NPTN launched a program this spring to build 30 new rural Free-Nets as part of its Rural Information Network project.

In March and April, NPTN sent out 17,000 brochures to rural public libraries for the first phase of the grant program, said Peter Harter, the executive director and general counsel for the group.

NPTN purposefully made the application process difficult, and only 70 communities applied.

"We wanted to deal with the people who were willing to put out the effort," Harter said.

Morrison mentioned the grant to Bremenkamp and JoAnne Sunderman, director of the Pioneer Memorial Library in Colby, and Sunderman agreed to write a proposal.

Sunderman forwarded Colby's application in June, and by July, they learned they would be one of the 10 winners.

Colby, as a winner in NPTN's Rural Information Network project, will be one of 30 new rural Free-Nets, which will join 60 Free-Nets already on-line in 10 countries.

The Thomas County Free-Net and nine other systems are the first phase of the Rural Information Network project, which drew from applicants across the United States and its territories.

The remaining 20 networks will be built in Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio and Indiana.

In the past, the organization has only been able to provide software and technical support, but with the Rural Information Network project, NPTN was able to provide both software and hardware.

The Thomas County Free-Net and the other grant winners will receive nine 14.4 kilobaud modems and what Harter described as a "beefed-up" Apple Power Macintosh 8100, "which can handle a pretty sizable load of simultaneous users."

Free-Nets will connect rural communities with the rest of the world, Harter said.

Harter said that after visiting rural areas, he understands it is the quality of life that people appreciate.

With cuts in transportation, though, rural communities can become increasingly isolated.

The Free-Net will allow Colby residents to work with each other on-line and form an electronic community, Harter said.

Sunderman, who wrote the grant, said "This is the start of some little, tiny piece of the technology revolution here in western Kansas."

She sees the network as a way to bring the community together.

As a central clearinghouse for community information, the network will be an electronic town crier giving residents important local information.

Organizers were waiting for the equipment to arrive and expected the Free-Net to be on-line before the end of September.

in our opinion

Students' education supplemented by lectures

This type of experience is far more educational than any class.

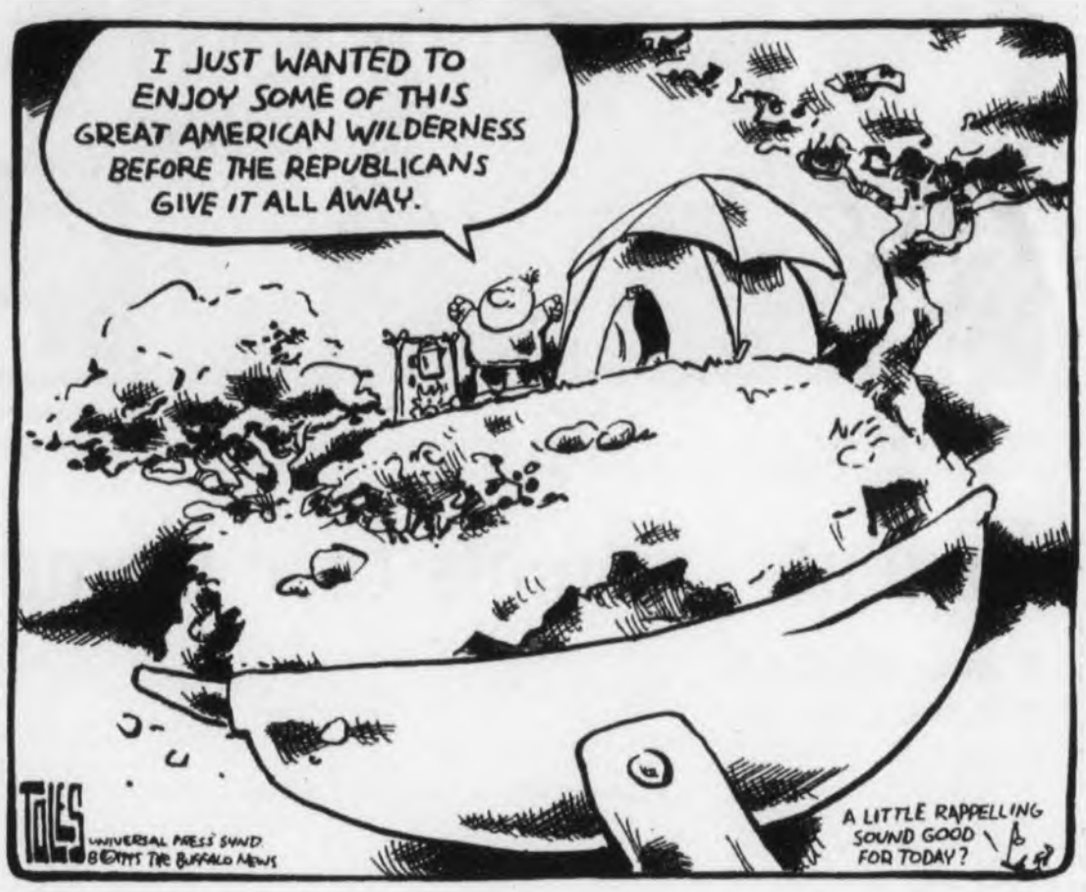
"Another day, another Landon Lecture..."

So began our editorial of Jan. 25, 1995. We asked that the administration excuse classes for future Landon Lectures, but we were unsuccessful.

Today, at 10:30 a.m. in McCain Auditorium, U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Dan Glickman will address the University in the 102nd Landon Lecture, and a sizable number of K-State students will be unable to attend. They have class.

The Landon Lecture series provides a chance for K-State students to hear the opinion of an internationally renowned policy-maker. The ensuing question-and-answer period affords a unique opportunity to interact with these individuals.

This type of experience is far more educational than any class.



K-State attracts students by providing a variety of educational opportunities both inside and outside the classroom. And regardless of the subject or the ability of the instructor, if everything we learn in our time at the University is gleaned from class notes, then students suffer. It is the responsibility of the administration to do everything possible to facilitate student involvement in Landon Lectures.

When this responsbility is neglected, it is the responsibility of the faculty to take the lead by canceling class — and we applaud those who do.

Most important, it is the responsibility of the students to demand the most of their education by attending as many of these types of events as possible.

We'll keep trying to make it. But if we miss you, Dan, please forgive us ... we have class.

Peltier needs freedom

ADRIAN FLEMING

Dear President Clinton,

Yes, it's me again, your friendly rabble-rouser. Have you missed me?

I know it's been awhile since my last letter. What was that one about? I don't remember. The invasion of Haiti, I think. Or was it that one on arms negotiation? I don't recall. I'm sure if you ask the FBI for my file, they have it on record there somewhere.

Bill, I've got to talk to you, voter to politician. It's about a situation that has been sticking between my teeth for the past decade or so. Now, I know you'd rather I go to my elected legislators with these "situations" of mine, but at the risk of being libelous, I have to tell you I think they all care about their constituency about as much as a disease-ridden louse cares about the deer it's riding on.

I decided the only way to get anywhere was to appeal to the head louse, so to speak. Are you cozy?

I want to talk to you about Leonard Peltier. In case you don't recall the name, let me refresh your memory. (If you're wondering, I got most of these facts from Dan Lewerenz. You know, the other guy who pesters you all the time.)

COLUMN

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

In 1975, two FBI agents trailing a man suspected of theft went onto the property of Harry Jumping Bull at Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota.

No one knows how it happened or why, but shots were exchanged, and when the smoke cleared, both the agents and a Native American man were dead.

Four men were named as suspects in the murders: Jimmy Eagle (the guy the FBI was following), Leonard Peltier, Bob Robideau and Darrelle Butler.

All, at the time, were members the American Indian Movement, also known as AIM, a political and cultural movement created to preserve native cultures and to fight corruption in tribal governments.

Of the four, three of the men were cleared of the charges against them. Leonard Peltier, alone, was tried and convicted of the crime.

It seems a pretty cut-and-dried case when I say it like that but, let me tell you, forget the O.J. Simpson trial. Peltier's trial was the biggest cluster you-know-what from the moment it started.

In the first place, there was no convincing physical evidence. The weapon thought to have been used to commit the crime was badly damaged.

Ballistics tests could not be done to determine exactly whether it was the murder weapon, and the bullet was more flexible than the one which assassinated President Kennedy.

Records show it was supposedly found in two different locations by two different investigators.

Secondly, there were eyewitness reports that Leonard Peltier was there and fired the gun, but they were conflicting. Some of the "eyewitnesses" even admitted later they had lied.

In fact, one woman, whose testimony was crucial in getting Peltier convicted, confessed to never even having met the man in her life.

Evidence was withheld, and is even now being withheld, with the excuse that this all has something to do with national security. I'd really like to know how this could have anything to do with preserving our national security.

I don't see how it could unless it proves the FBI screwed up royally and offers a good excuse for it being dismantled.

Even though the prosecutors in this case have said they still have no idea who actually killed the federal agents, Peltier is serving two life sentences in the Leavenworth Federal Prison. He has appealed many times without success, even though his trial was a complete joke. Even though, since his incarceration, he has been nominated for a Nobel Peace Prize.

He has inspired thousands, including myself, to preserve the Native American culture and its people, as well as giving us the ambition to set right the injustice inflicted upon others.

Sir, I have never begged for anything in my life, and I pray from now on, I never will. But I will beg for Leonard Peltier's release. I'll beg you, Congress and anyone who will listen to me. I'll even beg of that wanker of a senator of mine, if it will make any difference.

You are the man in charge. You can release him. You could reopen his case, read his files and recognize this situation for what it is — one of the biggest miscarriages of justice this country has ever seen.

It's time to let Leonard Peltier go home. Please.

▶ GREEK PARKING

Editor:

This is an open letter to K-State greek houses.

I live in the 1800 block of Fairchild Avenue, which is within two blocks of 11 greek houses. Every Wednesday evening between the hours of 5 p.m. and 7 p.m., traffic becomes a nightmare.

Tonight, getting home from work was extremely dangerous. Traffic was reduced to one lane as 12 cars were parked in a NO PARKING ZONE. Three cars were blocking a fire hydrant.

As soon as I arrived home, I called the police and reported the situation. The illegal parking is so unnecessary. Just one-half block north of Anderson Avenue is the West Stadium parking lot.

All of the people coming to the greek houses in this area could park there and walk as a group to the house they are visiting.

In past years, I have called the Panhellenic Council to discuss this recurring problem.

The office worked with the greek houses to resolve the problem. When the parking improved, I called the same office to thank them.

Sad to say, the improvements only last a week or two.

Within the past 45 days, the Manhattan Fire Department has answered three false fire alarms (due to the heat) for sorority houses within a block of my house. If an alarm would sound on a Wednesday for an actual fire, the firefighters would have been unable to reach the greek houses.

Please think about the safety of yourself, friends and neighbors. By parking illegally (even for five minutes) you endanger all who live in this area.

Money motivates Parking Services

Since becoming a K-STATE student and graduating last May, I have found no reason for Parking Services to bear its name. There is absolutely no service in the parking service function. I have seen many disgraceful abuses of power in my days as a student, yet none so blatant as the appeals systems for parking citations. I see the need for people to be ticketed when causing parking problems on campus. The parking of cars in a restricted area, for example. I also have seen tickets for things which are entirely excusable, and parking appeals follow the law for the sake of the law.

I must have been mistaken when I assumed that an appeal of a ticket was a way to look at circumstances that warrant consideration. I feel that Parking Services does not view it this way. I find that Parking Services is more interested in revenue and bureaucracy than in servicing the needs of the student. I cite two examples of the inability of Parking Services to perform up to its name.

Example one: A student appealing a ticket at the same time as myself was issued a ticket for not having his permit displayed on the rearview mirror of his car. Because his rearview mirror had fallen down, he placed it on the visor and in visible view for the ticketers to see.

However, he was issued a ticket. He was parked in the appropriate lot, and the ticketer saw his ticket, yet when he appealed the ticket to parking "services," he was denied. He further went before the board to appeal and, again, was denied because the book said that placement was to be on the rearview mirror. This student had caused no parking problems and had conformed to the rules. This student was denied because the appeals board makes the final decision and gets a rise out of screwing their fellow students. The people on the board should be placed there to do justice, not to show how powerful they are.

GUEST COLUMN

MIKE BRAMAN

Example two: This is my own case. I was recently denied appeal of a ticket that was issued to me on the day after the residence halls had closed. There were three cars in the lot, and I was staying an extra day for graduation ceremonies. Because the lot was empty, and school was officially out of session, I took the liberty to park in the closest spot. I parked in a metered spot. I was ticketed on Family Weekend. I felt that I would receive a letter saying, "yes, it is redundant to ticket a car in an empty lot; we are sorry for the inconvenience. Congratulations." Nope, I have to pay. This is a wonderful way for K-State to treat its future alumni. I am so thrilled that K-State has abusive systems intended to milk its students of every last penny, even after they graduate.

There are other examples which show more and more that parking "services" is the greatest oxymoron known to man and is not an effective mediator in legitimate disputes. Is there anyone who has faced this overzealous appeals board and won?

Let us do something constructive with Parking Services. Let's fire the bozos who run it now and enact a service for students. The newly established bike registration is not progress, folks.

The fact that there "might" be a fee for bike registration in the future is a certainty. This will only cause more bureaucracy and money needed to make sure all bikes have a registration. We have to pay for more ticketers, more paperwork, more computer workers, more bike wheellocks and more hassles. This does not mention the time and resources used to work with appeals.

Instead, we should give bike riders a bonus for freeing up the already crowded parking lots that the parking "services" cannot figure out how to fix. I am waiting for a time when we will have a fair system with knowledgeable people in positions of power.

These people could use common sense to sort out problems. Instead, I feel that we the students will probably be dealing with toll booths on campus sidewalks and walker registration permits on our backpacks.

▶ HIGHER EDUCATION

Schools' assets, funding debated

■ Speaker offers advice to improve universities

Sarah Kallenbach
staff reporter

Juggling the costs and quality of education was the topic of a lecture sponsored by K-State's provost office and the strategic planning committee Thursday.

Dennis Jones, president of the National Center for Higher Education Management Systems, said higher education is facing a lack of funding through the government.

"Failure of the state government to pay for the higher education has little to do with how it feels about it," Jones said.

Part of the government's failure to provide funds can be traced to the fact that higher learning is not well known nationwide, he said.

In Kansas, higher education is viewed as something that should be invested in, Jones said.

"By and large, Kansans are supportive of higher education — more so, I would say, than in other states. Part of that has to do with the tradition and folklore of the state," John Murray, professor and director of the School of Family Studies and Human Services, said.

According to the Kansas Poll by the School of Family Studies and Human Services, 48 percent of the people polled said funding for higher education should be increased, 50 percent said that it should remain the same and only 2 percent said that the funding should be decreased.

The lack of money is important, but Jones said he also believed the assets of each university should not be overlooked.

"The fundamental issue is not where the money goes, but where the assets go," Jones said.

Professors doing what they do best, whether that is teaching or doing research, would be using the assets available to the institution to better use.

Jones said other solutions include creating a core curriculum that is flexible to work with and increasing the reliance of competitive-based assessments, like quiz-outs.

The recommendations given by Jones were taken seriously by the K-State because of his in-depth view of the system, Jim Coffman, K-State provost, said.

"He has a national view and is extraordinarily well informed because he consults in every state," Coffman said.

Speaker warns against reliance on statistics

Jenny Pruitt
staff reporter

If an environmentalist said a nuclear power plant causes cancer, and an industry spokesman indignantly denies it, who is right?

Former science editor of the Washington Post, Victor Cohn, addressed this question in a speech entitled "Separating truth from trash" Thursday.

Cohn is a research fellow for the American Statistical Association and the author of the 1989 book "News & Numbers: A Guide to Reporting Statistical Claims and Controversies in Health and Other Fields."

His speech, which was co-sponsored by the K-State statistics department and journalism and mass communications school, discussed the accuracy of statistics and the media.

"One of my professors told me he'd give me a D if I never took another science course," Cohn said with a grin. "So, naturally, I became a scientific reporter."

"My problem was always that someone would say the sky is falling, and the other side says it's not. What are we supposed to believe?" he said.

Herbert Hill, graduate student in statistics, said the speech helped him realize the importance of statistics.

"I think the media would have more respect if they said the only certain thing in life is death and taxes," Hill said.

Shoba Rajgopal, graduate student in journalism and mass communications, said journalists must be more careful.

"Even if the ends you're working toward are good, you have to be careful of the means," Rajgopal said.

Cohn said the solution to knowing what to believe was to understand six concepts that apply to all sciences, all studies and virtually all knowledge of society and the universe. These concepts are uncertainty, probability, power, bias, variability and the hierarchy of studies.

"These concepts can be applied to practically everything we look at in the newspaper," he said.

The six concepts can be applied to science, sports or even advertisements, he said.

"Ads like, 'nobody out tops the Coppertop' are really saying, 'we last about the same as any other battery.'"

"Remembering six concepts can teach us to ask, 'How do you know?' with a certain degree of sophistication," he said. "The very way they answer or dodge this question tells you if they are a reliable source."

Science is almost always uncertain and, therefore, all studies have flaws, Cohn said.

"Too many papers print results of studies as 'this is what it is,'" he said.

"It takes guts to put that the results may not be conclusive because the story may not get on page one."

Scientists also live with uncertainty by measuring probability, Cohn said.

"Nature will randomly produce many alarming clusters of cancers or birth defects that have no cause but nature's coin tossing. These produce striking anecdotes and often striking news stories, but they alone do not constitute reliable information that says there is a cause," Cohn said.

The greater the number of cases or subjects studied, the more likely the information will be true, Cohn said. But, be careful of the dangers of bias.

"When we approach statistics or studies we often say, 'I wouldn't have seen it if I hadn't believed it,'" he said.

To avoid this bias people must ask if there are any other possible explanations.

Also, people should remember all studies vary from measurement to measurement, Cohn said.

When reading these studies, always ask about the odds, he said.

"If a pollutant seems to be causing a 10-percent increase above background, it may or may not be a meaningful association. If a risk is 10 times greater, the relative risk in cigarette smokers versus non-smokers, the odds are strong that something is happening."

Finally, there is a hierarchy of studies from the least believable to the most believable. A prospective study that follows a selected population for a long period of time is always better than a retrospective study, he said.

K-State netters prepare for tourney

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

K-State volleyball coach Jim Moore had a nice problem develop after last weekend's opening tournament at Long Beach State.

Moore had so many players perform well in California, he can't decide on a set starting lineup yet.

Although the Big 8 conference season doesn't start until the Cats' Sept. 30 match against Colorado, Moore would like to get something set in stone in the coming weeks, when the Cats play in tournaments in Lincoln, Neb., and Nacogdoches, Texas.

The Wildcats (1-1) play Wisconsin tonight and Purdue Saturday night at the Lincoln tournament at the University of Nebraska.

"It's really hard to pick a starting lineup now because there's a lot of players playing well," Moore said. "We really need that now, but it's just really hard to decide now."

Two players who have been in the starting lineup and will be throughout the year are Kate DeClerk and Devon Ryning.

DeClerk led the way against Utah State with six kills and seven digs. Ryning, the Cats' regular setter, had 35 assists in the loss to Long Beach State and 34 in the win against Utah State.

"Kate DeClerk has been playing well since the preseason started, and so has Devon Ryning," Moore said.

When Moore does decide on a starting lineup, he will be guaranteed of having depth.

Last weekend, defensive specialists Val Phillips and Mariela Fasce were among the reserves who stood out.

Against Utah State, Phillips, a sophomore from Apple Valley, Minn., recorded four service aces, and she had eight digs in the Long Beach State match.

Fasce, a freshman from Boca Raton, Fla., had six digs against Long Beach.

"They did a great job for us last weekend," Moore said.

> K-STATE VOLLEYBALL COACH

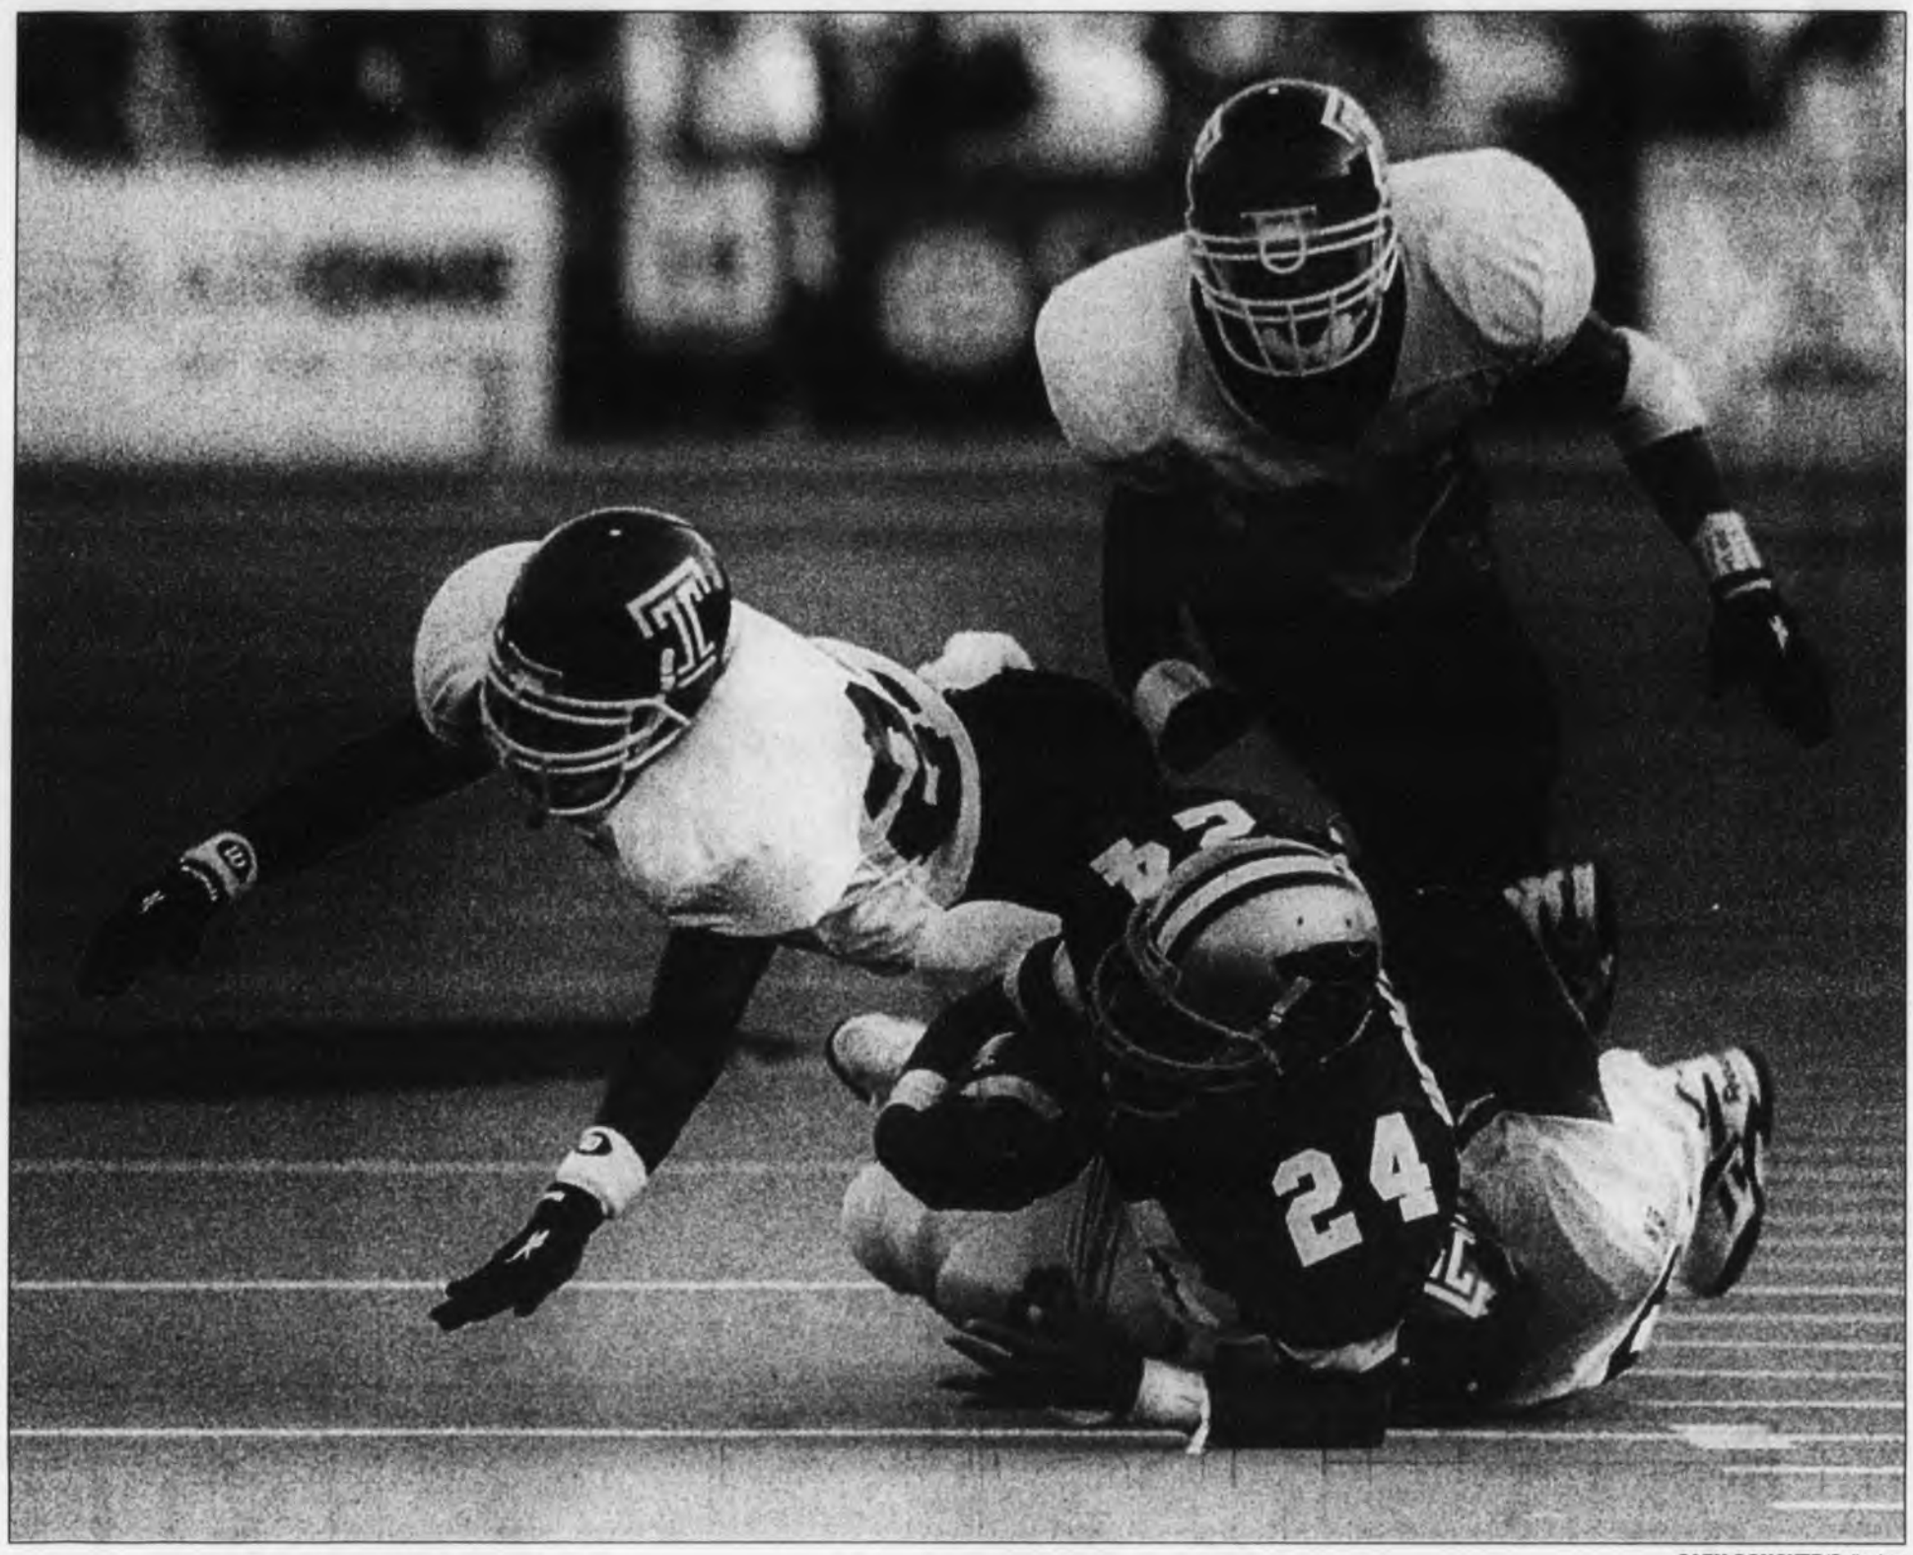
"Val was the person who really sparked us in the first game versus Long Beach State."

As a whole, Moore said the K-State bench is deeper than in his first season last year.



"Our depth is better than it was," Moore said.

"We have some people who can go in and we have the opportunity to make some substitutions so it's pretty good."

In preparing for the Nebraska tournament this weekend, Moore's focus has been on defense.

"We need improvement defensively," he said. "We need to block better, but that's something we've been working on."

The Cats will be host to the K-State Invitational Sept. 22-23 at Ahearn Field House.

Cats look to improve offense against Cincinnati

Todd Stewart
assistant sports editor

After K-State football coach Bill Snyder looked at film of Cincinnati's five-point loss to Kansas, he said he was not going to overlook the Bearcats.

"I think they present a lot of problems to virtually anyone," Snyder said at his Tuesday press conference.

The Wildcats are coming off a 34-7 season-opening victory against Temple. But despite the score, Snyder said the Cats were a little rusty.

Quarterback Matt Miller went for 11-for-17 in his debut as a starter, with two touchdown passes and one rushing. Snyder did say, however, that there is room for improvement.

"What we do, we just need to do a little better," Snyder said. "We'll go back and clean up some of the mistakes."

Snyder said the defense will also have to make some improvements. The Cats allowed 270 yards of total offense to Temple, 221 yards through the air.

Temple's only score came on a 58-yard touchdown pass on the Owls' first snap of the season, embarrassing a Wildcat secondary ranked first in the nation in many preseason national college football previews.

"They nickeled and dimed us a bit," Snyder said. "We've got some things to shore up."

Snyder also said the Wildcat special-teams squad has some things to work on. The Cats' punt protection fell through early in the fourth quarter, and freshman James Garcia's punt was blocked in Wildcat territory.

"I would rather eat dirt than have that," Snyder said of the punt block.

The punt-return team also hurt its own cause with penalties that brought shortened some of Mitch Running's returns.

Linebacker Percell Gaskins said the special teams' penalties could have come back to hurt the Cats.

"We can't hurt ourselves like that," Gaskins said.

After the Saturday's Cincinnati game, the Cats will have their only off week of the season, to work even more on some of the areas which Snyder said concerned him.

The Cats will then return to action the following week at home against Akron.

But the concentration now for Snyder and the Cats is this weekend's trip to Cincinnati and the first road game of the season.

Ballots cast in NBA union battle

Associated Press

NEW YORK — NBA players turned out in large numbers Thursday to complete voting on the fate of their union, with opposing sides in the dispute optimistic about winning.

Players voted on union decertification at sites around the country, and the results are to be announced Tuesday.

The players were to decide whether to retain the National Basketball Players Association as their collective bargaining representative. A "yes" vote was considered a vote for a proposed labor deal that would increase the salary cap but close several existing loopholes.

NBA commissioner David Stern, who locked out players July 1, has said a "yes" vote is the only way to guarantee the season starting on time.

"A large turnout would suggest the players who favor the agreement and the union came out and voted for it," Simon Gourdine, the union's executive director, said.

The exact number of players voting — 423 were eligible — was unavailable, but NBA deputy commissioner Russ Granik said Thursday evening teams keeping tabs on the voting estimated a high turnout.

"We think something over 300 players will have voted when this is over, and maybe more," he said.

The group backing decertification was equally sure the vote would go its way.

"We're optimistic about the current state of the election," said Jeffrey Kessler, the lawyer representing Michael Jordan, Patrick Ewing and other players advocating decertification.

"Everything we're hearing indicates we're going to win this."

A simple majority is needed to decertify. Votes will be counted publicly at the National Labor Relations Board office in New York.

If players vote to retain the union, player representatives from each team will meet Sept. 13 to officially ratify the agreement. Twenty-one of the 27 reps must approve it.

Team owners then will vote, and their approval would end the lockout.

Patrick Ewing, along with Jordan, the leading advocate of abolishing the union, reiterated his claim that decertification, not a faulty labor agreement, is the best way to make sure no games are lost.

"We would rather the season start on time," he said after voting here. "But the NBA has locked us out. It's all in their hands. If anything happens (to the season), it should be blamed on the owners, not us."

Doc Rivers, the veteran guard who played for San Antonio last season, said the summer-long labor turmoil has jolted his colleagues out of their apathetic attitude toward contract negotiations.

"I know far more about labor laws than I thought I would have to know," he said.

"But I do know about them now, and it's probably good. It's probably too bad I just started learning about it. I think all of us as players should have known about this stuff for a year. It took this to get our attention, and that's too bad."

To encourage voting, the NBA offered to pay transportation costs for players to vote at any of the 47 sites across the country and in Puerto Rico.

The labor dispute moves into the courtroom Thursday, when U.S. district judge David Doty will hear motions on the antitrust suit against the NBA filed by Ewing, Jordan and 14 other players.

The players will ask Doty for a preliminary injunction ending the lockout.

No action is likely to be taken, however, until the outcome of the decertification vote is known.

The NLRB has asked the court to allow it to finish overseeing the election and determine whether the players' association can continue to represent players in collective bargaining.

Doty, the judge who presided at an antitrust case against the NFL that led to a labor deal with increased free agency and a salary cap, also will hear the NBA's motion to have the case transferred to New York.

TV nudity, profanity long overdue

What passes for TV entertainment these days makes no sense. The O.J. Simpson murder trial, for example, has been a pathetic bore and waste of satellite feed time.

Even so, it's an enormous cash cow. No matter what is going on in the world, CNN has live coverage of the case.

Congressional hearings on the Waco incident, the militias, the Whitewater land deal, the Randy Weaver tragedy and various GOP presidential campaign announcements have all been preempted by a mere double-murder trial in Los Angeles.

COLUMN

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

The best part of the O.J. Simpson coverage so far has been the language on the Mark Fuhrman tapes.

The racist and sexist epithets are boring — hey, they're in MTV videos all the time. I'm talking about cool words like "fuck," "shit" and "asshole" that litter the Fuhrman tapes.

Why are they cool? Because they're more realistic than anything else in the trial, and they represent the first use of realistic language on television I've ever heard.

Sure, the content of the tapes is completely despicable and Fuhrman ought to be given a gasoline enema. Even so, words like "fuck" and "shit" are long overdue on television, as is nudity.

Words like these go back a long way with me. As a child, I could never understand why my dad could say "asshole," but no one on TV could. After all, if dad could say it, why not William Shatner?

The ABC series "NYPD Blue" has done much to add a little real-life skin and tongue to television. Now the Simpson defense team and Fuhrman have paired up to bring profanity into living rooms around the world.

What doesn't belong is the kind of perfectly legal violence that is so common. I'm not advocating censorship. But networks should be a little more conscientious about the unpunished, fictitious violence they show.

Instead, they let the blood flow while they bleep the naughty words and naked people.

Here's a perfect example of the language/violence hypocrisy of television: On Monday morning, Turner Network Television ran the 1975 film "Jaws."

The film was edited for language, but scenes depicting children being eaten alive remained uncut. The scene in which a sailor is eaten bite by bite until he spits a mouthful of gore and dies was left uncut just as it was when I first saw it in a theater at 4 years old.

I can remember how shocked I was as a kid then. I wouldn't go near water, and to this day I really don't know how to swim. But I had to have a parent with me in order to see that movie in 1975.

Twenty years later, it's on television like some demented schoolbreak special.

No nasty goddamns were heard by those little kids. They just watched people die all morning. I called Turner Broadcasting Service and complained.

I'd much rather hear realistic profanity and see perfectly normal nudity on television than deal with the outrageous, gratuitous and unrealistic violence that is so

Cassie gives advice on roommate lamentations

Hey hey hey K-Staters! I have good news. I am back from vacation, and I know how your lives have been in disarray since the Collegianhas been without any advice or insight from me, the all knowing Cassie.

Dear Cassie,

Money and circumstances have forced a decision on me. I am going to either have to move into a dorm with a roommate, or find an off-campus apartment to share with someone.

Right now, I don't have any acquaintances who need a roommate.

So I am going to have to move in with someone I don't know- something I don't want to do, but I know I am going to have to.

The problem is, I am bisexual, and openly date other men and women. I don't have any problem with this, but I know that many people do, and this could lead to some severe roommate conflicts down the line.

My question is, should I choose a roommate who is male or female, or does it matter? (If I move into the dorms, this will not be a problem, since the dorms would force me to live with someone of the same sex.)

How should I go about interviewing potential roommates, and how should I broach this delicate subject?

Should I bring this up in the interview process, and risk being asked not to move in, or should I wait until the roomie and I have moved in together, and risk a falling out?

Signed,
Roommate Shopping

Dear Roommate Shopping,

I would definitely say the decisions that lie before you are forcing you to be torn in two directions my friend.

First and foremost you have to do what you are comfortable with. To live with Dick or to live with Jane is not the real question. It doesn't matter. What matters is the type of relationship you want to have with your roommate, which depends on the kind of person you are.

If you can live with a person on a daily basis and keep your relationship as mere strangers then I would say it is none of their damn business what you are doing in your personal life.

However, if you want a positive, open relationship (with hopes of becoming friends) I would have to say honesty is definitely the best policy.

This is the the only way to find a roommate who will help you make your new home a comfortable and healthy environment to live in; not to mention it may protect you in the long run from a roommate fallout or from rooming with someone who is prejudice against bisexuals.

Dear Cassie,

One of my roommates doesn't like to be bothered by telephone calls. She often refuses to answer the phone, leaving it for me to pick up.

When I complain, she tells me to "let it ring, since the answering machine will get it." But what if it is an important call for me?

And then, when I do answer it, she tells me not to tell the caller that she is home, even though she is.

Often, it's her parents to which I am having to lie! And then I end up having to take a message for her! Cassie, I am not an answering service!

I've told her again and again that it makes me uncomfortable to lie for her, but she keeps on insisting that I do it! What should I do?

Signed,
Tired of being a Secretary

Dear Secretary,

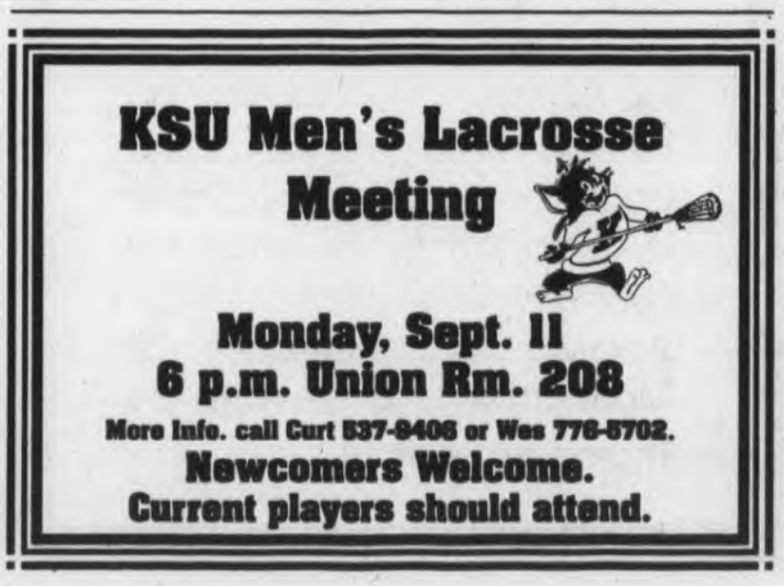
Who wouldn't get sick of playing the role of private secretary?



You are in the right to be frustrated and angry. Don't feel like you are being a bad friend if you don't do this silly task for your roommate. She has no right to make you do this or make you feel guilty for having to lie. In my opinion, friends shouldn't make friends lie.

Since you have already confronted her with the issue this is what I would do. I would answer the phone in case it is for you. If the call is for her, that is your choice whether your conscience will allow you to lie or not. But nevertheless, don't give her messages to her until she gets off her lazy butt or puts you on a payroll.

▶ SHUTTLE ENDEAVOUR

Shuttle blasts off after O-ring delay

Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Its flight delayed a month by O-ring trouble, Space Shuttle Endeavour thundered into orbit with five astronauts Thursday on a mission to release and recapture a pair of science satellites.

The 4.5 million-pound spaceship rose through thin clouds at the appointed hour, beating approaching storms.

O-ring seals in the nozzles of Endeavour's solid rocket boosters had to be fitted with new insulation last month after NASA discovered singe marks on the rings in two other shuttles. The Challenger disaster in 1986 was blamed on a leak of hot gas through a set of O-rings.

NASA officials said it will be days before they know whether the O-rings in Endeavour escaped heat damage during the dangerous climb to orbit.

The booster repairs, along with a power generator that overheated hours before a launch attempt last week, had held up the flight almost five weeks.

"Every dog has its day, and today is your day," Roger Gillette, a launch official, told the astronauts shortly before liftoff.

As soon as Endeavour reached orbit, commander David Walker said, "The dogs are in space."

Walker and his crew jokingly call themselves "The Dog Crew" for reasons that aren't entirely clear. They barked on the way to the launch pad and posed for breakfast pictures with personalized dog bowls.

Their first order of business is to release an $8 million satellite to study streams of charged particles hurtling away from the north pole of the sun at 500 miles a second. The satellite, called Spartan, will be set free on Friday and retrieved Sunday.

Then on Monday, the astronauts will release a $25-million, dish-shaped satellite to grow thin film for semiconductors. The crew will pick the satellite up two days later.

Scientists said they hope the ultra-pure vacuum created in the satellite's wake will produce film of unprecedented quality. The satellite could not be released from Space Shuttle Discovery last year because of a sensor and wiring problem.

Sept. 16, two astronauts will take a spacewalk to practice techniques and equipment for building an international space station. The 11-day flight will end Sept. 18.

Endeavour's mission — No. 71 for the shuttle program — was supposed to begin Aug. 5, but NASA put the flight on hold until the rocket boosters could be repaired.

NASA hopes to retrieve Endeavour's boosters as soon as possible from the Atlantic Ocean and send the nozzles to booster maker Thiokol Corp. in Utah for analysis.

Storms approached from the west as NASA quickly resolved equipment problems in the final minutes of the countdown. Some of the problems included a small hatch leak, slightly low pressure in a cooling unit and a faulty reading in the destruct system of the right solid rocket booster.

▶ UNIVERSITY OF RHODE ISLAND BANS ALCOHOL

SOUTH KINGSTOWN, R.I. — They can party 'til they drop at the University of Rhode Island — as long as it's without brewsky.

A week after it was named the nation's top party school by an annual guide, the University of Rhode Island banned alcohol at student events on campus Wednesday.

"More and more of our students are demanding that they not be imposed upon by others whose judgment and behavior is impaired by substance abuse. It is time to take a stand at URI," President Robert L. Carothers said in outlining the ban during an assembly.

Students who are 21 or older can have alcohol in their rooms, but there will be none allowed at fraternity parties, homecoming events and all other student activities, he said.

First offenders face fines of $30 to $50 and second offenders up to $100. A third offense will result in a two-semester suspension.

Some students said the ban was unnecessary and too sweeping.

"Drinking is part of a college experience," said Nathan Maine, a 23-year-old business major from West Greenwich.

The policy comes a week after URI, which has about 12,000 students in undergraduate and graduate programs, was named the top party school in the Princeton Review Student Access Guide to the Best 309 Colleges.

The paperback, which is put out by a New York publishing company and not affiliated with Princeton University, sends representatives to colleges to survey students and bases the guide on their responses.

URI officials stressed that the new policy is not a response to the ranking. They said the school has for years implemented programs and policies aimed at curbing alcohol use.

URI banned Thursday-night parties in 1988 and keg parties in 1990.

Classified Directory

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

INTERVIEW

Stunkel said the interview process for a new manager has been very rewarding, and she is pleased with the candor from both the city commissioners and the candidates.

The city is sponsoring a city manager candidate reception at 5:30 p.m. Friday at the Manhattan Headquarters Fire Station so the community members can meet the candidates.

Five of the six candidates will be present to answer questions at the reception. One candidate will not be present.

"We wanted to make sure the public had a chance to meet the candidates before we made the final decision," Stunkel said.

She said community members' opinions could have an effect on the commissioners' final decision for city manager. Stunkel said she is looking forward to community feedback.

"It's really hard to judge a person on paper so I'm really looking forward to meeting them in person," Stunkel said.

Commissioner Bruce Snead said he will welcome community feedback at the reception and take into consideration other recommendations.

The Paul A. Reaume Group from the Chicago area was hired by the city to help with candidate recruitment and the screening process.

The PAR Group told commissioners it had more than 300 inquiries about the position and about 90 official applicants.

The PAR Group narrowed the applicants down to 16 before giving the applicants' names to the city. The city narrowed the PAR Group's selection down to the final six candidates.

BILLS

to the Legal Services Advisory Board was held for clarification.

The bills to change the constitution and the by-laws regarding the selection of the student attorney general were referred to committee for another week.

Two bills were up for first readings and will be voted on next week.

The first bill would revise the by-laws to change the date of the Student Governing Association elections to two weeks before spring break. Senate passed a bill last year to move the election, but the bill's enactment clause was unconstitutional.

The SGA constitution says there has to be a year buffer between passage of the revision and the change in the election date because it would shorten a term.

The first election that would be at the early date will be in spring 1997.

The second bill would change the name of the State and Community Affairs Committee to the Government Relations Committee.

NOTES

Varney's Book Store to quit housing the concession.

But she said the University's Entrepreneurs Club has agreed to sponsor the business, which means it will meet requirements to hand out advertisements on campus.

Still, Trulson said she considers the faculty her biggest obstacle.

"We're hopeful that the professors will accept us," she said.

Some professors said the note-taking business turned out a product of questionable quality that could discourage students from learning to take notes and tempt them to skip class.

They also said the business amounted to theft of intellectual property — and Richard Seaton, the University lawyer, has recommended that professors label their lecture material as copyrighted.

John McCulloh, professor of history, said he was furious when he first heard people were handing out fliers advertising the service for his class. His anger subsided when he talked to Trulson, but he said he still questions whether the service helps or hinders students.

President Jon Wefald said he fears too many students could use the service as an excuse not to learn note-taking, a process that he said involves critical thinking and summarizing.

James Rhatigan, vice president of student affairs at Wichita State University, where note-taking services have not done well, agreed with Wefald.

"The best way to a non-education is to use the notes of someone else," he said.

Some students, however, said Jon's Notes are helpful to supplement their own note-taking.

Melissa Marmon, junior in interior design, said she subscribed to the service for McCulloh's class and used them to fill gaps in her own notes. She said McCulloh presented a lot of material in a short amount of time and it was difficult to keep up.

Trulson said she hired only students enrolled in classes for which they took notes. They were paid $10 to $15 per lecture. The service charged $29.50 a semester for a set of notes.

The note service was started 11 years ago by Jon Donlan, then a high school senior who had difficulty taking notes and following lectures at the same time. Donlan, who was a hemophiliac, died last year — and the business is now operated by his brother-in-law, Matt Rye.

Rye said some professors on every campus oppose note-taking for hire. But he said he had never encountered the kind of opposition that he did at K-State.

News Digest

COUPLE NURSES 80 SICK PUPPIES TO HEALTH

AUBURN, N.H.— A couple is nursing nearly 80 sick puppies back to health that were mysteriously dropped off at their home.

Candy Wetherbee had agreed to care for only 15 sick puppies at Beau Meadow Farm, a small kennel she runs with her husband. The dogs came from a couple who have more than 150 dogs and 30 cats at their own kennel.

But a day after Wetherbee picked them up, three more van loads of puppies appeared. They were dropped off Sunday by a group who called itself Upper Valley Rescue, which police say does not exist and has not been heard from since.

The Wetherbees didn't have the heart to turn the Irish setter and cocker spaniel pups away. They estimate it will cost $4,000 to feed the dogs and treat them for ringworm, eye and ear infections and fleas. The dogs will be sold for $200 each.

"I want to get them healthy ... and get them placed," Wetherbee said Wednesday.

Finding homes for the dogs shouldn't be a problem. Scores of people have called the Wetherbees or stopped by to ask about taking one.

"They are like babies," said Debbie McGrath, who drove an hour to see about buying a puppy.

It's called Purple Pride, and it offers 24 pages of in-depth coverage of the Cats.

PURPLE PRIDE

Purple Pride is available at Mini Mart, Varney's, the Union Information Counter and 103 Kedzie. Also, a one-year subscription — 24 issues by mail — is just $33. Come by 103 Kedzie, or call 532-6555, for more information.

Be an informed Wildcat fan.
It's a matter of pride. Purple Pride.

■ Mid Autumn festival brings Chinese tradition to Manhattan

Children danced, and old friends were reunited at the Mid Autumn Festival Sunday night.

More than 250 people celebrated the Chinese tradition that was sponsored by the Chinese Student and Scholar Association in CiCo Park.

Faculty, students and their families began the evening with a traditional Chinese meal, followed by a talent show with singing and dancing.

Children also played a part in the festival with a fashion show, and the evening ended with a dance.

Wei Xu, president of the Chinese Student and Scholar Association, said the Mid Autumn Festival is the second-most important festival in China. It's a time when people come back to the home to celebrate.

"If a member of the family is separated because of their job or maybe a different reason, they will come together with their family," Xu said.

Xu said the Mid Autumn Festival is 3,000 years old in China and has been celebrated at K-State since Chinese students began attending the University.

"Once Chinese people came here, we began this festival here," Xu said.

Angela West, assistant professor in marketing, had never been to the festival before. West said a colleague told her about the festival.

"I love Chinese food," West said. "This is very interesting."

Yan Cho, senior in physics, has attended the Mid Autumn Festival for five years. Cho said his favorite parts of the festival are the music and dancing.

"Because I am a senior, I don't know many newcomers," Cho said.

Xu said there are about 200 hundred Chinese people from the mainland of China who attend K-State each year.

The Chinese Student and Scholar Association also shows movies, videos and organizes various activities throughout the year.

"We promote friendship between Chinese people and the local American society," Xu said.

▶ CITY MANAGER

City offers job, awaits response

Cori Cornelison
staff reporter

City commissioners made an offer to one of the six city manager candidates Saturday and are waiting for a reply.

Gary Greer, city manager of Kearney, Neb., was chosen after three interviews Saturday.

Greer, 33, received his undergraduate degree from Park College and his masters of public administration from the University of Kansas. He has worked in Kearney as assistant city manager and city manager for 10 years.

Greer said he is seriously considering the offer made by the city and is waiting for an agreement to be drawn up so he can review the terms.

Kearney, in south-central Nebraska, has a population of about 25,000 and a total revenue of $33 million. Manhattan has a population of about 42,000 and a total revenue of $47 million.

Greer said he thinks it will be an easy transition from Kearney to Manhattan despite the increased revenue and population.

"I think the skills I've learned in Kearney will translate very well in Manhattan," he said.

Exports, jobs focus of Glickman speech

Sarah Kallenbach

Trade issues dominated U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Dan Glickman's speech Friday.

An overflow audience listened to Glickman's concerns about free trade and the 1995 Farm Bill at the 102nd Landon Lecture in McCain Auditorium.

Glickman

The growth of trade is important to Americans because it means a higher standard of living, Glickman said.

In the past 25 years, world trade has increased substantially. Agricultural exports are predicted to reach $53 billion this year — an increase of $9 million.

The increased exports translated into jobs for Americans, Glickman said.

Nigerian fraud found locally

Nikola Zytkow
staff writer

This is the first part in a series of stories on questionable business practices.

Last week, a Manhattan resident received a letter from a Nigerian company promising him more than $11 million in exchange for his bank account number.

Ronald Baker, 421 Colorado St., was one of two reported Manhattan recipients of this letter from a company that has cheated businesses, churches and individuals worldwide out of $200 million since the early 1990s, according to an Associated Press report.

"Individuals using a variety of names have professed to being current or past employees of the Nigerian government," said Max Geiman, special agent and spokesperson for the Kansas City office of the FBI.

The Nigerian government denies any involvement, according to the Associated Press.

The Kansas City FBI has been receiving complaints about these letters for the past several years, Geiman said.

Geiman said the perpetrators insinuate in most of the letters that they obtained large quantities of money illegally, either through embezzlement or fraud.

They promise to share a percentage of their fortune with those willing to help them remove this money from their Nigerian bank accounts and transfer the funds to the United States.

"They are attempting to learn individual bank accounts and other financial information," Geiman said, adding that sometimes they request people wire them good-faith money before they can receive their share of the millions.

The letter to Baker was signed by Dr. John Dada, who claimed to be with a company called Pipelines and Products Marketing Company Limited, as well as a top official with the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation.

In the letter, he implied his company had embezzled $38.5 million and promised Baker 30 percent of this money if he helped the company transfer the funds to the United States.

"The letter said they got my name from the Chamber of Commerce," Baker said. "I'm not a member of a Chamber of Commerce."

Geiman said most scams usually target businesses. They say they are looking for stable and respectable banks to transfer their money to, and they offer various businesses a fee to help them launder the money.

Baker said he doesn't understand why the letter was sent to him.

"The only thing I can think of is that I deposited a large sum of money into my savings account a couple of months ago," Baker said. "I wondered if they're watching bank accounts."

Baker was not asked to send any money up front. But he was asked to fax the company his bank account numbers, his private telephone and

The K-State Student Union was buzzing with free food, information and plenty of students Sunday afternoon.

More than 112 booths were set up at the 34th annual Activities Carnival to let students know what clubs are available for them.

"Well, it definitely informs you about all the different activities K-State has to offer," Nicki Zimmerman, sophomore in business and communications, said.

Zimmerman picked up some pamphlets about studying abroad while she visited the carnival. She said she has always wanted to travel overseas.

Down a few booths from the study abroad information, the women's lacrosse team received more than 20 new interested signatures.

Emily Brink, senior in kinesiology and pre-physical therapy, said more people than usual signed up for the lacrosse team this year.

Almost 60 people signed up for the Wildlife Society, said Ryan Mollnow, senior in wildlife biology and fisheries biology.

"'Course, we always get a pretty good turnout," he said.

Mollnow, president of the society, said the organization educates people on wildlife by using speakers and educational trips. All

▶ COLLEGIAN REPORTER TRICKED INTO PULLING OVER, ASSAULTED ON I-70

A K-State student was assaulted, battered and mugged Friday 20 miles east of Manhattan on Interstate 70.

Todd Stewart, sophomore in journalism and mass communications and assistant sports editor for the K-State Collegian, was en route to cover the K-State vs. Cincinnati football game when he noticed a car had been following him. The maroon coupe-like car pulled alongside his. The driver of the car held up a badge and motioned for Stewart to pull over.

"I thought it was an off-duty police officer giving me a warning for going too fast," Stewart said. "It was 8:30 in the morning. I took it for what it was worth."

The man approached Stewart's car calmly and asked to see a driver's license.

While retrieving his wallet, Stewart saw the man's arm moving toward him. Stewart was struck in the back of the head and lost consciousness.

When he regained consciousness at 1:30 p.m., Stewart noticed his wallet was strewn over the dashboard. Approximately $80 in cash was taken, though his credit cards and a Macintosh laptop computer remained in full sight.

Though Stewart was in extreme pain and had blurred vision, he drove a couple of miles on the shoulder of I-70 at 25 mph until finding a rest area.

Concerned with the possibility of missing his flight, Stewart called the K-State Collegian sports editor.

Dan Lewerenz, senior in philosophy and American ethnic studies, said he became worried and drove to meet Stewart. He then called 911.

Stewart, who has experienced constant headaches, nausea and slowed hand-eye coordination since the attack, said he thinks people might not understand the severity of what happened.

"Everyone's telling me that I'm pretty lucky, that it could have been worse," Stewart said. "I think more than anything it's been an emotional challenge for me in the last couple days. I can remember his face so clear. I keep thinking I see it when I don't, of course. I've even dreamt about it."

The suspect, described as around 30 years old, 6 feet tall, 180 pounds, with short brown hair and a mustache, was last seen wearing loose black pants and a navy-blue T-shirt.

Stewart, who sought medical treatment at the Saint Mary Hospital the evening of the assault, said couldn't understand why he was targeted.

"I guess maybe because I was going quickly, I was by myself, and I was young," Stewart said.

▶ ACTRESS TO RAISE STUDENTS' AWARENESS OF SAFE SEX, DISEASES

A provocative, outrageous and educational program designed to challenge college student's attitudes and perceptions of sex is to be presented at 7 p.m. Tuesday in K-State Student Union Forum Hall.

Lisa Kushell, comic and actress, will present "Hot, Sexy and Safer" to raise awareness about acquired immune deficiency syndrome, sexually transmitted diseases and safer sex.

Kushell has worked with AIDS and senior-citizens' organizations in the Los Angeles area.

Her comedy career began as a member of Upstage Comedy at age 15. She later joined the Acme Comedy Theatre, appeared in on "Dream On" and several movies of the week, such as "Battle of Wounded Knee."

The program is sponsored by the Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas Committee, Lafene Health Center and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

▶ GRAVES OPPOSES INCREASE IN SPEED LIMIT FOR KANSAS HIGHWAYS

TOPEKA (AP) — Gov. Bill Graves remains skeptical about increasing the speed limit on state highways.

A U.S. House committee has endorsed a proposal to allow states to determine speed limits rather than have the federal government impose a limit of 55 mph on a majority of the highways. The Senate has already approved the idea.

Graves said Friday he agrees states should make such decisions. But he is not sure Kansans will end up seeing the speed limit, which is already 65 mph on interstates, increased on many roads.

"I happen to think for the most part, 65 has served us well on our interstates, and 55 has served us well also on many of our two-lane, non-interstate roads," he said during a Statehouse news conference.

Police reports

Reports are taken directly from the daily logs of the campus and Riley County police departments. Because of space constraints, we do not list wheellocks, calls for escorts or minor traffic violations.

KSU POLICE DEPARTMENT

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9

At 12:43 a.m., a Riley County police officer coming through Lot D-1 observed a vehicle hit another parked vehicle and drive off. The officer stopped the vehicle and contacted the K-State Police Department because the incident was on state property. The driver was arrested for driving under the influence and was transported to the Riley County Jail.

At 3:55 a.m., Jason L. Johnson was arrested in the 1800 block of Claflin Road. An officer suspecting a DUI tested Johnson and found he was over the legal limit. Johnson was taken to the Riley County Jail.

At 11:55 p.m., an officer stopped a vehicle for a traffic violation in a lot adjacent to D-1. The officer saw an open container and found driver William R. Heinecke to be underage. A DUI and minor in possession report was filed.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 10

At 2:50 a.m., a staff member at Haymaker Hall requested that the fire department be dispatched to Haymaker for a fire and smoke. Officers discovered that someone had set off a fire extinguisher in the B wing, third floor. A criminal damage to property report was filed.

At 4:02 a.m., Dixie Theurer was arrested for a DUI at Claflin Road and Mid Campus Drive.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 8

At 1:04 p.m., James C. Clark of 132 6th St., Ogden, was arrested in the 300 block of Riley Street for a DUI. He was released on a $500 bond.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9

At 1:15 a.m., Kenneth Wilson of 3509 Minton's Landing was arrested at 2300 Anderson Ave. for DUI.

At 2:26 a.m., Hosue Negron of 422 Haymaker Hall was arrested for DUI at 1530 College Heights.

At 2:47 a.m., Shawn Williams of 925 Gardenway was arrested for DUI after an accident in the Gardenway area.

At 6:51 a.m., Donald R. Currey of 1712 Poyntz Ave. reported a radar detector and insurance card had been taken from his car.

Special Olympians bowl at the Union

James Dierking
staff reporter

More than 200 athletes and volunteers spent Saturday morning competing and sharing with one another at the area Special Olympics bowling tournament at the K-State Student Union.

Special Olympics allows people to compete in events regardless of their physical or mental limitations.

"This is a time for them to shine," Lindy Loveridge, junior in art therapy, said. Loveridge volunteered as a lane assistant for the event.

Bowlers from Riley, Geary, Marshall, Washington, Nemaha and Clay counties competed for a chance to advance to state competition.

Athletes are divided according to gender, age and bowling average.

Ramps for the bowling balls, gutter guards and special equipment are used to ensure that all participants have a chance to compete regardless of their limitations.

"Right now we have 110 actually bowling, and with 16 lanes, we have 31 divisions," Karen Mall, area training director, said.

Volunteers from K-State, Fort Riley and other community organizations helped as lane assistants, scorekeepers and announcers.

"We're very fortunate to have a good core group with the University and the military," Cathy Waugh, director of volunteers, said.

"We have a good group of young, energetic people who are here for us," she said.

Waugh said more than half the volunteers were repeat workers who had helped with Special Olympics before.

"I got involved mostly because one of my friends asked me to help out, and I've been hooked ever since," Waugh said. "It's one of those things that once you do, you just want to do again."

Volunteers Saturday included representatives from Farm Bureau Insurance, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints student organization and Manhattan Kiwanis.

"It's really a learning experience. It helps me look at myself and be grateful for what I have," Nicole Nelson, sophomore in dietetics and volunteer, said. "You really come to admire these folks."

Nelson was a repeat volunteer who worked at the Special Olympics track meet this spring.

VOLUNTEERING

- People who would like to volunteer to assist with Special Olympics can call 1-800-444-9803.

"I was excited about coming today. It's great to be around people who don't complain about anything," Nelson said.

Volunteers work one-on-one with participants, helping them and sharing in their accomplishments.

"I was watching one girl, and her eyes were just glowing," Loveridge said. "When she gets no points, she'll be just as happy as if she gets a strike."

Workers become close to the bowlers they assist and form relationships with them.

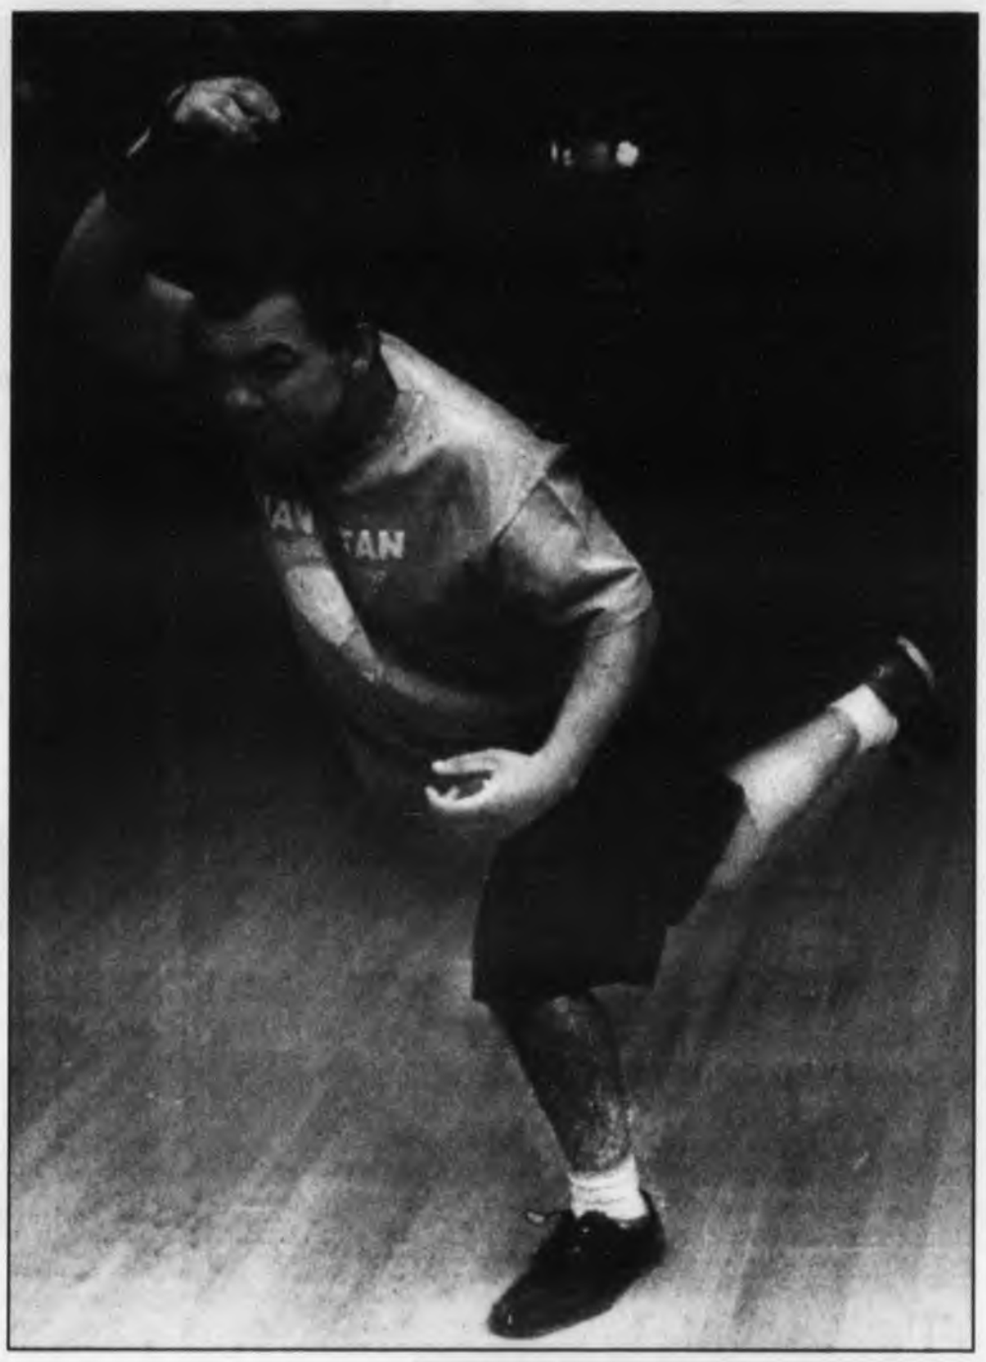
"There's one girl on my team who's more withdrawn than the others. I was leaving to get a drink when she came up to me and was really upset because she thought I was leaving," Loveridge said. "That kind of hit me down inside."

Even employees of the bowling alley become close to the bowlers.

The K-State Union Recreation Area is host to the annual tournament and allows the Manhattan team to practice there on a weekly basis.

"These people are always happy and always easy to please. They're fantastic. They come in and have a good time every time," Terri Eddy, recreation manager, said.

"I'll go down to the mall or the grocery store, and they'll know me and yell across the store at me," she said.



"I know all of their faces, and of course, we know all of their shoe sizes," Eddy said.

Bowlers with top scores in their divisions will advance to the state competition held in Salina in late October.

Special Olympics annually sponsors the bowling tournament in the fall and the track meet in the spring.

Students beware of shady con artists' scams

Scams can be perpetrated over the phone, in the mail, or in the classified advertisements of numerous publications.

Con artists never seem to be at a loss for coming up with new schemes to scam college students.

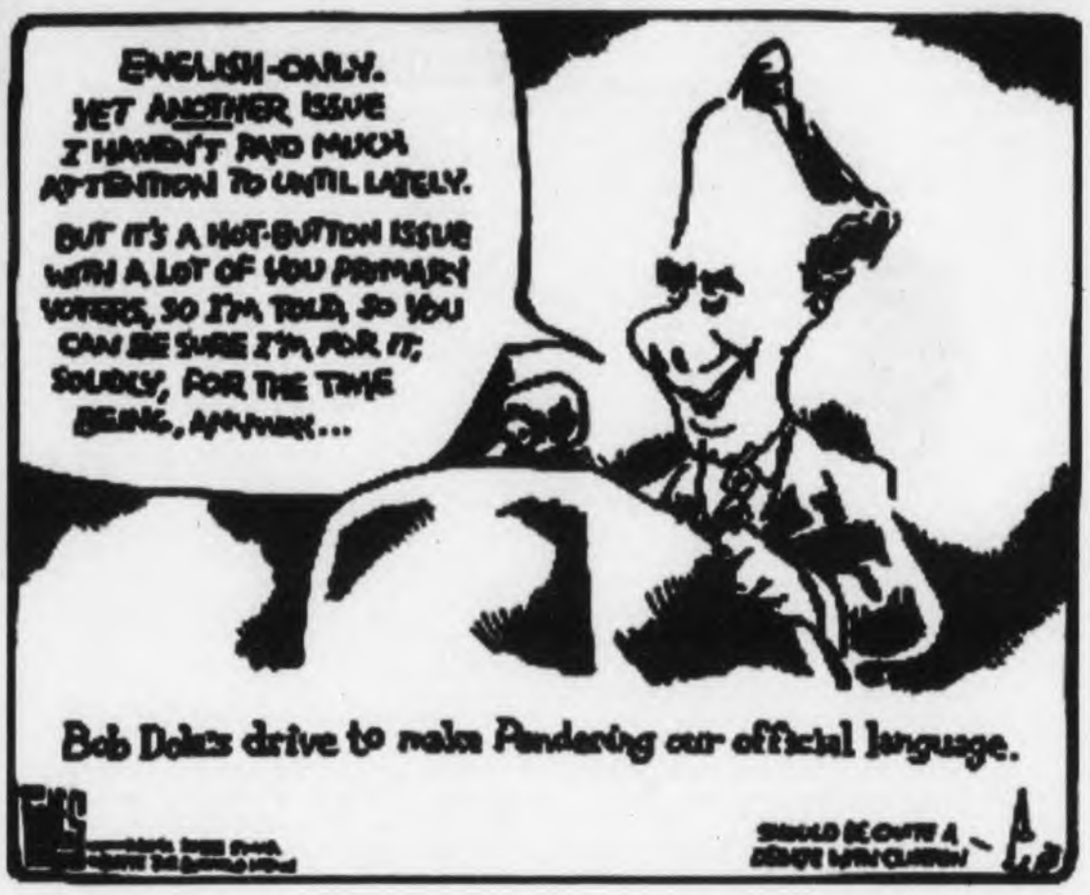
This might be due in part to the fact that although students have been thrust into the real world and are forced to manage their own lives, they might lack the financial savvy to recognize certain money deals for the scams that they are.

Scams can be perpetrated over the phone, in the mail or in the classified advertisements of numerous publications.

Even the Collegian classified ads are not impervious to deals and opportunities that are less than legitimate.

Although the Collegian staff would like to be able to check the background of every ad that appears in our classified section, the harsh reality is that time and resources does not permit this kind of in-depth research.

If any students have been the victims of scams that have been perpetrated in the Collegian, please accept our apologies and inform us of the ad in question so appropriate action can be taken.



Students can take precautions to prevent themselves from becoming victims.

The easiest way is to contact the Better Business Bureau in Topeka at (913) 232-0454 or the Office of Consumer and Tenant Affairs at 532-6541.

Students should also be wary of any offer that requests they give out a credit-card or bank-account number. This should be an immediate warning signal.

Perhaps the easiest rule to keep in mind is that if it sounds to good to be true, then it probably is.

LesBiGayTrans with conservative views need respect for courage

Gay Republicans? Isn't that an oxymoron?

Bob Dole's recent decision to return a donation that his campaign had solicited from the Log Cabin Club has brought to the public eye a debate that has been brewing under the surface for some time now in the LesBiGayTrans communities. The Log Cabin Club is a group of moderate-to-conservative homosexual Republicans, and this debate focuses on the presence within our ranks of gay Republicans.

Many LesBiGayTrans people in this very community don't like to admit that there are a growing number of gays who are Republican and are beginning to speak openly about it.

LesBiGayTrans people who happen to have conservative views are doubly attacked from the right- and left-conservatives who attack them for their "immoral lifestyle" and liberals who attack them as "Uncle Toms" who are giving aid and comfort to the enemy.

As a moderate-independent, I do not subscribe to either of these points of view. The Log Cabin Club is an asset, both to the LesBiGayTrans movement and to the Republican party.

There is no denying that there is strong anti-homosexual sentiment in the Republican party. But to characterize the Republican party as "The Enemy" of LesBiGayTrans people is both inaccurate and unfair to those many moderate Republicans who support us and our issues.

True conservatives believe in limited government interference in peoples' private lives, unlike the hateful anti-gay rhetoric that has been coming out of the far right lately.

KEVYN JACOBS

To insist that conservative-to-moderate homosexuals should chuck their principles and join the Democratic party is absurd.

It is the height of arrogance to insist that the Democratic party has a lock on what is best for the United States, on a par with the far-right idea that Christians have a lock on the nature of God.

Both of these ideas fly in the face of the principle of humility and the spirit of compromise and contribute to the growing polarization of our communities.

I didn't always feel this way, mind you. I learned a hard lesson about gay Republicans and blind faith in Democrats after Bill Clinton betrayed the LesBiGayTrans communities in 1993 with the military's "Don't ask, don't tell" policy.

I had been an enthusiastic Clinton supporter in the 1992 campaign, euphoric that a presidential candidate would court my community so stridently.

Now, you couldn't pay me enough to vote for the spineless jellyfish.

That is not to say that I would vote Republican myself — I think the Republican party is at least as flawed as the Democratic one. I am most certainly part of that large centrist majority that would eagerly vote for a third-party independent in the 1996 election, just to send a message to the idiots who are running the two major parties.

But the change in my thinking came soon after the 1992 presidential campaign, when an openly gay friend of mine admitted to me he had voted for George Bush.

I was floored.

"How," I exclaimed, exasperated, "could a VERY openly gay, HIV-positive man vote for George Bush? The ENEMY? How could someone I admired and respected so much be so stupid?"

My friend had heard this reaction before. He patiently explained to me that yes, while he felt Clinton would have been the best candidate for the LesBiGayTrans communities, Bush would have been the best candidate for the country.

He was a life-long Republican and refused to be a one-issue voter, just because he was gay. Mind you, I still don't agree with his sentiments about Bush being the best all-around candidate, but I have to respect his opinion.

His opinion is just as valid as mine, and I might just be wrong. That's the democratic process at work.

That's when Republicans stopped being "The Enemy" to me, and I started becoming a supporter of the Log Cabin Club. For while I don't always agree with the LCC's aims or goals, I do have to respect the fact that they want to remain true to their core beliefs and are unwilling to compromise their principles just because of their sexuality.

I also have to sincerely admire someone who has the courage to come out as homosexual in a hostile environment, and there are few environments more hostile than the Republican party these days. Coming out changes those around you for the better, and the LCC is doing just that in the GOP.

So if you are a liberal who despises the Log Cabiners, please remember this: True change can only come from within, not from without.

The Log Cabin Club, with its cadre of conservative, mostly European-descended button-down-shirt crowd, has a far better chance of affecting change within the GOP than any number of scruffy, loud, protesting progressives will. You work on your side of the fence where those tactics are effective — and let them work on theirs.

And if you are conservative and think the Log Cabiners have no place within the Republican party or the mainstream, just remember the queer mantra: "We are everywhere." Like it or not, everywhere includes the Republican party. Get used to it.

Renters responsible for SECURITY DEPOSITS

Security deposits are a significant portion of a student's living expenses. An understanding of what these deposits entail is essential to a renter.

A landlord can require a tenant to pay a security deposit. The deposit is usually required to offset the landlord's cost of repairing any property damage caused by the tenant, such as a broken window or a hole in the wall.

The Kansas Residential Landlord Tenant Act is a series of statues that deal with residential rental properties. The Landlord Tenant Act does not cover living environments such as fraternal or social organizations (i.e., greek houses).

The maximum security deposit that a landlord may require is 1-1/2 month's rent for an unfurnished apartment (with an additional one-half month's rent for a pet deposit) — Kansas statute, K.S.A. 58-2550 (a).

A landlord is not required to pay interest on the security deposit. I don't know of any landlords who do pay interest on security deposits.

COLUMN

SCOTT SMITH

■ Inventory or inspection?

To avoid any deductions from the security deposit for damages existing before the beginning of the tenancy, the tenant should inventory the condition of the unit within five days of the date of occupancy.

The inventory should be very specific and detailed and even include a video and/or pictures of the unit.

Inventory forms are available in the Office of Consumer and Tenant Affairs in the K-State Student Union.

> "The Kansas Residential Landlord Tenant Act is a series of statutes that deal with residential rental properties."
> SCOTT SMITH

The landlord or an agent and the tenant should jointly inventory the unit, and the landlord and the tenant should each receive a signed, dated inventory form.

If the landlord does not cooperate, the tenant should inventory the unit with an uninterested third party and keep one signed, dated copy and deliver or mail by certified mail a second copy to the landlord — K.S.A. 58-2548.

■ Time to move out.

A "check-out" inspection should be set up by the tenant to walk through the unit with the landlord.

All notices and requests to the landlord should be in writing. The security deposit can be used by the landlord for any unpaid rent, damages to the unit or other damages caused by tenant's noncompliance with the lease.

The tenant's liability for physical damages usually is stated as damages beyond "normal wear and tear." Ask the landlord to have "normal wear and tear" defined in the lease, along with any procedures, such as carpet cleaning or fumigating, that are charged to the tenants when they leave.

> "The maximum security deposit that a landlord may require is 1-1/2 month's rent for an unfurnished apartment (with an additional one-half month's rent for a pet deposit) – Kansas statute, K.S.A. 58-2550(a)."
> SCOTT SMITH

If the landlord retains any of the deposit, the landlord is required to itemize the deductions in a written notice to the tenant and return it with the remainder of the deposit within 14 days after the determination of the amount of charges.

But, in any event, it should be returned no later than 30 days after termination, delivery of possession and demand by the tenant.

Even if no demand is made by the tenant, the landlord is still required to send the refund and/or itemized deductions to the tenant's last-known address — K.S.A. 58-2550 (b).

If the unused portion of the security deposit is not returned in 30 days, or if too much of the deposit is withheld, or there is no itemized statement of the deductions, the tenant is entitled to recover the amount wrongfully withheld plus damages of 1-1/2 times that amount — K.S.A. 58-2550 (c).

According to Love v. Monarch Apartments, 13 K.A. 2d 341 (1989), if at trial the tenant recovers part or all the security deposit from the landlord, the trial court MUST award damages in an amount of equal to 1-1/2 times the amount of the security deposit recovered.

A copy of the Tenant's Handbook of Rights and Responsibilities (6th Edition, 1995) can be purchased at the Union Copy Center.

This is a valuable source of information for those students living off campus.

If you have any landlord/tenant problems or questions, please do not hesitate to contact me at the Office of Consumer and Tenant Affairs in the Union (532-6541).

▶ RELATIVISM IN U.S.

Editor,

I am quite puzzled by Jeremy Stephens' article on relativism. I commend him for placing this issue on the table; however, he has not provided an accurate assessment of this issue.

There are many points I wish to make, but I would like to focus on the issue of relativism in the United States.

I think one would be mistaken in believing that relativism is a new concept to this country. We live in a country based on democracy. Democracy is itself a relative concept. Through the democratic process, we as citizens are capable of deciding what is right or wrong.

This country was also founded on the idea of separation of church and state. If this were not true, then we would live in an authoritarian or totalitarian religious state. This allows for the division between an absolute morality and a relative democratic process.

God's morality has seldom done much for the rights of minorities, especially women. Through the democratic process, we have witnessed tremendous achievements in the efflorescence of humankind.

My point is simple: Relativism allows for the better understanding of "right and wrong," while absolutism is a dictator preaching from a limited perspective.

▶ T.V. NEEDS CHOICES

Editor,

This is in response to Scott Allen Miller's column Friday about profanity and nudity on television being "long overdue."

Movies, as well as TV shows, have changed their content drastically since the days of "Leave It To Beaver." However, over the years, gunfights to preserve justice and protect the helpless have transformed into scenes of senseless, glorified killing. As our gullible society accepted each gradual increase in the intensity of violence, our idea of what was iniquitous and what wasn't became blurred.

MTV is arguably the most explicit and controversial entertainment source there is today. Miller made a reference to MTV like it was the norm, saying that racial and sexist remarks "are boring — hey, they're on MTV videos all the time." I'm sorry Miller, but MTV doesn't justify what is correct or appropriate for society.

This egotistical attitude of television showing what it wants is what Miller was advocating in his article. I believe people should have a choice in how much they have to put up with (including reading the Collegian).

One should be able to watch and read what they want without feeling insulted or bombarded with impertinent comments attacking their morals.

Balanced diet important for students

Robert Patnode
staff reporter

The fast-paced life of a student often demands jumping from bed to class to the next party, and keeping up with normal eating habits can be as hectic as finding time to sleep.

When planning meals, students should eat three meals a day and snack regularly, Jami Breault, dietitian at Lafene Health Center, said.

"Eating small meals helps keep your metabolism up and keeps it going all day," Breault said. "A lot of it depends on a person's height, weight and age.

"When you do snack, keep it simple. A good snack would be fresh fruits and vegetables — something that's easy," Breault said.

The Food Guide Pyramid is a good nutrition guide to follow, Breault said.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture created the Food Guide Pyramid to assist consumers in maintaining a balanced meal.

According to the pyramid, students should eat high amounts of bread, cereal, rice and pastas and low amounts of fats, oils and sweets.

"The Food Guide Pyramid is the best based on research studies," Dianna Schalles, K-State dietetics instructor, said.

When shopping at grocery stores, students should have a list, watch out for promotions and read labels, Schalles said.

"You need to be your own detective. Watch out for the end of aisles. That's where the promotional things are located. They try to catch the consumer's impulse. Have your list and try to stick with it," he said.

Students should also watch the labels for grams of fat, saturated-fat content and tropical oils.

Breault said students should try to buy fresh and frozen vegetables and avoid canned foods.

"Canned vegetables have a higher amount of sodium, so try to stick with frozen or fresh vegetables," Breault said.

The option of eating fast food can provide a quick meal with quick calories, but most fast-food restaurants do provide healthy meals.

"I think most fast-food restaurants have really come a long way in providing lower-fat, healthier options," Schalles said. "You need to watch the toppings, preparation method and make sure it's not fat-fried."

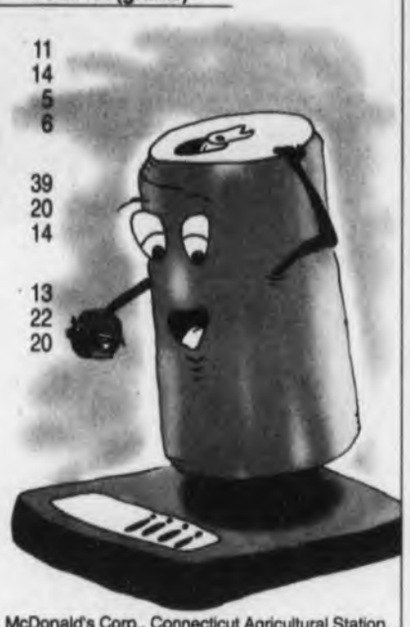
Side salads, baked potatoes, plain hamburgers and grilled-chicken sandwiches are some of the healthier items fast-food restaurants are now offering, Breault said.

"Healthy foods such as salads, broiled and grilled sandwiches have become popular selections," Scott Easton, assistant manager of Burger King, said.

"Placing healthy foods on our menu was intentionally done to meet customer requests," he said.

Restaurants can also offer too many choices for the customers.

"The problem we run into with all these healthy foods is sometimes we get too many choices for our customers to make," Easton said.



Besides eating fats, oils and sweets in moderation, students ought to watch alcohol consumption, Breault said.

"It's all right to drink, but try to in moderation."

Warming due to humans, burning of fossil fuels

Associated Press

NEW YORK — A U.N. scientific panel on climate change is now convinced global temperatures have warmed during the last century because of human activity, the New York Times reported Sunday.

The statement marks a shift in the views of top climatologists, who had previously said they could not tell whether global warming has been caused by the burning of fossil fuels or natural climatic variations.

The experts now say a new generation of computer studies has given them confidence in data that suggests why the globe's surface temperature has risen by 1 degree Fahrenheit since 1900, the Times reported.

The panel's summary said global warming is unlikely to be entirely due to natural causes and that a pattern of climatic response to human activities is identifiable in the climatological record.

Scientific data now proves that the burning of wood, oil and coal, which releases carbon monoxide into the air, is at least partly responsible for the so-called greenhouse effect, or warming of the earth's atmosphere, said Tom M.L. Wigley, a climatologist at the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colo., one of the report's authors.

■ Winners advance to Arrowhead stadium

Rich Pefley

Sixty-six Manhattan youth participated in the Gatorade/NFL Punt, Pass and Kick competition Saturday at KSU Stadium.

Boys and girls ages 8-15 competed against their own age divisions punting, passing and kicking footballs across the stadium.

"I was ready," Kyle Owen said. "I was kind of expecting to win."

Owen, a three-time winner, said he had been practicing for about two weeks. This year, he claimed the 13-year-old title with a total of 265 feet, 6 inches.

> "I was ready. I was kind of expecting to win."
> KYLE OWEN
> 13-YEAR-OLD WINNER

Winners were determined by the total distance and accuracy of their punts, passes and kicks against competitors in their own age division.

In the 8-year-old division, John McVey won scoring a total of 154'9". Mathieu Gilliland won the 9-year-old division with a total of 153'6". The 10-year-old winner was Cody Sidesinger with a total of 177'8".

Matt Schwandt claimed the top spot among the 11-year-old competitors with 257'8". In the 12-year old division, Christopher Magua ran away winning with a total of 252'4".

No 14-year-olds competed, but 15-year-old Brandon Leonard won that division with a total of 235'10.

Magua said he only started practicing a couple days ago, but Owen helped him out a lot.

"He showed me how to hold the ball to punt," Magua said.

The winners in each division will compete in the sectional competition. The top five finishers in each age group from the pool of sectional competition champions will advance to the team championship event staged at halftime of a Kansas City Chiefs game.

The top four team championship scorers in each age group from the pool of team champions will advance to the National Finals at a postseason NFL game on NBC.

Manhattan's competition was sponsored by Gatorade and the NFL, but the Manhattan Jaycees were responsible for organizing, promoting and having the event.

"Gatorade pays for certificates and ribbons and provides Gatorade for the kids to drink," said Allan Begnoche, local chairman for the event. "The Jaycees really do all the work."

Cats don't deserve Top-25 ranking

The polls are out. And, if you ask me, so are the voters.

For the second consecutive week, the Wildcats are ranked in both prominent college football polls — No. 22 in the AP sportswriters' poll and No. 21 in the USA Today/CNN coaches' poll.

COLUMN

DAN LEWERENZ

And they don't deserve it.

Don't get me wrong. I bleed purple just like the rest of you, and I believe in our team. But the Cats haven't done anything to prove they deserve to be ranked.

In fact, after the near disaster in Cincinnati this weekend, I think we've proven that we deserve not to be ranked. The Bearcats finished 2-8-1 last season and aren't likely to contend for a bowl berth in the near future.

Sure, we beat up Temple in the season-opener. But Temple isn't exactly what you'd call a national power.

In their two games, the Cats have racked up seven turnovers, far more than any ranked team deserves to have.

The offense — particularly quarterback Matt Miller's passing attack — is questionable at best. And the defense has given up big-play touchdowns in both games, putting the Cats at an early disadvantage.

So if the Wildcats don't deserve to be ranked, you ask, why do they keep getting the votes?

The answer lies in expectations. Coach Bill Snyder is widely regarded as one of the best coaches in the nation, and the Wildcat defense is still one of the most feared in the Big 8.

As strange as this may seem to long-time followers of Wildcat football, K-State has a national reputation.

But playing Temple and Cincinnati doesn't provide the team a real opportunity to defend that reputation. Home games against Akron and Northern Illinois won't either.

Until the conference season begins, and games at Oklahoma State and against Missouri shouldn't — I repeat, shouldn't — really be a test, the Cats will remain unproven.

The October showdown in Lincoln will give K-State its first real chance to prove that they deserve to be ranked.

Until then, K-State will probably stay ranked, maybe even rising in the polls as higher-ranked teams lose to legitimate opponents.

The Cats aren't the only team benefiting from an overactive reputation. Penn State is ranked No. 7 despite needing a last-second field goal to beat Texas Tech. In Happy Valley, no less.

No. 13 Alabama has had to come from behind to beat two mediocre teams. No. 24 Notre Dame lost to Northwestern at home and barely beat Purdue.

Even Kansas, which managed a 17-point win over North Texas (the Eagles are in their first year of Division I-A play) after nearly losing to Cincinnati in Lawrence, received three votes.

Because the polls are important players in determining a national championship, both coaches and sportswriters face a nasty ethical dilemma by participating.

The worst of the bunch is the Burger King Top 10 fans' poll. For 79 cents per minute, every Joe with a telephone can vote (up to four times per household) for the top team in the land.

Even after its loss to Northwestern, Notre Dame ranked No. 5.

By the end of the season, K-State should be ranked. In fact, we may even deserve Top-10 status after beating both Oklahoma and Colorado — yes, I'm sticking to my prediction here.

But for the time being, we shouldn't be in the picture.

Not until we prove we're good enough.

K-State wins heart-stopper in Cincinnati

Rich Pefley
staff reporter

It wasn't pretty, but K-State made the big plays when they had to Saturday, pulling out a 23-21 victory against the Cincinnati Bearcats at Nippert Stadium.

The game began with Cincinnati making the big plays, scoring on only the second play from scrimmage with a 67-yard pass play from quarterback Eric Vibberts to fullback Daryl Royal, who leaked out of the backfield.

"It was like, 'Oh, no. This can't happen again,'" Wildcat safety Chuck Marlowe said. "But you can't dwell on it, or it's going to keep happening."

It was the second time in as many weeks that the Wildcat defense let the opposition score on their opening drive.

> "Matt (Miller) just made a great throw to get it into the corner."
> KEVIN LOCKETT
> K-STATE RECEIVER

K-State's offense also got off to a rocky start. On the Wildcat's sixth play from scrimmage, Cincinnati defensive end Ken Fowler grabbed the first of four interceptions quarterback Matt Miller would throw on the night.

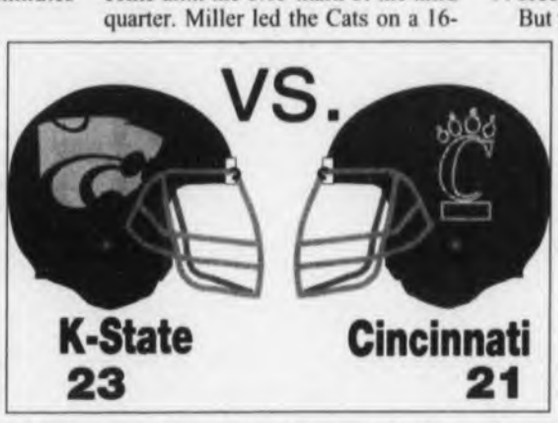
That set up a six-play, 24-yard drive, capped off by a 1-yard touchdown run by Bearcat running back Shane Thomas. Eric Richards' extra point put K-State down 14-0 with just a little more than six minutes gone in the game.

The next six Wildcat possessions stalled with two more interceptions, two punts, a Bearcat defensive stand and a Miller fumble.

"Matt Miller had a terrible game," K-State coach Bill Snyder said. "I thought his ass should have been on the sidelines next to me.

"When you're down like that, it takes a lot to go down and find the courage to play hard every snap," Snyder said.

Luckily, the Wildcat defense held firm. Cincinnati couldn't muster up any more offense and missed field goals of 48, 46 and 37 yards.



The Bearcats also failed to convert on first and goal from the K-State 2-yard line.

"If I hadn't been so mad, I would've been the happiest guy in the world," Snyder said.

Lack of execution by Cincinnati and a stubborn Wildcat defense kept the Cats from being down 30-0 at the half.

At the half, K-State had recorded only 63 yards of total offense on 27 plays. Running back Eric Hickson had only 14 yards on seven carries, and Miller was 4-for-11 with three interceptions and 40 yards passing.

The Wildcats' first score didn't come until the 8:05 mark of the third quarter. Miller led the Cats on a 16-play, 62-yard drive that ended with a 21-yard field goal by Martin Gramatica.

On the K-State's second drive of the second half, running back Mike Lawrence scored from two yards out, and the Cats trailed 14-9.

The fourth quarter saw K-State take the lead for the first time. With 4:24 left to go in the game, the Wildcats capped off a 9-play, 55-yard drive with a 28-yard touchdown pass from Miller to wide receiver Kevin Lockett.

That appeared to be the game-winner. But Cincinnati wasn't about to give up.

Vibberts calmly orchestrated a 6-play, 55-yard scoring drive that ended on a 10-yard scoring pass to wide receiver Robert Tate with only 44 seconds left on the clock.

But the Cats weren't concerned.

"When (Miller) got in the huddle, his eyes weren't glassy like he was scared," receiver Mitch Running said. "He looked at us and took command."

Despite his early passing problems, Miller was ready to lead the final drive.

"I had the weirdest feeling. I knew we were going to win," Miller said.

With only 38 seconds left in the game, K-State had the ball on their own 41-yard line and one timeout.

After two Miller rushes, the Cats had a first down at the Cincinnati 46-yard line. On the next three plays, Miller threw two incomplete passes, and the Cats were charged with a delay-of-game penalty.

On third and 15, Miller hit wide receiver Tyson Schwieger for a 20-yard gain to the Bearcat 31-yard line. With only 8 seconds left in the game, Miller hit Running for a 9-yard gain. Running was able to get out of bounds, stopping the clock and giving the Cats one last chance with three seconds left in regulation.

Miller rolled left, then threw back right to Lockett in the end zone for the game winner. The throw and catch capped off an amazing seven-play, 59-yard, 38-second drive that gave the Cats the victory.

"It seemed like slow motion," Lockett said.

"I wanted the ball to hurry up and get there. I wanted the ball to hurry up and get there. I saw it leave Matt's hand and come into mine, but it seemed like it took 10 or 15 seconds.

"Matt just made a great throw to get it into the corner."

Though Miller's poise at the end brought the Cats through, he said he was less than satisfied with his performance.

"I played like horse crap today, and that's as simple as you can put it," Miller said.

"It was a nice play at the end, but had we lost, it would have all been on my shoulders."

Cincinnati coach Rick Minter was stricken by his team's second-consecutive late-game loss.

"I am heartbroken for our kids. My heart bleeds for our football team tonight," Minter said.

"I've got to give all the credit in the world to Kansas State. They thought they would win it throughout the game, and they did just that."

NU's Phillips dismissed from team

Nebraska running back and Heisman Trophy contender Lawrence Phillips has been dismissed from the football team for allegedly beating a young woman.

"Lawrence Phillips was involved in an incident early Sunday morning in which he injured a young woman. Fortunately, it does not appear that she was seriously injured," Nebraska coach Tom Osborne said Monday.

"We have told all our players that abusive behavior such as this will not be tolerated.

"Lawrence has been under a great deal of pressure recently with the NCAA investigation and with the public scrutiny of his childhood, and this may or may not have had something to do with his actions.

"We will do everything we can to help him get his life back together, but he is dismissed from the football team, effective immediately."

Phillips was the Husker's starting I-back in the first two games of the season, rushing 34 times for 359 yards and seven touchdowns. He ranks sixth all-time at Nebraska with 2,589 yards rushing and 28 touchdowns in his three-year career.

"It is the University of Nebraska Athletic Department's policy to provide mandatory life-skills programs every semester for our student athletes," Athletic Director Bill Byrne said.

"These seminars include education on sexual and physical abuse, drug education, dealing with life after sports and diversity training. A sports psychologist, Jack Stark, is on staff to help Nebraska student athletes deal with the pressures of performing, both on the field and in the classroom, and assistance is provided to help student athletes deal with media pressures."

Event unveils new school

■ Frank V. Bergman Elementary accommodates 462 Manhattan students

Chris May
staff reporter

The ribbon was cut Sunday afternoon at Frank V. Bergman Elementary School.

"This is a glorious event," Dan Yunk, superintendent of schools, said. "We built this school not only for kids today but for many more tomorrow."

The open house and dedication was a place for Frank Bergman's wife and children to thank the community and the school district for naming the school after their late husband and father.

Bergman Elementary was named after Frank V. Bergman, who was principal of Manhattan Junior High from 1926 to 1929, principal of Manhattan High from 1929 to 1942 and superintendent of schools from 1942 to 1954.

Bergman's wife thanked the people of the community who wrote letters and made phone calls to get the new school named after Bergman. After the bond was passed, the school board unanimously picked Frank V. Bergman for the name of the new school.

The elementary school is being paid for through a $25.8-million bond that was passed by voters in November. Two new middle schools will also be built as a part of that bond issue.

Bergman's son, Roger, said he was pleased the school was named after his father.

"He was a great friend of the children," Roger Bergman said. "He was a little like Santa Claus to them."

The school accommodates 462 students, kindergarten through sixth grade, but its capacity is 492, Joan Spiker, principal of Bergman school, said.

Students from around the Bergman area attend the school, as well as those bused from three other schools. Children are being bused from Lee, Roosevelt and Bluemont elementary schools to eliminate overcrowding in those schools.

The school district is planning to expand technology throughout the schools, but Bergman is already a step ahead of most Manhattan schools.

"We have a computer station in every classroom with a video monitor so a teacher can call down to the library and ask for a certain video, and it appears right in their classroom," Spiker said.

They also have a computer lab, and the teachers are learning how to use e-mail so they can talk from room to room, Spiker said.

Bergman Elementary will also provide day care.

The cost of the day care is $20 in the morning and $20 in the afternoon a week, unless the student stays both in the morning and the afternoon, in which case it is $30 for the week.

There is also a multi-age station at Bergman Elementary where the children in grades 4 through 6 are in a program based on their interests.

The students are either asked to join the program, or they request to join the program.

▶ FARRELL CONSTRUCTION

Dean hopes for new image after expansion

Sarah Lunday

Somewhere between the dust of construction and the shuffle of stacks, Farrell Library's staff wants a new image.

"We know what they say about us," Brice Hobrock, dean of University libraries, said.

Students have been heard saying the library is worthless and a waste of time, Hobrock said.

"It's the bad image that we've had here for decades," he said. "It's sort of a campus myth that lives on."

With construction, the building certainly hasn't been pretty to look at, but not too difficult to use, Molly Enright, sophomore in Spanish education, said.

"I wouldn't say it was really bad," she said.

Hobrock wants students to know the construction project at Farrell was designed as a program to fix all the mistakes of the past and change the building's image, Hobrock said.

"The building has been difficult to use," he said.

The original building was constructed in 1927, and additions were made in 1955 and 1971. Hobrock said the building's later additions were failures.

"That's the job the architects were given — to fix it," he said. "That is why we're adding on to all three sides."

The previous building, with the rows of stacks, didn't lend itself to an open feeling, Lynn Cowley, Farrell building manager, said.

"The new building has a very open feeling," Cowley said.

Hobrock said the $128-million project is on schedule and expected for completion in 1997.

Although the project is 40-percent completed, students should keep in mind that Farrell's construction is now the most complex project being taken on by the Kansas Division of Architecture services, Hobrock said.

"These are quality fixes," Cowley said.

The high-quality service offered by staff members at Farrell hasn't changed, Hobrock said.

If anything, the staff has actually tried to improve service for the students because of the inconvenient construction, Cowley said.

Ian Spurgeon, sophomore in history, said he tried to find Farrell's entrance for the first time this semester Sunday.

"I forgot how they changed the entrance," he said.

The northwest Farrell entrance was installed last April and is scheduled to be in that location until next April, Hobrock said.

▶ COMPUSERVE

Alumni bring Cats on-line

Jeremy Crabtree
staff reporter

The KSU Alumni Association is going on-line with CompuServe.

K-State's association, which should have its service up and running by Oct. 31, is just one of the many alumni associations that are planning to go on-line with the CompuServe computer service.

"CompuServe approached the Big 12 alumni directors last spring," Brad Beets, vice president of the association, said. "They wanted to create an opportunity to have the associations provide a conduit of information between the alumni and the association. As far as I know, the majority of the Big 12 schools will be signed up with it.

"I think that this is something that you will see sweeping the nation."

The system will offer several different areas of interest to alumni, Beets said.

For example, alumni members can participate in on-line forums and chat with other members or special guests.

"We are hoping to be able to get an athletic coach or another University official to come and talk on-line to our members," Beets said.

"Some schools do it, and they are very successful with it. I think it would be interesting to do Cat Chat on-line so they could ask the questions from all across the country."

However, one of the most important areas of the the association's system will be career networking, Beets said.

"Alumni can actually up-load their résumé into the system," Beets said. "Also, alumni who are in a position to say that they have openings within their company can actually detail the openings.

"We haven't worked out any details on campus, but we would like to be able to work with the Career Placement Center. Obviously, this could help enhance what they already do on their web sites. This part of the service has been very successful at other schools around the country."

The new system will also provide links to the University's home page on the Internet, along with other various home pages related to K-State.

"Basically, the opportunities are endless," Beets said. "We can do about anything.

"Someone who has just moved to Dallas can get information on how to reach the club director there in town and find out what activities are scheduled. Then they can talk on a forum with someone from Washington D.C. and later read the E-Collegian."

To gain access to the system through K-State's CompuServe program, alumni must be members of the Alumni Association. They also must pay CompuServe's basic rates plus $3 extra for extended service, Beets said.

"Right now it's just a member benefit," Beets said. "People who are non-alumni can join the association and gain access that way."

To help market the new system, Beets said he hopes to be able to give disks with the program on it to new graduates.

"I hope that when they walk through the line and get their diploma the next thing in their hand is our disk," Beets said. "That way they will get to test it and kick it around, and get a lot of exposure. The recent graduates are going to probably be our main market at first. It's just because they are more computer literate than others.

"Our biggest challenge will be to keep things from getting stale. We've got to keep it fresh. We'll start out with the basics and build on it."

Astronauts recover out-of-control satellite

Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Endeavour's astronauts chased and recovered a solar-science satellite Sunday that was spinning and facing the wrong way because of an apparent power problem.

NASA will not know whether the telescopes on the Spartan satellite collected any data until Space Shuttle Endeavour returns to Earth next week and is unloaded.

Commander David Walker and his crew discovered the satellite that had shut down automatically when they pulled up to retrieve it two days after releasing it.

Walker was forced to steer Endeavour around the satellite. As the two crafts zoomed around Earth at 5 miles per second, he painstakingly lined up Endeavour's crane with the grapple pin on Spartan.

More than half an hour later than planned, astronaut Michael Gernhardt reached out with the crane and grabbed the satellite. He hauled the 2,800-pound boxy craft into the cargo bay, where it will remain for the rest of the 11-day mission, scheduled to end Sept. 18.

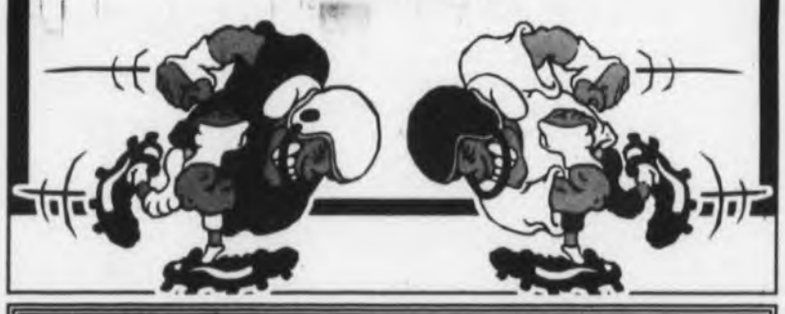
The 230-mile-high rendezvous was one of the shuttle mission's main objectives.

Ground controllers suspect Spartan went into a safe, shutdown mode because of weak batteries or a depletion of steering fuel, NASA manager Craig Tooley said.

The heaters inside the satellite were warm, indicating that everything was working until just before Endeavour showed up, Tooley said.

"We believe that the most likely scenario is that the mission was a complete success," Tooley said.

During its two days of free flight, the $8-million satellite was programmed to observe streams of charged particles hurtling from the sun's north pole at 500 miles per second. Gusts of solar wind can knock out power plants on Earth and interrupt radio signals.



Spartan's observations were timed to coincide with those by Ulysses, a European solar probe passing high over the sun's northern polar region.

With Spartan back on board, the five astronauts turned their attention to another satellite, a large, steel disk intended for electronics research.

The astronauts plan to release the $25-million Wake Shield Facility on Monday and recapture it two days later. Physicists expect the satellite to create an ultra-clean vacuum in its wake that should be ideal for growing super-thin semiconductor film.

Before ending its workday, the crew boosted Endeavour into a 247-mile-high orbit and latched onto the Wake Shield with the shuttle crane in preparation for Monday's release.

New 'Urge' album gets the gas phase

contributing writer

Although I'm sure the band is animated and thrives at live shows, its new CD did not move, shake or inspire me. In fact, the more I listened to it, the less I liked it.

"Receiving the Gift of Flavor" was released by Neat Guy Recordings of St. Louis. The blend definitely has an intriguing variety of flavor.

The swinging reggae rhythms play spotlight leap frog with a spontaneous outbreak of metal guitar.

Heavy percussion interrupts the smooth alchemy of horns, which exhibits a typical ska slide and brassy frolic.

The Urge also has rasta backbone, like a lot of bands coming out of Missouri recently.

But the Urge doesn't seem comparable to some of the more skank-able bands coming out of the Midwest, including MU330, Isaac Green, The Pie Tasters and 311.

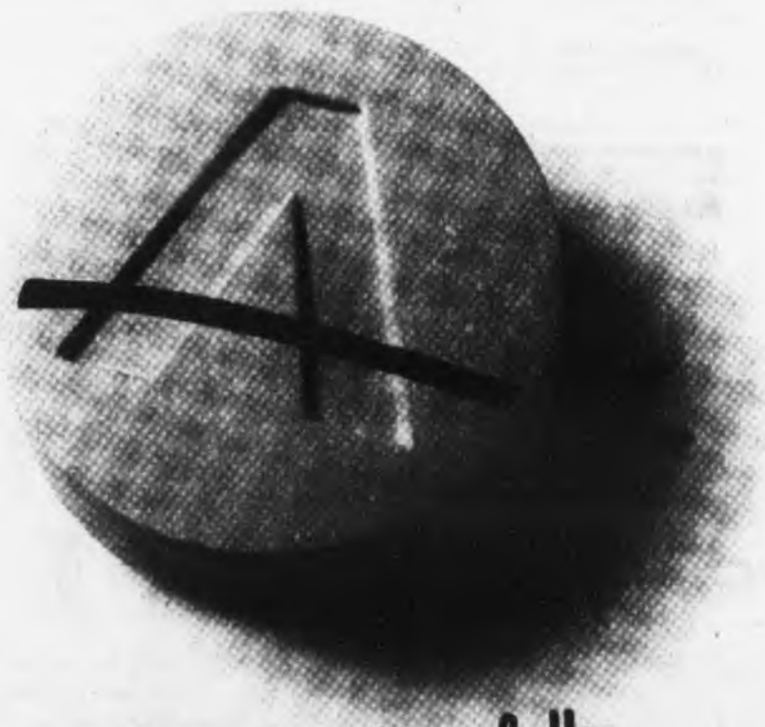
★★ Think twice
★ Giggle at it in bargain bins

The shortcomings of "Receiving the Gift of Flavor" seemed minimal to me at first, but they grew the more I subjected myself to the self-righteous and confrontational nature of the lyrics and the repetitive and gnawing, mindless banter of social commentaries.

The band addresses issues such as homelessness, gang violence, drinking and driving and the desensitizing portrayal of violence in the media.

I could appreciate this if it weren't for the band's hypocrisy. For example, a track entitled "Drunk Asshole" condemns drunken driving but is followed two tracks later with the oh-so-conscious lyrics of "Open All Night," in which the chorus yells, "We're going to the liquor store", three times and then yells "Come inside and get my pickle."

What makes it even less pardonable is the harsh, distracting and untamed vocals.



Steve Ewing's overbearing voice seems to demand some kind of authorized self pity regarding what's wrong with the world.

The mildly abstract stoner-life portrayal of "Damn that Shit is Good," completely discredits the value of other domestic-revolutionary songs like "Killing is Easy" and "Violent Oppression."

The Urge could lose the metal, stick to ska and maybe try doing instrumentals for awhile.

Unexpected love unfolds in 'Kiss'

Claudette Riley
staff writer

Mixing sexual tension with the feisty verbal foreplay perfected in classic two-toned flicks of old, "French Kiss" is a date movie that delivers what it intends — nothing more.

Fresh and frothy, "French Kiss" hints at no depth and pretension beyond the enjoyable plight of two difficult people finding a kindred spirit that ignites romance.

Playing off the passion that unfolds when both lovers protest too much, the insightful theme of collision after a chance meeting yanks the story line into a spunky new light.

The intoxicating charm of discovering that your soulmate is actually the loyal friend by your side pours sentimental spice into the stir of what could have been a traditional buddy movie.

Building on the characterization of "When Harry met Sally..." and "Sleepless in Seattle," a closely shorn Meg Ryan answers her calling to play the girlish everywoman of the '90s — cleverly hip with traditional values.

Playing the role of Kate, Ryan shrinks upon hearing that her fiancé has fallen for a ravishing goddess while in France and wants to annul their idyllic plans to begin anew with this genetic wonder woman.

In an attempt to regain her sense of direction, Kate boards a plane for Paris to break the spell and win back her man.

En route, she intersects Luc Teyssier (Kevin Kline), a roguish, French jewel thief who interweaves her plans with his to provide a cover for himself.

Kline, as Luc, bewitches each scene with his harmless mischief and agile charm. As Kate is aided by Luc in her quest to woe Charlie (Timothy Hutton), she discovers her own direction.

Freedom and individuality evolve among the breathless glimpses of the Eiffel Tower and against the backdrop of sweeping countrysides in the South of France.

Poignant and genuinely funny, "French Kiss" is a rare find. Look for it in the video stores.

▶ OKLAHOMA CITY BOMBING

McVeigh feared murder

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — When two FBI agents paid a visit on Timothy McVeigh at a tiny county jail two days after the bombing of the federal building, they asked if he knew why they had come.

"Yes," McVeigh replied, according to documents in the case.

"That thing in Oklahoma City, I guess."

The April 21 exchange took place as about 300 people crowded around the Noble County Jail in Perry, about 63 miles north of Oklahoma City.

McVeigh, fearing an assassin in the throng, asked agents to take him from the jail through the roof — "You remember what happened with Jack Ruby," he said.

Agents refused and brought out a grim-faced McVeigh wearing a bright orange jailhouse jumpsuit.

Citing FBI reports, search warrants, sheriff's logs, jail booking cards and witness accounts, the Los Angeles Times pieced together the 48 hours following McVeigh's arrest near Perry on traffic and weapons charges on April 19, the day of the bombing.

During that time, a polite, relaxed McVeigh, who tried to shoot the breeze with the highway patrolman who stopped him, waited to be released from jail.

McVeigh made two phone calls from the jail, one to a bail bondsman in Stillwater. The paper did not say who he called the second time.

On April 20, the day after the bombing, his bail hearing on charges of unlawfully carrying a weapon, transporting a loaded firearm in a vehicle, failing to display a license tag and having no insurance was delayed. The next morning, McVeigh was brought downstairs for a hearing.

Moments earlier, Sheriff Jerry Cook had received a call from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. Cook told jailer Farrell Stanley to put McVeigh on a federal hold and escorted him back to his cell.

"Do you have any idea when I'll be going to court?" McVeigh asked. "No, it'll be sometime today," the sheriff answered.

Cook then cut off the jail phone lines and set up a security perimeter around the building. His office phones were jangling incessantly. By noon on Friday, April 21, the FBI had arrived, along with two government helicopters.

McVeigh was brought down from his cell to meet FBI agents James L. Norman Jr. and Floyd M. Zimms. After his initial remark about "that thing in Oklahoma City," he asked for a lawyer and was advised of his rights.

McVeigh gave his name, age and other routine personal information, but balked at telling his place of birth.

"I will just give you general physical information," he said.

He began to sputter to Tiffany Valenzuela, an inmate in a nearby cell.

She said she told him to calm down because if he had done nothing wrong, he had no reason to be afraid.

"OK," he told her. "I'm not scared. I'm not scared right now."

▶ ADOLESCENT MOTHERS

Sexual abuse linked to teen pregnancy

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Stephanie Whitaker was 6 years old when one of her adolescent brothers began sexually abusing her. She hadn't turned 10 when her mother's uncle began doing the same.

At 14, her grandfather pulled her aside and said he was her boyfriend and that he planned to consummate the relationship the following weekend when she was supposed to stay overnight in his home.

Miserable and confused, Stephanie left her home, crossed the street and had sexual relations with a 14-year-old friend. She hoped to get pregnant, believing it would keep abusers away. She did, and it did — but only until the birth of her first child, Jeffrey.

"I knew it was going to be a relief period," the soft-spoken, 23-year-old woman recalls. "And that's how Jeffrey came about."

Experts in sexual abuse and teen pregnancy say Whitaker's experience is all too common, that an alarmingly high number of girls who become pregnant as teens were sexually abused as youngsters.

A University of Washington study of 535 young women who became pregnant as adolescents found that 66 percent had been sexually abused as children. An Illinois study by Ounce of Prevention, a social service group, found that 61 percent of 445 teen mothers reported sexual abuse.

But the stories of girls like Whitaker have been ignored in the congressional groundswell for punitive measures against adolescent mothers as part of welfare reform.

"It's much more convenient for people to frame it in very simplistic terms than to look at the complexity of the problem," Deborah Boyer, co-author of the Washington study, said.

Until Whitaker was 14, she had no words for sexual abuse. Her father, a minister who also drove a bus, believed that all people are good. Her mother stayed home to raise five boys and three girls.

For Whitaker, the abuse was not forced, but secret and coercive. It happened behind closed doors, frequently in her own home.

"I had many perpetrators," said Whitaker, who meets your eye when she speaks. "It started with two of my brothers, my mother's uncle, my mom's dad, two friends of my family."

Whitaker said she learned too late the difference between appropriate and inappropriate forms of love for a child, a distinction her abusers tried to blur.

"I got real confused at hearing 'I love you,' and,'This is what people do when they love each other,'" Whitaker said.

Boyer, an anthropologist, said that Whitaker fits the profile of teens who are abused prior to pregnancy. For many, the assailant is a family member. Abuse is chronic. Victims often don't realize they can say no.

At the age of 16, with another baby on the way and a boyfriend she wanted to keep, Whitaker was assaulted by a cousin while driving him home from work.

It was then that she entered Heart to Heart, a 12-week sexual abuse prevention program that encourages girls to keep diaries and share their stories with others.

The extent of previous sexual abuse among teen mothers came as a surprise even to some teen counselors.

Today, Stephanie Whitaker is married to the man she fell in love with at 16. They live in a small apartment on Chicago's South Side with Jeffrey, their 6-year-old son and their 2-year-old daughter.

And although her own abuse has ended, she acknowledges a sad legacy. Whitaker trusts few men other than her husband. She will not tolerate most hugs, even from friends.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

MANAGER

At the city manager candidate reception Friday, Greer said he has noticed that Manhattan has similar issues as Kearney.

He said Kearney and Manhattan have similar economic development issues, are both university towns and that policy making in the Midwest are similar.

Greer said he hasn't had a chance for an in-depth look at the challenges in the city but hopes to learn all he can if he takes the job.

Greer was one of four candidates who were invited back for second interviews with the commission Saturday afternoon.

Mayor Edith Stunkel said it was difficult to choose a city manager because all of the candidates were qualified, but Greer stood out as the better choice.

"I feel we made a very good decision," she said. "I expect we will finalize a contract this week."

Commissioner Bruce Snead said he also thought interviews went smoothly.

"I'm very happy with the selection process, and I hope and believe everything will come together nicely," he said.

Snead said the Paul A. Reaume Group, hired by the city to form an interview pool and screen applicants, played a big part in the ease of the selection process.

He said he thinks hiring the PAR Group was a smart move.

All the candidates were excellent, and it was nice that the commission actually had a choice, he said.

Snead said there was no single quality that distinguished Greer from the other candidates. He said the decision was based on an overall assessment of his qualifications.

fax numbers, and his banker's full address, telephone and fax number.

Captain Steven French of the Riley County Police Department said it is unclear what the perpetrators plan to do with the bank account number and other financial information. He said they could write counterfeit checks.

"I'm not aware of any active investigation of this case in Kansas," Geiman said.

Because the people involved are operating from Nigeria, Geiman said they are beyond U.S. jurisdiction.

In the United States, they would be prosecuted for mail and wire fraud, Geiman said.

Ali Khan, professor of international law at Washburn University, said to prosecute these people, they would have to be in the country.

Khan said there are several ways this matter could be handled. If the government of Nigeria extradites the responsible party to the United States, they could be prosecuted.

"There's a lot of things the U.S. government can do," Khan said. "They can send FBI agents to Nigeria to investigate. They can also ask the Nigerian government to prosecute these people themselves."

For now, the best thing for individuals or businesses to do if they get one of these letters is to report it to the Better Business Bureau, the police or the Consumer Fraud Division at the Attorney General's office, French said.

"No one is just looking for somebody to hold $38 million for them," French said. "Any time you get anything like this, it's just too good to be true."

Baker said one specific part of the letter really aroused his suspicions.

"What tipped me off is when they said not to send anything through the mail, just fax it. It sounded really suspicious," Baker said.

"I was tempted to tell them to send me $5,000 before I would send them my fax number. Just to see what would happen," Baker said.

majors are welcome to join and participate.

Freshmen Libby Wyrill, agriculture business, and Heather Osborne, social work, said they found a few clubs they are interested in joining.

"I'm not involved in anything now," Wyrill said.

Both Wyrill and Osborne said they were interested in Union Program Council and Circle K.

Chris Downey, sophomore in electrical engineering, said he didn't necessarily go to the carnival to find any particular group to join.

"I just kind of came to see what was going on," he said.

Free cotton candy, hot dogs, funnel cakes and posters were offered throughout the day by various groups.

But Dan Calvery, sophomore in general engineering, said he arrived at the carnival just a little too late.

"They ran out of cotton candy when I got here."

TRADE

"That trade from agriculture alone produces 800,000 jobs in the United States, most in manufacturing," he said.

Because of the increase in trade, Glickman said he believed the United States needed to stay in the center of the world economy.

"The opportunities I see in Asia and around the world aren't going to just fall into our laps — we have to go after them. And if we don't, someone else will," Glickman said.

Glickman's views on the free trade issue cost him personally during the last election.

"As you know, I lost my congressional seat in the last election, and my support of the free-trade agreement with Mexico certainly contributed to the loss," he said.

But the cost could be high if the United States turns away from the world, he said.

"We can not neutralize from the world. Inevitably it will lead to crisis of catastrophic proportions as we've already seen in this century," Glickman said.

Mark Borgerding, senior in agriculture business, said he agreed with Glickman.

"I believe totally in what he said. We are in a global market, and we need to work in that world," Borgerding said.

Maintaining that role in the world scene would mean continuing to help countries around the world with food and funds.

The public believes that 15 percent of America's budget goes to foreign aid, and they believe that should be cut. In actuality, the number is less than one-half of 1 percent, Glickman said.

"The opportunities I see in Asia and around the world aren't going to just fall into our laps — we have to go after them."

DAN GLICKMAN
SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

Using foreign aid to develop markets instead of cutting aid would make more sense for the future of the country, Glickman said.

Glickman cited China as a possibility for developing more markets.

"It is big. It is growing both in productive capability and its demand potentials are tremendous," Glickman said.

"It is moving towards capitalism at breakneck speed, but under the same repressive political structure."

For example, in China, the government is encouraging people to eat more eggs per week. This in turn would increase the amount of chicken feed the U.S. exports to China.

The increased markets could open up the economy for farmers, he said.

"Congress has set U.S. agriculture on a course to increase demand more in tune with the market," Glickman said.

The 1995 Farm Bill is now being debated in Congress, and Glickman said it will need to be in place by December.

Part of the bill, he said, should offer more freedom to the farmers. That the freedom should include what to grow and how much to sell it for.

Glickman said he believed that the freedom was necessary, but government should still be a part of agriculture.

"We need to fight the naive efforts to get government out of it," he said.

He compared the role of government in agriculture to the role of an umpire in a baseball game.

"You shouldn't have even noticed the umpire was here at the end of the game if he did his job right," Glickman said.

In the past, the government has been apart of agriculture in many ways, including research.

The government is working with schools like K-State to make improvements in areas like diseases in cattle and agriculture in general, Glickman said.

He commended the students and faculty for the research being done at K-State.

"Your work in these areas has literally helped to feed the world," Glickman said.

Paul Friedrichs, senior in agriculture economics, said it was important for the University that Glickman spoke about the roles of government in the research and development of agriculture.

He also said it was an honor to have the secretary of agriculture at K-State to speak.

"He is Kansas' own son — here in a state where agriculture is so big. It is definitely a big deal," Friedrichs said.

Glickman called attention to the opportunities that are coming in agriculture and in the world.

"I would call you today to get involved in the world around you. The choices of what kind of world you live in is yours."

Officers stress safety on roads

Claudette Riley
staff writer

Encouraging students to heed safety precautions when traveling Interstate 70 is stressed by officers following the assault, battery and mugging of a K-State student.

Todd Stewart, sophomore in journalism and mass communication, was 20 miles east of Manhattan when a car pulled alongside his. The driver of the car held up a badge and motioned for Stewart to pull over. The man approached Stewart's car and asked to see his driver's license.

While retrieving his wallet, the man struck Stewart with an unidentified object, and Stewart lost consciousness.

Stewart regained consciousness at 1:30 p.m. He discovered $80 cash was taken from his wallet, though his credit cards and a Macintosh laptop computer remained in full sight.

Stewart then traveled to a rest area a couple miles up the road.

Mike Watson, sheriff of Wabaunsee County, responded to the 911 call and took a statement from Stewart.

The suspect, described as 30 years old, 6 feet tall, 180 pounds, with short brown hair and a mustache, was last seen wearing loose black pants and a navy-blue T-shirt. At the time of the assault, he was driving a maroon, coupe-like car.

Taking common-sense precautions will go a long way in making drivers safer, Watson said.

"If there is any question whether or not it's an officer attempting to pull you over, proceed on," Watson said. "In fact, if there's any suspicion that the man is not an officer, you are not required to pull over until the next populated area or public stop."

The only officers who travel in unmarked cars are sheriff or drug officers, and they will usually call in a marked car to make a stop, Watson said.

"There should be lights, sirens, the officer

NATO attacks Serbs

■ Missiles destroy Serbian defenses, threaten peace talks

Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — American cruise missiles badly damaged Bosnian-Serb air defenses, NATO said Monday, vowing to keep up its attacks until the skies over Bosnia are safe for Western warplanes. The Serbs were defiant, warning the attacks could endanger the peace process.

The 13 Tomahawk missiles fired from the USS Normandy late Sunday caused severe damage to Serb anti-aircraft systems, Group Capt. Trevor Murray said in Naples, Italy.

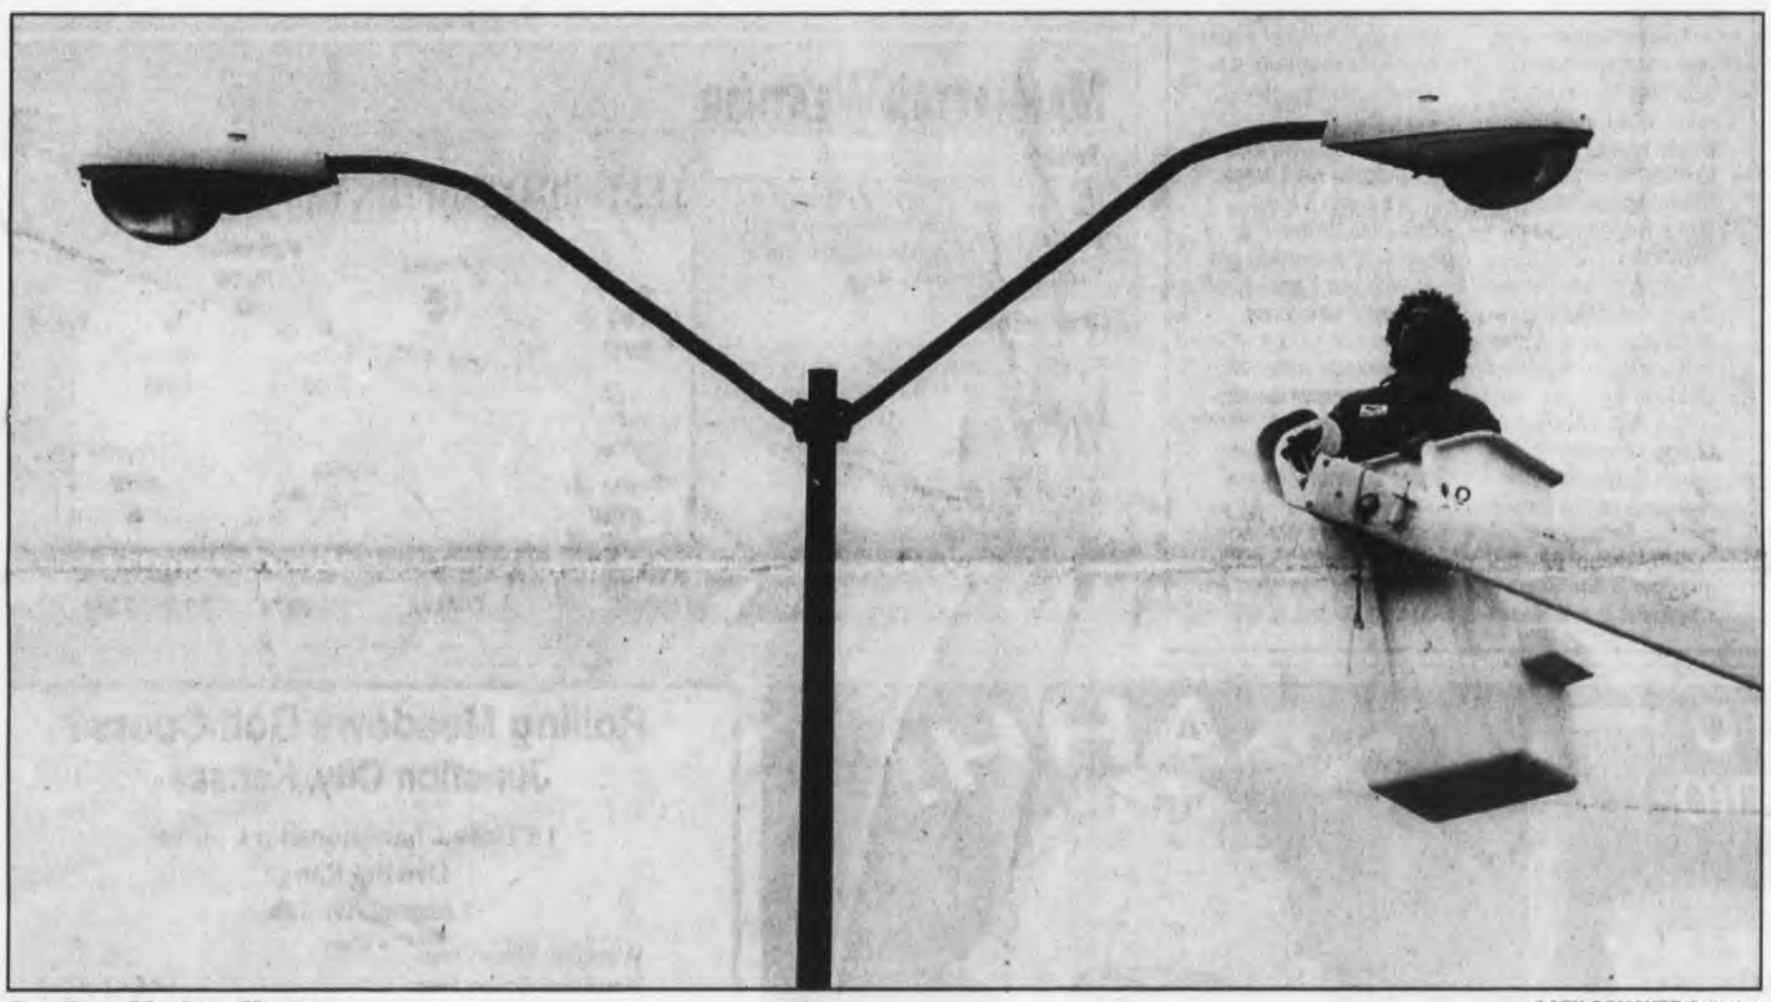
But he said the defenses were not entirely destroyed, and attacks would continue — possibly with more of the $1.3 million Tomahawks — until they are.

Murray said NATO had no indication that the missiles killed or wounded civilians, as the Serbs said.

With the Serbs reeling from NATO's bombs, the Bosnian government took advantage of their weakness to capture a strategic village and gain control of a route linking government holdings in northern and central Bosnia.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said the attacks showed that NATO was working with the government army and warned that they were jeopardizing a diplomatic breakthrough last week that set the stage for possible peace talks.

"It is clear that the most powerful military alliance on earth is openly taking the side of our enemies," Karadzic wrote in a letter to Western leaders. "The entire peace process could be wrecked."



The Serbs have so far resisted NATO's demands to remove artillery and other heavy weapons from around Sarajevo. Rebel commander Gen. Ratko Mladic contends that would leave Serbs in the area vulnerable to attack.

And for the Serbs, removing weaponry from around Sarajevo appears to be a secondary issue, because the meeting of foreign ministers in Geneva on Friday already established the basic principles of an overall settlement.

The cruise missiles, used in Bosnia for the first time, were fired at radar, anti-aircraft missile sites and communications stations near the northern Serb stronghold of Banja Luka.

Murray, the NATO spokesman,

▶ THEATER

Students learn foreign issues in plays

Claudette Riley
staff writer

Fourteen students visited Israel in July and discovered the issues of Israeli society are reflected in the country's theater.

"We found Israeli theater on the whole as one of social criticism," Norman Fedder, professor of speech, said.

Fedder, author of about 30 produced plays, spoke about the K-State-Israeli Program at the Vernon Larson Luncheon Series Monday.

The program was created as a way for students to study Israeli theater. The group included five American students and nine Israeli students.

"Besides our experiences with professional theaters we also sampled community and amateur groups," he said.

The Israeli productions, which were performed in Hebrew, English and Arabic, highlighted the themes of peer pressure, the gift of speech, the struggle for independence and the holocaust.

The evolved and well-attended theatrical performances in Israel did not emerge into a dominating form of expression within the Jewish culture until the 19th century, Fedder said.

Studying the contrasts between American and Israeli theater, Fedder said he believed that the vast American theater system is lax by comparison in triggering the pulse of issues in our society.

Questions arise in fund drive

▶ The Flint Hills Breadbasket pulls out of deal after telemarketers offer free vacation with purchase of coupon book.

Dana Harding
staff reporter

This is the second part in a series of stories on questionable business practices.

Students, beware of telemarketing calls.

What company's major distribution colors are red and white and use the slogan, "The real thing?"

Coca-Cola.

If the correct answer is given, participants are told they have won the opportunity to buy $1,500 worth of coupons for only $39.95 and also receive a vacation for two — free.

"If the wrong answer is given, then the participant will be given a second chance to answer correctly when the call is returned in two days," Marie Hartin of Creative Marketing in Pensacola, Fla., said.

The Flint Hills Breadbasket teamed up with Creative Marketing for a first-ever fund-raising drive of Flint Hills Golden Checks. The telemarketing began on July 7, and by July 9 the Flint Hills Breadbasket had pulled out of the drive.

"Our board has worked hard to create a positive image of our organization in the community. We pulled out because the free trip offer was not a clean-cut way to raise money. It is not worth the amount of money that could have been received," Shirley Bramhall, executive director of Flint Hills Breadbasket, said.

Creative Marketing approached the Flint Hills Breadbasket and told it all it would have to do is allow it's name to be put on the cover of the coupon book and the Flint Hills Breadbasket would receive $2 for every book sold.

Bramhall was skeptical about the offer, so she contacted several chambers of commerce the company had worked with in the past. She was told the company was legitimate as long as it was not allowed to use any gimmicks.

The Flint Hills Breadbasket board decided to try it under the condition that it would be able to proof the script of the telemarketers. The promotion began, and it had not received a script.

One thing it did receive was phone calls from community members who had been contacted by the telemarketers. They wanted to let the Flint Hills Breadbasket know what was being said and that a free vacation for two was being offered with the purchase of a coupon book.

Flint Hills Breadbasket officials said they were appreciative of the phone calls and felt they had no choice but to respond to the community.

"It was incredible how the community was protective of us. We had no choice but to pull out even though the coupon books are a good deal," Bramhall said.

Because the Flint Hills Breadbasket pulled out, the coupon book is strictly an advertising campaign for local businesses. Telephone numbers are computer-generated, and the telemarketers are given a script to read to participants.

The quiz questions are still includ-

Student involvement increasing in K-State's ROTC program

J. Scot
staff reporter

Things are looking up for K-State's ROTC program as the number of students involved continues to increase.

"For the first time we went out to high schools in Kansas and stressed the opportunities, like scholarships," Loren Traugutt, 2nd Lt. of K-State ROTC, said.

K-State's admissions office has now included the Army Reserve Officer Training Corps in its activities and recently hired a full-time admissions officer to help with recruiting efforts, Capt. Kenneth Wedge of K-State ROTC, said.

Military dependents, soldiers from other military instillations and students who do not want to be enlisted soldiers are some of the people who are involved with K-State's ROTC program.

"There are a variety of federal scholarships for students. And the scholarships pay for books, students' fees, tuition and $150 spending money per month," Traugutt said.

K-State ROTC students zero in their rifle sights before practice on the rifle range at Fort Riley. The number of students becoming involved in the K-State ROTC program has increased in the last couple of years.

Annamaria Hughes, freshman in psychology, said she enrolled in the ROTC program because it sounded interesting and she wanted to serve her country.

"I like it, yet it's hard work. P.T. has me real sore right now, but it's still fun," she said.

Hughes received a four-year college scholarship from the Army National Guard and is in ROTC's physical training.

Roger Zeigler, sophomore in park resource management, said K-State's ROTC program is good and will benefit anyone.

"Basically, the program leads up to the qualifications of being a leader, teaching you task initiative, being a team leader and being responsible for your actions," he said.

Dave Traynham, freshman in general engineering, said he enjoys the program and the people.

"The instructors make learning about the military fun so you won't hate it," he said.

BOARD OF STUDENT PUB PREPARES FOR PRIVILEGE-FEE DISCUSSIONS

The Board of Student Publications is gearing up for the privilege-fee battle early in the school year.

The fee may not come up for review by the Student Governing Association until the spring semester, but the board has already begun preparing.

"First, we need to get our financial house in order and review our budget," said Bill Feyerharm, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and board member. "Second, the thing that is critical is how to talk to people. We can put stuff in mailboxes, but it won't do anything if they don't understand it. We need to sit down and explain it."

Reviewing the budget to see if any further cuts can be made by the board before it goes to SGA is the key to getting the fee passed.

"Let's see about making cuts now. Let them see that we've already made cuts. If the suggestion by them is to cut, we've got to show them what they are going to have to give up because of it," Barry Flinchbaugh, professor of agriculture and board member, said.

The board also approved finance and personnel committee assignments of the members. Finance has eight members, and Personnel has six members. Chairpersons will be selected when the committees have their first meetings.

The idea of setting up a committee, made up of K-State alumni, to plan and promote the centennial issue of the Collegian was considered. The idea will be considered further in upcoming meetings.

Another main topic of discussion took place during the open period at the beginning of the meeting and centered around the request of the dismissal of a Collegian staff member.

The request came from a student because of a mistake in the letter-to-the-editor policy. The board decided not to take action on the request.

"I'm not sure the board should take any action. I think it should be up to the editors, and I don't think a firing is necessary. If this is a repeated thing, then the board should deal with it," Feyerharm said.

ARRESTS MADE IN ON-LINE SCAM

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — An on-line invitation to buy stolen cellular telephone and credit card data led to the arrest of six people and the seizure of more than 20 computer systems, authorities said Monday.

During an eight-month investigation, an undercover Secret Service agent using the name Carder One and a confidential informant operated a private computer bulletin board system called Celco 51, authorities said.

Through the Internet, the undercover team said that Celco 51 catered to those involved in computer fraud, court papers said.

"What we really did was set up an old-fashioned 'swag shop' in cyberspace," Assistant U.S. Attorney Donna A. Krappa, who is prosecuting the case, said.

A swag shop is where stolen goods are traded.

Two of the suspects were accused of conspiring to break into the computer system of McCaw Cellular in Portland, Ore., now AT&T Wireless. The others were accused of selling the numbers to peoples' cellular phones.

AT&T Wireless said the loss of a single cellular phone code costs them $500.

The six people were arrested in California, Michigan, Texas and New York. Authorities seized computer hardware and data in those states as well as Alaska, Connecticut, New Jersey and Virginia.

If convicted, defendants face maximum sentences ranging up to 15 years.

COUPLE SETTLES WITH GM

ATLANTA (AP) — A couple whose $105.2 million judgment against General Motors Corp. was reversed on appeal has settled for an undisclosed sum with the automaker they accused of causing their son's death in a pickup.

The settlement was one of four reached with GM on Friday in suits alleging pickup trucks made from 1973 to 1989 with side-mounted gasoline tanks were prone to explode.

Terms of the settlements — including two in Oklahoma and one in Kansas — were not disclosed.

In 1993, Thomas and Elaine Moseley of suburban Snellville, Ga., won one of the largest product liability awards in U.S. history when a jury found GM was negligent in the design of the pickups.

The couple's 17-year-old son, Shannon, was killed in 1989 when the truck he was driving was struck by a drunken driver and burst into flames.

Georgia's Court of Appeals reversed the verdict, saying the Moseley's lawyer made improper references to other cases involving the pickups.

The case was to be tried again next week.

"It's been a long time. We do have a family. We need to get on with our lives," Mrs. Moseley, who once vowed she would never settle with GM, said at a news conference Monday.

About 50 other lawsuits against GM are pending over the pickups. GM has defended the safety of the trucks, about 4 million of which are still on the road.

Ecologist contradicts Limbaugh

Sarah Kallenbach
staff reporter

Rush Limbaugh is wrong, or at least that is what a speaker from the Environmental Defense fund said Monday.

Steven Hamburg, a senior ecologist with the Fund, refuted the claims of Limbaugh and others who said environmental problems of the world are overestimated in a lecture at the K-State Union Forum Hall.

Hamburg quoted from "A Moment On Earth" by Greg Easterbrook that supported Limbaugh's perspective.

Easterbrook said the forests were growing and would soon return to the size they were in the 1600s.

In fact, the forests are shrinking and have been for 20 years, Hamburg said.

Throughout his speech, he said the facts from Easterbrook's book were mistaken.

"Easterbrook's numbers were wrong. It is a story based on his imagination," Hamburg said.

Easterbrook, who works for Newsweek, and Limbaugh have large audiences and can get their views out, Hamburg said.

"Rush plants seeds of doubt that Easterbrook and others try to cultivate," he said.

The main problem with Limbaugh is the influence his views have on Congress, Hamburg said.

Proposed legislation could cut environmental spending in the federal government, he said.

Two main bills in Congress deal with redefining the wetlands and the Endangered Species Act.

The act is something that has worked for the nation, Hamburg said, by protecting the environment of endangered animals.

"We have a system that works, yet we are deliberately trying to break it," Hamburg said.

The current trend is for Congress to cut programs that research environmental issues, he said.

By doing this, government is choosing to ignore the problems that face the country.

"We stand threatened by the attempt to cut scientific funding, so the debate can not go on," Hamburg said.

Chris Cokinos, a vice president for the Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society, said the people need to let their representatives know what they want.

"Given the all-out assassination in Congress on the environmental policies we have to a let them know we are here," Cokinos said.

Letting Congress know the people's views on the problems and taking an active role in the solutions of those problems is a responsibility of everyone, he said.

Elizabeth Dodd, professor of English, said world population is probably one of the biggest ecological problems and, for the most part, not enough has been done.

"I don't think we are trying to solve the problems," Dodd said.

"As a society, we have not thrown our collective will into it."

The Audubon Society was a sponsor of the speech.

Cokinos said the organization takes an active role to get correct information to the public.

"Contrary to popular belief, Audubon does more than watch birds," Cokinos said.

In fact, the organization will sponsor speakers throughout the semester who will speak about environmental issues.

Other sponsors of the speech were the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice, KSU Environmental Professionals and KSU Prelaw Club.

Money management different for private sector, government

■ Glasscock: The state budget doesn't address the needs of Kansans

Dana Harding
staff reporter

Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, explained the differences between public sector management and private sector management Monday at the Society for Advancement in Management meeting in the K-State Student Union.

"Management of the public sector is different from the private sector," he said.

"We have to effectively manage our budgets. Until we understand what we want to do with our government, we will always be stuck with the budget problems we have now," he said.

The state government uses the budget as the framework for decisions, and the private sector uses their budget as they chose.

"The legislative process devises the budget, and that dictates management. Therefore, budgeting is critical," Glasscock said.

He said the budget is managed incrementally.

Each state agency proposes needed funding and the legislators then decide where the money is filtered.

Every year the bureaucracy, or state government, reviews the agencies proposals.

"The legislature spends 90-100 days talking about out-of-state travel and other issues that focus on the increments," he said.

"This is the reason that people have little confidence in government. The budget doesn't address the real needs of Kansans," Glasscock said.

He said he believes in performance-based budgeting instead of increment-based budgeting, because performance-based budgeting is first focused on what should be accomplished instead of what can financially be accomplished.

Performance-based budgeting demands each agency declares a mission, devises programs that are established through statute that support the act and accomplish the set mission, set measurable outcomes for programs and track outcomes of the programs.

"People crash on rocks of public policy when it comes to performance-based budgeting.

"It is so hard for states to use performance based budgeting because legislators don't know the missions of organizations," he said.

"The difficulty is to take issues that can be agreed upon, identify problems, devise outcomes and track the outcomes of the programs," Glasscock said.

Glasscock also gave advice to students getting ready to face the real world.

"Demand of yourselves and local government that they all know what they are trying to do because without that process mind then we will continue to struggle," he said.

The organization usually invites business-oriented speakers for the students, but some students appreciated the change of pace.

"I enjoyed the fact that he presented both the private and public sector. I appreciated him telling us what he does as state legislator," Brian Glaves, sophomore in business and marketing, said.

Glasscock also related the group's management backgrounds to legislation and government.

"SAM is not only an organization for management. I think as a lot of us are getting ready to be in the real world, we need to start realizing that we will be a part of society as well," Barton Vance, senior in human resources management and production operation, also vice president of programs for SAM, said.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

BEFORE TRUSTING YOUR FUTURE TO ANY COMPANY, ASK FOR SOME LETTERS OF REFERENCE.

You put more than just your savings into a retirement company. You put in your trust and hopes for the future, too. So before you choose one, ask some questions. How stable is the company? How solid are its investments? How sound is its overall financial health?

A good place to start looking for answers is in the ratings of independent analysts. Four companies, all widely recognized resources for finding out how strong a financial services company really is, gave TIAA their top grade.

IN THE FINAL ANALYSIS, TIAA IS LETTER PERFECT.

TIAA received A++ (Superior) from A.M. Best Co., AAA from Duff & Phelps Credit Rating Co., Aaa from Moody's Investors Service and AAA from Standard & Poor's. These ratings reflect TIAA's stability, sound investments, claims-paying ability and overall financial strength. (These are ratings of insurance companies only, so they do not apply to CREF.)

And TIAA–which, backed by the company's claims-paying ability, offers a guaranteed rate of return and the opportunity for dividends–is one of a handful of insurance companies nationwide that currently hold these highest marks.

CREF. FOUR MORE LETTERS EVERYONE SHOULD KNOW.

For further growth potential and diversification, there's the CREF variable annuity, with seven different investment accounts to give you the flexibility you want as you save for the future.*

Together, TIAA and CREF form the world's largest private retirement system based on assets under management, with over $145 billion in assets and more than 75 years of experience serving the education community. For over a million and a half people nationwide, the only letters to remember are TIAA-CREF.

TIAA CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.SM

*Not all accounts are available under the basic retirement plans at all institutions. They are, however, all available for TIAA-CREF Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs). CREF certificates are distributed by TIAA-CREF Individual & Institutional Services.

Hot, Sexy and Safer to inform, entertain K-State

Although sex is something that is often talked about among college students, the subject of safety is one that needs to be addressed more frequently.

The stereotypical view of college life is one of being broke, studying hard and partying even harder.

When the third part of this equation comes into play, another aspect of college life usually comes to mind — sex.

Although sex is something that is often talked about among college students, the subject of safety is one that needs to be addressed more frequently.

To this end, the Union Program Council will bring to campus Hot, Sexy and Safer at 7 tonight in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union. This program will feature Lisa Kushell, a comedian and actress.

Kushell's lecture will combine comedy with informative views on sex as well as how to make it safer.

The program will cover AIDS and sexually transmitted disease prevention.

Hot, Sexy and Safer will be of interest to all students.

This issue affects everyone and, in this format, it should be well received by students, who happen to fall into the fastest-growing age group of AIDS victims.

With these health-related threats to sexually-active students so prominent in college life today, a program of this nature is necessary to keep K-Staters informed and updated on precautionary behavior.

If the lecture includes information on abstinence, as well as safer sex, then it will be a well-rounded program that every student on campus will be able to learn from.

Tonight, K-State students should set some time aside for their own health and safety, and check out Hot, Sexy and Safer.

Bike registration inspires crime

My friend Suzie doesn't read the Collegian, so she said she was suprised when I told her that Parking Services was going to make us register our bicycles by Oct. 1.

"What will it be next?" she asked. "Rollerblade licensing? Reebok permits? Student ID numbers tattooed on our foreheads?"

I thought that was a pretty extreme response. I told her that the licensing was free, and it was being instituted so they could better serve the needs of K-State's biking community.

"And you believed that? You're becoming one of the brainwashed masses, dude," she said. "You need to start doing some drugs, to get deprogrammed."

I acknowledged that maybe I should start doing drugs, but I persisted in pestering her about why she believed bike registration was a bad thing.

"Well, sure, it's free now, but how long is that going to last? It costs me mucho dinero to register my car, honey, and I don't trust Parking Services to have a gush of generosity toward bicyclists.

"Also, why the hell do they need to register bikes? It's just to make it easier to screw us."

I said maybe it was to ticket people who parked their bikes in inappropriate places.

COLUMN
JASON HAMILTON

She stared at me. "Like what inappropriate places? I've seen you lock your little Bridgestone up to trees, mailboxes and no-parking signs!"

Well, I said, there's this handicapped entrance to Kedzie Hall, for example, where people lock up their bikes.

Their bikes get in the way of anyone trying to get up that ramp in a wheelchair.

Those people ought to be ticketed, I said — the bikers, not the people in wheelchairs, of course.

Suzie agreed, but she had more to say.

"OK, Mr. Back-the-bureaucracy, how are they going to ticket people who don't get their bikes registered?"

Well, I said, I suppose they'll do what they always have done — lock the bike up with a K-State Police lock and make you pay the ticket (plus a lock-fee, probably) to get it undone.

"So why can't they just do that to the few people who park their bikes inappropriately?""

She has a point there.

But, despite all my bad experiences with Parking Services, never let it be said that I don't have a great deal of affection for the institution.

Look at it this way, I said. They have to spend money on surveillance to protect the bikes, maintenance for the bike trails and installing new bike racks.

"And taking them out, and putting them back in and taking them out again. They rearrange those suckers every semester, it seems like. I smell pork! I smell big bike-rack contracts!"

That's some nose Suzie's got.

But really, I said, shouldn't the bicyclists support some of this with a registration fee?

"Look around, stupid! Haven't you noticed a crushing, immobilizing parking problem?"

I said I heard there was one, but I didn't know firsthand.

I don't drive to campus because I can't afford the parking permit.

"So, with all of these people driving to campus, they should be encouraging people to bike, not making them pay for it! They should be paying people to bike to campus."

She has a point there, too. Though as long as the registration stays free, I said, shouldn't people go ahead and do it?

"It's free now, but like I said, that'll change. Free this semester, $5 the next, $20 the next. Wake up!"

So I asked her, what do you suggest die-hard bicycle commuters like me do?

"Don't register your bike, for heaven's sake. Get some friends together and invest in a pair of bolt cutters! It's bound to be cheaper in the long run."

So you'd encourage people to break the law, I asked.

"Law schmaw. That ain't no law, it's K-State policy. Break with abandon! You have nothing to lose but your diploma!"

Again, she has a point. I'd hate to encourage anyone to break the law, or even K-State policy.

I'd hate to interfere with the lawful and sensible operations of K-State Parking Services.

But, we must be practical, and bolt cutters can't be that expensive.

U.S.'s future requires study

If television and newspaper headlines are any indication, public debate in this country leans heavily toward the trivial.

If television and newspaper headlines are any indication, public debate in this country leans heavily toward the trivial.

The true tragedy in this is there are many issues out there of importance. There is virtually a complete absence of thought about one issue that will directly influence almost all of us down the line. That is, what will we as a society do 30 years from now?

Today, in our country, more than 2 million jobs a year are being phased out by giant corporations.

New jobs, for the most part, are either low-paying, temporary or part-time. Despite the thought that we can all find a place in the new high-tech industries, there are only so many jobs for computer programmers.

Roughly three things could happen. The first is to follow the status quo.

As the purchasing power of people as a whole is reduced, it will have a domino effect on society, leading to more violent crime, increased racism, and more reactionary sentiment such as the right is already espousing.

This in turn, will lead to war as the leaders look for a way to take the public's interest away from the very real problems it is facing.

COLUMN
LACH FRANQUEMONT

In the end, a large chunk of the world's population may be killed.

One other option is to tighten regulations on large corporations and increase opportunity for small businesses.

Small businesses need to take a leading role in employing the population, depending on the quality and ability to effectively market on the information super-highway.

The advantages of this type of small business is it could be located practically anywhere. This could reduce many of the problems now associated with urban areas and lead to a revitalization of the smaller towns now in decline.

In addition to an increase in small business, I'd like to see an increase in small farms. Instead of paying large chemical companies, these farms could employ more workers and farm in a sustainable manner.

There are currently problems with this happening. The first is laws favoring larger corporations and agribusiness.

In addition, for a large number of small businesses and farms to succeed, a new way of thinking will have to be adopted by the population.

A third option is the one outlined by Jeremy Rifkin in the May-June issue of the Utne Reader. Rifkin pictures a world in which a third sector of employment is created in social work.

In this system, the government would provide a "social wage" to all those employed in non-profit community and environmental organizations.

This system would be beneficial. It would decrease the dependence of the unemployed on welfare and could lead to substantial benefits in the community.

In addition, it would be meaningful work with fairly high job satisfaction.

I find this system, however, somewhat unrealistic. A change over to this would require an even greater overhaul of people's attitudes than the second option would.

The funds for this "social wage" would have to come out of corporate profits which the big boys will hardly like.

Also, I question just how much community service we can have. Would it be enough to solve this country's employment woes?

If you've noticed, the only two options worth looking forward to involve people paying attention and getting involved. Big business wouldn't like the first option either, but I believe they fail to see the implications of the increasing disparity in opportunity and income.

They will fight to hold on to the system that gives them every advantage, and by the time they wake up, it will be too late.

People must begin to pay attention. No matter where you fall on the political spectrum, it is imperative that you have considered the alternatives and have made a rational choice. To do otherwise is not only irresponsible, but downright dangerous.

▶ POLITICIAN'S INTEGRITY

Editor,

This is in response to Wild's opinion titled "Politicians Lack Integrity." In this article, Wild addressed his observations about integrity and politics. I submit that Wild does not know what he is talking or writing about.

He wrote of how he had been a supporter of Clinton and overlooking his "flaws brought to light ... by a smear campaign." Then, after learning those flaws were major, he became disillusioned. All Wild had to do was pay attention to Clinton as he responded to questions during debates and "Town Hall Meetings," and to the speeches he gave to have avoided being so disillusioned.

Not once during Mr. Clinton's campaign did he actually answer a question with any substance.

Instead, he redirected conversations into areas completely unrelated to the issues.

I have observed Mr. Dole and Mr. Gramm for years now, Wild, and they have never been as bad as the man you helped elect to office in 1992.

Sure, they may appear to change directions to and fro as the newspapers would have you believe.

However, if you would take the time to seriously read their speeches firsthand, you would know what each of them really is doing and saying.

You and others like you, who have no idea what it is you are really voting for, are the ones to blame for presidents like we have now.

There is much more you can do, Wild, than be just a campaign worker dazzled by being in the presence of someone important.

You might even try to become a man of integrity and character yourself, and thereby come to know firsthand what one is.

Perhaps then we would vote for you?

Spiketacular nets cash for charities

Theta Xi and Kappa Alpha Theta may have won the trophy this weekend at Spiketacular, but the real winners were two children's charities.

The annual Spiketacular sand volleyball tournament, a philanthropy co-sponsored by Gamma Phi Beta and Beta Theta Pi, raised about $3,000 for the Manhattan Youth Center and Camp Hope, a Topeka camp for children with cancer.

"The checks are still coming in from the various houses, but it looks like we will be able to donate about $1,500 for each charity," said Karen Frayser, senior in biochemistry and Gamma Phi philanthropy chairman.

The event attracted a larger crowd than in past years because for the first time all greek houses were invited to participate in the tournament.

"Personally, I think this year was a lot better than past years," said Darin Hendrixson, junior in interior architecture and Beta philanthropy chairman. "All but three houses participated this year." – by Jeni Pruitt

Ever wander through campus and wonder what that giant fork is? What about those things that look like Legos? Here's your chance to find out.

Three separate, yet related forms come together to form this statue near the southeast corner of Seaton Hall.

Cast in concrete and weighing more than 19 tons, this piece is another example of works of art from the summer school art class more than 20 years ago.

To construct the sculpture, artist Nick Zack poured concrete to achieve the desired shapes and then added stainless steel to represent the inner workings of the concrete sculpture.

"Kreqe-aekyed" and "Kqrefe-aekyad," which are in the area between Thompson and Nichols halls, became part of the K-State collection in 1988.

The sculptures are made of welded steel and are in the minimalist tradition.

Minimalism is the theory or practice in art or design of using the fewest and simplest elements to achieve the greatest effect.

Designed by Douglass Abdell, these works became a part of the K-State collection mostly because of a grant from the Price R. and Flora A. Reid Foundation. Phillip Kassebaum, attorney for the Reid Foundation, first contacted the University in February 1987 about obtaining the first sculpture, "Krequ-Aekyad," for the campus. Later, in June 1987, Kassebaum once again contacted the University about obtaining another sculpture, "Kqrefe-Aefyad," from the foundation.

"Spiral Jade" might sound like the name of an up-and-coming rock group, but in actuality, this railroad axle is between Fairchild and Kedzie Halls.

In 1976, the University purchased the piece from Lee Luppers, a Jesuit at Creighton University in Nebraska, who shaped the steel with an industrial clip hammer.

After the piece was formed, it was placed into a base formed by a railroad car wheel.

The only other professional sculptures that are part of the K-State art collection is the two-piece set "Kreqe-aekyed" and "Kqrefe-aekyad" between Nichols and Thompson halls.

You might see this K-State sculpture only if you're feeling a little bit under the weather.

On the south entrance of Lafene Student Health Center, its creator, Alan Jones, was also a part of a summer school session in the late 1960s.

By using slabs of uncut and unfired bricks, he was able to carve out the motif before firing. A careful observer can still see the holes used while the sculpture was being fired by standing under the piece and looking up.

The 13-foot statue near Justin Hall is the result of a faculty fellowship given to the artist in the 1960s.

John Vogt spent more than a year working on the piece made of stainless steel and weighs more than one ton.

While building the sculpture, Vogt welded the piece creating solid shapes and spaces.

Along with Rex Replogle, Vogt worked as an art instructor for the "Art in Situation" class sponsored by the K-State Fine Arts Council, the College of Arts and Science, the College of Architecture and Design and the Fort Foundation beginning in summer 1969 and continuing until 1971.

The fork near King Hall, often leaves people – possibly even the artist – baffled about its meaning.

"I probably had an idea in mind when I designed it, but I left it untitled. I let people decide for themselves what it is," James Wentz, project designer, was once quoted as saying.

The untitled fork, as well as other pieces on campus, was designed during an "Arts in Situation" summer school class sponsored by the University from 1969 to 1971.

Wentz's piece is the tallest sculpture in the K-State outdoor collection. Made of plastic wood and fiberglass, this 20-foot fork might leave students confused about its purpose, but it certainly does not go unmissed.

From 1911 until the raising of Robert Hudson's statue in 1966, K-State's only statue was of William Alexander Harris.

The statue of Harris, located near Fairchild Hall, was raised by his close friends, legislators and Henry Jackson Waters, president of the Kansas State Agricultural College, K-State's former name.

Harris was born in 1841 in Virginia. Before moving to Kansas in 1865, Harris served as a colonel in the Confederate Army. From 1893 to 1895, he served as U.S. Congressman for Kansas and as a U.S. Senator from 1897 until 1903. At the time of his death in 1909, Harris was a member of the Kansas Board of Regents.

It's knot easy

K-State's rowing team goes the extra mile to develop its program

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

The word "dedication" is often overused in sports. But if college sports fans are looking for athletes who are really dedicated, they need only take a trip to the K-State boathouse.

While their counterparts in other sports get all of the acclaim, members of K-State's rowing program have to keep their program above the water. Besides bettering themselves for the upcoming season, they have to plan and take part in several fund-raisers, all in an effort to make sure they have their oars in the water come September.

At the head of this effort is second-year coach Al Koch, who explained in great detail what the athletes, from the high school program on up, do to ensure they have new equipment in and out of the water.

It's not cheap. With fiberglass boats costing as much as $17,000, they can use all of the money they get.

"We have a lot of different fund-raisers, some of them more effective than others," Koch said Tuesday.

"We do a rent-a-rower program where we rent ourselves out for raking leaves, cleaning windows, moving furniture — general cleaning up. We do something like a walk-a-than or bike-a-than where you get 20 minutes to see how far you can row on one of our rowing machines and you try to get people to pledge so much per 100 meters you row.

"We have a raffle. We try to buy some prizes, get some donated and each of the kids sell raffle tickets and we have an auction at our rowing banquet where we auction broken equipment that we've repaired to where it could be a souvenir."

Many athletes help in the effort of putting the team in the water. The K-State program consists of high school and K-State students.

The advanced men's and women's teams practice five days a week at 6 a.m., while the high school and novice (freshmen) practice in the afternoon.

> "It takes a lot to be able to say, 'Yes, I want to be out for crew, and I'll set aside time for crew practice and I'm available on a given number of weekends for competition.'"
> AL KOCH
> K-STATE ROWING COACH

The high school athletes in the feeder program often graduate and attend K-State to stay with the program. This program has been very successful recently, especially this season.

"We have five kids who graduated from our high school program and then come to K-State," Koch said. "We graduated 11 (high school) kids last year — with five here and two girls on scholarship at KU."

In addition to the activities that need to be done away from practice, there also has to be a tremendous amount of dedication to the team.

"We practice five days a week, and we intend you should make all five," Koch said.

"We have various things that we critique you with if you don't make practice. If you don't make practice, you really hurt the other people in the boat, because if you've only got nine people that make that boat and two of them are missing, you don't train with the same people. And rowing is such a team sport that if you don't practice with the same people day in and day out, you don't train well.

"It takes a lot to be able to say, 'Yes, I want to be out for crew, and I'll set aside time for crew practice and I'm available on a given number of weekends for competition.'"

That dedication has paid off for some of the rowers. After reviewing proposals from several club sports, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics announced this summer that the women's rowing team would be elevated to varsity status, beginning next season.

"With the numbers and the history involved, it was obvious that crew was the right choice," athletic director Max Urick said.

Netters win 2 at Nebraska Tourney

Shana Newell
staff writer

The K-State volleyball team returned to Manhattan Saturday night victorious and confident in its abilities after defeating two powerful Big 10 teams, the University of Wisconsin and Purdue University at the Nebraska Tournament.

"We had two very important wins this weekend," Coach Jim Moore said.

Wisconsin has attended the NCAA playoffs each of the last three years and posed a threat to the Cats in each of their five games this weekend.

K-State faced off against the Badgers Friday night in a best of five match. The Cats came out on top 15-8, 4-15, 15-13, 12-15 and 17-15. The win came late in the fifth match in a nail-biter finish.

"We need to learn how to maintain our focus and stay concentrated throughout the match," Moore said.

The loss of concentration created a tough situation for the Wildcats, forcing them to play down to the wire.

Although they never dominated Wisconsin, they were able to come together enough to pull out the victory.

Sophomore setter Devon Ryning recorded a total of 47 set assists and four service aces against the Badgers.

Junior Toie Young led the Wildcat attack with 17 kills. Senior Jill Dugan added 12 kills, and junior Kate DeClerk and freshman Kimberly Zschau each added 11.

Dugan made a considerable contribution defensively with 22 digs and three block assists against the Badgers.

Junior Kate DeClerk made 17 digs and two block assists, and Young had 15 digs and two block assists. Freshman Valerie Wieck led in the block assists category with five against Wisconsin.

Against the Boilermakers, the Wildcats were able to regroup and attack, winning in three games, 15-8, 16-14, 15-12.

Young and Dugan controlled the game defensively with three block assists each, with Dugan adding 11 digs.

Offensively K-State was led by Zschau and DeClerk. Zschau had 18 kills with a hitting percentage of .333. DeClerk had 16 kills, hitting .483.

Ryning had 53 set assists during the Purdue match and two service aces. Sophomore Val Phillips also had two service aces.

Next weekend, K-State will travel to the Stephen F. Austin Tournament in Nacadoches, Texas. The Wildcats will compete against Arkansas State, Southeastern Louisiana and Southern Mississippi.

"Arkansas State will be another very big match for us," Moore said. "Last year, they made the NCAA playoffs and did very well."

Look for more Wildcats playing their way to the NFL

COLUMN

SHANE McCORMICK

Until recently, most people could only recognize one NFL player who had played football at K-State.

The most common response from most people would be Steve Grogan. Grogan earned his professional stars with the New England Patriots.

But the times, they are a changing.

When the Wildcats were struggling to beat teams like DeVry Technical Institute and Taylor's School of Hairstyling, there weren't many Cat players going to the NFL.

But with success during the past two years, K-State has been sending more players to the professional ranks.

So, let's put this into a simple conditional statement. If the Cats continue to be a successful collegiate football team, then more of their players will be headed to the NFL.

Some of the ex-Cats have had more success than others in the NFL. Here's a look at those players during the past two years who have had their shot in the NFL.

■ Jamie Mendez — Mendez was known as a big hitting safety in his days at K-State. The Philadelphia Eagles recognized this and took him in the NFL draft. But the criticism of Mendez was that he was a bit slow for the NFL. After the preseason, the Eagles released him.

■ Kenny McEntyre — Some scouts thought McEntyre had more physical skills than teammate Thomas Randolph. But McEntyre's professional career would not materialize. He would be released by the Chiefs, then by the Colts.

■ Quentin Neujahr — Neujahr established himself as one of the Big 8's premier centers. His skills recently landed him a job with the Cleveland Browns.

■ Thomas Randolph — Randolph was drafted in the second round by the New York Giants and had an immediate effect in the NFL. As a rookie, Randolph started 10 games, showing he was a worthy second-round draft choice with incredible recovery ability and speed. But at 5-foot-9, Randolph does have problems with the bigger receivers in the NFL.

■ Andre Coleman — Coleman became an instant success in the NFL. As a rookie, he became the first Charger to return two kickoffs for touchdowns in a regular season. He was one of the top kickoff returners in the NFL, returning for nearly 1,300 yards. If that wasn't enough, he was also one of the few bright spots for the Chargers in their Super Bowl loss, returning a kickoff against the 49ers for a touchdown.

■ Barrett Brooks — Brooks was supposed to be a late first-round pick in the NFL draft, but scouts said he lacked concentration, causing Brooks to slip to the second round. It could have been one of the most important steals in the draft. Brooks is a tremendous athlete with very quick feet. As a rookie, Brooks is starting in the left tackle position for Philadelphia.

■ Chad May — We all know why May slipped to the fourth round the draft. But the Vikings truly feel they have found their quarterback of the future. May is going to have to show something better than his preseason play to make me a believer. He was erratic in the preseason, including a 0-8 performance against the Raiders. Maybe a couple years of studying Warren Moon will help.

■ J.J. Smith — Smith was one of the most talked-about Cats this preseason after being picked up as a free-agent by the Kansas City Chiefs. Everybody in the Kansas City area was pulling for Smith to make the team. Smith didn't let them down. He scored four touchdowns in the preseason, including a 50-yard punt return against the Washington Redskins. If given the chance to run the ball with the Chiefs, Smith will break some Chief rushing records.

Which Wildcats have a chance to make it in the NFL next year? Most are tabbing Tim Colston, Percell Gaskins, Chuck Marlow and Dirk Ochs as draft prospects. Colston has been named by some as all-America first-team defense and is expected to be a late first-round pick in next year's draft. But don't be surprised to see some other Cat players find their way to the professional playing field next year.

Season Tickets

ATHLETIC DEPARTMENT ANNOUNCES TICKET SALES

K-State Athletic Director Max Urick announced Friday the University has sold 25,623 season football tickets, eclipsing the previous record for season ticket sales by more than 5,000.

The new mark includes the sale of 17,086 season public and faculty tickets and 8,537 student tickets. K-State's previous record for season tickets was 21,613, set back in 1970. Last year, K-State sold 20,687 season tickets, including 13,186 public and 7,501 students.

"This is very exciting news and a testament to the great fans of Kansas State University," Urick said. "Our season ticket sales are up 23 percent over last year, and I'm not sure any football program in America can match that figure.

"Since Bill Snyder's arrival in 1989, season ticket sales have steadily increased every year. In 1988, K-State sold just 7,175 season tickets, so the 1995 figure represents more than a 250-percent increase in season tickets during a seven-year period. Again, what program in the country can match those numbers?"

K-State's next home game is Sept. 23, when the Wildcats are hosts to Akron in a 6:10 p.m. kickoff at KSU Stadium. Plenty of reserved, single-game tickets still remain for the game at $20 each. There are no general admission seats available.

Southern Culture to headline show at the Bottleneck

Nolan Schramm
staff writer

In today's fast-paced music world, any band that sticks around for more than five years is doing very well.

Southern Culture on the Skids has been around for 10 years. The band, which is described by singer and guitarist Rick Miller as "high-cholesterol, toe-sucking, geek rock" will play tonight at the Bottleneck in Lawrence.

You may also see Santo at the show, an incarnation of a masked, Mexican wrestler who occasionally shows up at SCOTS gigs.

MUSIC (LIVE)

▶ Southern Culture on the Skids will play the Bottleneck in Lawrence tonight. The show starts at 10:30. Cover is $7. The show is open to 18 and older.

Miller moved from North Carolina to California and was immediately attracted to movies like "Santo with the Vampire Woman." Santo was a character in several Mexican movies from the 1960s and '70s, Miller said.

"I couldn't help but be inspired; that's what rock 'n' roll was about," he said.

Many modern rockers take take their image too seriously. Miller said he isn't impressed with most of the music on the market today.

"Most of the stuff today is high-profile and kind of boring. I think they have to relate to the crowd," he said. "Instead of trying to entertain and bring them into their world, they seem very standoffish.

"They're so serious about rock 'n' roll. They don't see the fun and enjoyment in the music," he said.

SCOTS, on the other hand, sees only fun. Case in point: The band's new album, "Dirt Track Date," has tunes like "Voodoo Cadillac," "Greenback Fly" and "8-piece Box."

"Fried Chicken and Gasoline" is a song that devotees of the live SCOTS experience have cherished for nearly a decade. It's part-Tony Joe White swampy blues, part-Slim Harpo hip-shake boogie and part-John Fogerty funky chooglin' strut.

It's a tale of being a long way from home, of missing "a woman who don't miss me" and having nothing but the combined stench of charred poultry and carburetor fumes to keep the highway hypnosis at bay.

Miller calls it weird ... and southern.

"The South has an obsession with people who are different from the norm," he said. "It's fun to write about humorous stuff that's been with you."

The SCOTS view of the world includes everything from teenage make-out artists lookin' for love at the dirt track races to white-trash tent revival preachers, tusslin' with their unrepentant go-go dancer wives.

Southern Culture on the Skids was recently signed to DGC Records, and it has a booking agent in Chicago. It is very possible SCOTS and other national acts could be brought to Manhattan one day, with the right venue.

"The Midwest and South have similar people," Miller said. "They're down to earth, and they like to have a lot of fun."

The show is open to everyone 18 and older, and the cover charge is $7. The show should start around 10:30 p.m.

Clinton criticizes GOP cuts

Associated Press

CARBONDALE, Ill. — President Clinton led an administration-wide attack on proposed GOP education cuts Monday, accusing congressional Republicans of caving in to the bank lobby in voting to ditch his direct college loan program.

Clinton told students at a campus round-table discussion bankers were worse off after a loss of business because of his 1993 legislation. He also said students were better off.

Republicans, in turn, accused the White House of stacking the audience to silence opposing views, excluding one student leader because he showed GOP leanings.

Law student William Karrow, 24, president of the Southern Illinois University graduate student council, said he was bounced from the panel after telling a White House aide he was skeptical about the Clinton loan program.

The White House acknowledged it had screened students on the 12-member panel for their political views.

The student in question didn't cut the mustard, White House spokesperson Mike McCurry said.

But in light of the controversy, he added that it was probably a mistake to exclude him.

"We should have just let him rant and rave," McCurry said.

Clinton's appearance at Southern Illinois University kicked off a four-day administration blitz around the country — by 47 officials including Vice President Al Gore and much of the Cabinet — to criticize proposed Republican cuts in education funds.

The administration said it hopes it can persuade the Senate to soften some of the cuts made by the House. A key vote is planned for Thursday in a Senate subcommittee.

GOP leaders said Clinton is misrepresenting their attempts to close the deficit, and their plans would not rob students of eligibility for loans or interest rate reductions scheduled to take effect in 1998.

"President Clinton and his hired hands have proven that they will say anything in order to save his failed program, even if it means scaring students and their parents," Rep. Bill Goodling, R-Pa., chairperson of the House Education Committee, said.

Clinton said the House's proposed seven-year balanced budget plan would cut educational programs by $36 billion — he called that penny wise and pound foolish — while his 10-year plan would increase spending by $40 billion.

"We shouldn't cut education to balance the budget," Clinton said in his main speech to an audience of about 10,000. "We don't have to do it, and we shouldn't do it."

At the earlier student round-table, Clinton assailed banking interests for pressing the House to vote to dismantle the direct student loan program.

The 1993 program made government loans directly available to students, eliminating banks from the process. Clinton said he wants to expand the program, while Republicans said they want to either cap it or eliminate it with a continued role for banks.

Justices question predator law

Associated Press

TOPEKA— Kansas Supreme Court justices on Monday raised several questions about the state's sexual predator law, including whether anyone confined under the provision would ever be released.

Tom Weilert, a Wichita attorney representing convicted child molester Leroy Hendricks, told the state's highest court the statute violates due process rights.

He also said it subjects a person to punishment twice — once while being confined in prison and again while being confined indefinitely in a state hospital.

"Mr. Hendricks' career as a sex predator dates back to 1955," Assistant Sedgwick County District Attorney David Lowden said. He said Hendricks was placed in a state hospital operated by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services under civil proceedings for treatment, not punishment.

The sexual predator statute, passed by the Legislature in 1994, allows the state to commit a person convicted of violent sexual crimes to a state hospital upon release from prison. They are to undergo treatment at the Larned Correctional Mental Health Facility until psychologists decide it is reasonable likelihood that they will never commit another sex crime.

Hendricks has a lengthy history of committing sex crimes.

In 1984, he was charged with three counts of indecent liberties with a child. In exchange for pleading guilty to two of the charges, the state dropped the third.

He had been in prison twice before — once for molesting two young boys while a carnival worker in 1960 and again shortly after being paroled in 1965 for molesting a 7-year-old girl.

He was scheduled for release from prison on Sept. 11, 1994, but the state filed a petition to declare him a sexually violent predator.

"Mr. Hendricks has been assigned by the court to the Kansas sexual predator program, and that program is housed at Larned," Social and Rehabilitation Services spokeswoman Barb Conant said.

Weilert said during the court arguments a similar law in Washington state has been declared unconstitutional by federal court in Seattle.

"The state is not required to show mental illness before incarceration," Weilert said.

Under the statute, people must have been convicted of sexual crime and must be diagnosed as having a personality disorder or a mental abnormality to be declared a sexual predator. A psychologist also must say they are likely to repeat their crimes.

Weilert said no psychologist would offer an opinion that such a person is unlikely to commit another sexual crime because of potential civil liability.

He also said an individual does not have to be found mentally ill, as defined by law, to be placed in the program. Under Kansas law, a person can have a personality disorder and not be considered mentally ill.

"I'm interested in how Mr. Hendricks and other individuals incarcerated under this act ever come out," Justice Fred N. Six said.

Under the law, Hendricks would be evaluated every year to determine whether he can be released.

Lowden said not every case would require long-term treatment.

"Apparently, there are mental illnesses that can be treated with drugs," he said.

"The problem is whether this is punitive or not," Allegrucci said.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

should be in uniform and have short hair," Watson said. "For females especially, absolutely keep going the speed limit and follow the traffic regulations, but proceed to a stop where you and the officer can be seen by the public."

Unless the officer is driving a marked police car, you are within your right to not pull over until it is safe, Watson said.

"I can guarantee that no one in my department will pursue charges when the driver takes these precautions. We understand that there are risks involved and that people have to protect themselves," Watson said.

Watson, who considers the Friday assault on a K-State student as very serious, said he believes communicating safety ideas is the best defense against future assaults.

"There are a lot of safety products out there, but I wouldn't recommend any of them over using what's between your ears," Watson said. "The best additional precaution, nowadays, is a cell phone. That way if someone is following you or attempting to make a stop, you can contact the law."

After putting out an attempt to locate the suspect, Watson has received calls from surrounding agencies. He is presently following the leads available.

Stewart said he believes that by not taking situations like his assault for granted it will make students safer.

"I just want people never to assume anything, like that they are safe. If you're suspicious at all, it's better to just be safe," Stewart said. "We college students tend to think of ourselves as invincible, but we're not."

Traveling with a friend also makes it difficult to be singled out, Stewart said.

"People also think 8:30 a.m. — that stuff doesn't happen, but it does. It really served as a wake-up call for how vulnerable we can be," Stewart said. "This type of thing doesn't only happen at 2 a.m. It happens during the day and right before your eyes, so it's important to be aware."

THEATER

"For me, as a theater person, it's so striking to see a theater art so concerned with the issues of their society. Israeli theater represents a model for our theater and the support," Fedder said. "Small wonder that Israeli theater is so exciting and compelling and worth our study and emulation."

Bill Richter, assistant provost for international programs, said he believed intense exchanges, like the series, can boost the international experiences for students and faculty at K-State.

"I do think this is a unique project and it takes this kind of energy and creativity to promote this type of international focus in our programs," he said.

Connie Noble, office manager for assistant provost of international programs, helped organize and usher patrons of the series.

"It's open to anybody," Noble said. "The speakers are all K-State related and come to share their specific international experiences."

ROTC

High school seniors and any student currently enrolled here at K-State may enroll in the ROTC program.

"I believe K-State ROTC would benefit students who aren't sure what to do with their lives or if they're not sure about joining the Army," Traynham said.

Some of the overall benefits students will get from enrolling in ROTC include leadership development, a diversity of friends and scholarship opportunities, Traugutt said

"When they graduate after four years of ROTC, they have a full-time job waiting for them as a commissioned officer," he said.

During the last 10 years, ROTC program funding has been cut throughout Kansas universities and colleges.

Wichita State University, Fort Hays State University and Emporia State University have closed existing ROTC programs. K-State, the University of Kansas and Pittsburg State University continue to offer ROTC programs.

MISSILES

refused to say what the missiles hit. Although they damaged Serb facilities, he said, the air defenses were still working.

"If suitable, we may well use (Tomahawks) again, as we will use other types of weapons," Murray said.

Serb television in Banja Luka said Monday night five of the Tomahawks hit radio relay stations in the Kozara mountains, 30 miles north of Banja Luka. They caused massive damage, the report said without elaborating or saying where the other missiles hit. There is no footage of the damage.

In southern New Mexico, pilots of F-117A "stealth" fighters at Holloman Air Force Base were alerted that they might be called in for NATO missions over Bosnia, officials said. The officials gave no timeline for deployment of the $46 million black, bat-winged radar-evading airplanes.

The Bosnian government, meanwhile, said its army captured the village of Vozuca in central Bosnia, giving it control of a direct route linking the northern government stronghold of Tuzla with its holdings in central Bosnia.

"Our forces had a lot of success yesterday and today in the region of Vozuca and, I hope, in other regions," Bosnian Premier Haris Silajdzic said.

Bosnian state television also reported government army gains near the Serb-held town of Jajce in central Bosnia. Bosnian Serb media said Jajce was shelled on Monday.

Under Western pressure, the Bosnian government promised Sunday not to attack Serbs around Sarajevo if they withdraw their heavy weapons.

The U.N. commander in the former Yugoslavia, Gen. Bernard Janvier, met with Mladic on Sunday to try to convince him to withdraw the weapons. Mladic refused, and NATO launched the cruise missile attack hours later.

NATO did not fire cruise missiles on Monday, but jets attacked Serb positions. The Bosnian Serb military said "dozens of planes" dropped bombs near Sarajevo and Banja Luka.

NATO said the Serbs fired missiles at the planes, but all returned safely.

Since Aug. 30, NATO has bombarded an array of Serb targets across Bosnia, including ammunition depots and command and communication centers.

The campaign was launched two days after a shell exploded in Sarajevo, killing 38 people, and was designed to force the Serbs to ease their siege of Sarajevo and halt all attacks on U.N. "safe areas."

ed at the beginning of the script.

"They are given to keep people excited and enthusiastic," Hartin said.

The free vacation for two is possible after several forms are filled out and mailed. Each form requires a shipping and handling fee of anywhere from $3.95 to $19.99. After several shipping and handling fees, additional fees will be required from participants for airfare and other added costs. Although trips are at a discounted price, they are not free with the purchase of a coupon book.

The coupons are worth the advertised $1,500, but most of the coupons are buy-one-get-one-free types.

Students have mixed emotions about the coupon book. Some said they like the book and don't care about the scams, and others said they don't want to take part in it.

"The reason I didn't want them is because they make it seem like you won something. It sounded like a scam. I said, 'I don't think so,'" Becki Blankenship, senior in secondary education, said.

"The coupons are a good deal if you have a lot of roommates. I don't think I got robbed," James Turner, junior in construction science, said.

The Flint Hills Breadbasket contacted the Riley County Police Department to investigate the script and promotions. No fault was found after carefully reviewing the wording of the script.

Honorary addresses homelessness

Jeremy Crabtree
staff reporter

No electricity. No food. No water. No home.

That's the situation for many homeless people.

SPURS, a sophomore honorary, is trying to combat this situation by raising money and awareness with a sleep-out at 7 p.m. Thursday in the free-speech zone between the K-State Student Union and Seaton Hall.

"We got the idea last spring," Amy Martin, SPURS vice president, said. "I believe that one of the members got the idea from something he had done before with his youth group. He said it was really successful when his group did it before, so we thought that we would give it a try.

Martin said the group of 30 to 35 people will be going through many of the same experiences that homeless people have to deal with every day.

"We will be sleeping in cardboard boxes and won't have any of the conveniences that we are used to," she said. "This includes no food. We told them they could bring a sleeping bag, but that is about it.

"We don't have a goal for the first year. We just want to do what we can to make the situation better."

Along with collecting canned and paper goods at the sleep-out for the Manhattan Emergency Shelter, SPURS members said they hope to be able to share the experience of sleeping in a box without any food with other students.

"No. 1, this will draw attention that people actually live this way," said Keri Stoner, sophomore in food and nutrition-exercise science and SPURS member.

"It's easy to overlook the problem, especially here at college. This will get us more aware of what really goes on. Just by relating our experience to other people will help bring some attention to the problem," she said.

Stoner said the Manhattan High School National Honor Society will be working with SPURS at the sleep-out.

"With the Manhattan High School National Honor Society involved, this will help reach people locally," Stoner said.

"It will be just another way for people to share with others what it is really like. The students from the high school can take their experience and relate it to their friends, just like we can," she said.

Other plans for the sleep out include a program with several speakers, scheduled to start at 8 p.m.

The executive director of the Manhattan Emergency Shelter will be at the event, and Mayor Edith Stunkel will speak at 8 p.m. Some city commissioners may also attend.

"This is just a way to get the community more involved," Martin said. "It is open to everyone. We encourage students to just come by and see what is going on. People from the community are very welcome to come also, because this affects everyone."

▶ CITY COMMISSION

Ordinance may allow increased private meetings

Cori Cornelison
staff reporter

The city is going to prepare a draft of an ordinance that could change the city commission's quorum to do business from three to four.

The Kansas Open Meetings Act says a majority of a quorum can't meet in private to discuss public business, which means no two city commissioners can meet to discuss city business without having an open meeting.

Changing the number of people required for a quorum from three to four would allow two members of the commission to meet without calling a public meeting.

However, it would mean four commissioners would have to be present at meetings in order to take action.

At a work session Tuesday night, city commissioners heard from the public and other invited guests on this issue.

Bernie Hayen, director of special and technical services for the league of municipalities, said Lawrence, Gardner, Junction City, Park City and Cimarron are some Kansas cities that have changed their quorums to four members.

Robert Ritter, who was a Junction City commissioner for nine years, said the morale of city commissioners and staff in Junction City changed when the commission changed the quorum from three to four.

He said meetings accelerated, morale improved and city commissioners were able to reach satisfactory decisions.

Ritter said government is the only business that does not allow communication between executives.

"That's just sheer stupidity," he said. "How can you run things if you can't discuss?"

Ritter said the only drawback of having a quorum of four is that four commissioners must be present to take action.

Helen Roser, Manhattan resident, said the commission has her whole-hearted support for the quorum change. She was an opponent of the change because she said she felt the community did not trust the commissioners talking in private. But she said she has changed her mind.

"I have watched this community in action, and I am convinced that you have bent-over-backward and have not taken any action unless the public was aware," she said.

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

Lisa Kushell puts a condom over the head of Dean Hall, senior in computer engineering, Tuesday evening in Forum Hall. Kushell was at K-State to speak about safe sex practices during the speech entitled "Hot, Sexy and Safer II."

Speaker warns, entertains

Katie Thomas
staff reporter

More than 250 students gathered Tuesday night to have a group sexual experience.

Lisa Kushell, comic and actress from Los Angeles, presented "Hot, Sexy and Safer II" at Forum Hall. The program was designed to challenge students to think about sex and their bodies.

"As children, we are not embarrassed by our bodies. It is only as adults we learn to be embarrassed," Kushell said.

There are two types of sex, safe sex and safer sex. Safe sex is a sexual experience with yourself, while safer sex is a sexual experience with another human being without the influence of drugs and alcohol, she said.

"Drinking and sex do not mix," Kushell said.

Most bad experiences and date rapes occur when alcohol is involved, she said.

Students risk their reputations, dignities and lives when they mix alcohol and sex.

"If someone has been drinking, please take their keys, call a cab or let them sleep over," Kushell said.

The risk also includes sexually transmitted diseases.

"We didn't start talking about them until HIV and AIDS," Kushell said.

At one point, high-risk groups were identified and anyone not in those groups thought they had nothing to worry about, she said.

"I'm personally sick of stereotyping," she said. "The disease doesn't go to groups. It is going to the people who put themselves at risk."

One way to be safe is to use a condom.

"A condom can fit any man," Kushell said.

To prove her point, she put a condom over a student's head.

"I felt safe," Dean Hall, senior in computer engineering, said.

Another way to be safe is to be sexual and sensual without intercourse, she said

"There doesn't have to be intercourse to have sex," she said.

Kushell also said open, honest and verbal communication in a relationship is important.

"It's much easier to tell someone what you want," she said.

Talking to each other helps the couple to be less vulnerable and

Some members of Congress are planning to put traffic police on the information superhighway.

Senate and the House of Representatives have both passed bills that would grant federal authorities greater power to prosecute Internet users who distribute obscene material through a computer network as well as users who distribute indecent material to minors over the Internet.

The bills, known as the Communications Decency Act of 1995, are now in a conference committee to reconcile differences between the House and Senate versions. If both houses approve the reconciled bill, it will be sent to President Clinton for a signature or a veto.

The push for federal legislation regarding indecent and obscene material began when Sen. John Exon, D-Neb., introduced the measure as an amendment to a telecommunications bill that was being debated in the Senate chamber, Russ Rader, Exon's press secretary, said.

Exon and his supporters said they believe the bill, which is referred to commonly as the Exon bill, would offer such protection by allowing people to file complaints about computer users who distribute obscene and indecent materials to children through computer networks.

Such materials could conceivably take the form of e-mail, computer graphics and posts to bulletin boards and newsgroups, Rader said.

KSU professor attends, presents at conference

Sara Edwards
staff writer

While Hillary Clinton was making headlines at the U.N. Women's Conference, a K-State professor was also playing an active role.

Linda Thurston, associate professor in special education, attended the conference to present a seminar on women, work and education.

Thurston worked with women from many countries, including China, Finland and Pakistan as part of her panel. The group exchanged many ideas on work and education. She said she hopes to keep in touch with the women.

Thurston said that the colorful variety of people had a lasting effect on her. Many of the women dressed in their native clothing.

"Although they look different and speak different languages, they all cared about the same thing — the issues," Thurston said.

Thurston submitted her application a year ago, hoping to attend the conference, which took place between Aug. 30 and Sept. 8.

There were actually two conferences. The U.N. conference, which involved governmental issues, took place in Beijing. Thurston attended the Non-Governmental Organizations Conference in Huairou, China.

The NGO Conference focused on workshops and cultural events. There were bands, circus performers, a peace tent and grassroots organizers. Areas in the forum were dedicated to different areas in the world such as North America and Europe or Southeast Asia.

"Local decisions have an impact on people all over the world," Thurston said.

The conference focused on education, health and training for women. The conference also celebrated the girl-child, Thurston said.

Thurston said they used the term girl-child because in many countries, boys are still thought of as being more valuable. Girls are often malnourished, uneducated and sometimes even sold by their parents into prostitution.

Thurston said she felt that although many countries still had a long way to go, this conference was helping women make progress.

Thurston was also concerned that people in the U.S. take material things for granted.

"It made me think about what I do with my money because it influences

▶ AIR-TRAFFIC COMPUTER FAILS, AFFECTS WORLD'S BUSIEST AIRPORT

CHICAGO (AP) — The main computer at the Federal Aviation Administration's Midwest air traffic control center failed again Tuesday, forcing a slowdown at airports across the country, authorities said.

Most of the affected flights were those bound for O'Hare.

By noon, the computer outage was causing delays of 30 to 45 minutes at O'Hare International Airport, Howard said. She said the delays probably would increase if the computer systems don't get back up to speed.

Delays at O'Hare, the world's busiest airport, typically cause backups elsewhere in the nation.

FAA spokeswoman Tanya Wagner confirmed that controllers switched over to a backup computer system while technicians searched for the cause of the trouble, but did not have additional details at midday.

Word of the latest in a series of computer breakdowns at the Aurora center came first from the National Air Traffic Controllers Association.

The FAA announced on Aug. 1 that it would install new computer systems in Chicago, Cleveland, Dallas, New York and Washington by mid-1997.

▶ PUBLISHER REPEALS PHOTO BAN

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The publisher of a weekly business newspaper has backed off a decision to ban photographs depicting Iraqis, Iranians and Vietnamese on the front page because they were un-American.

Ted Owen, publisher of the San Diego Business Journal, said Monday he has instructed editors to use pictures of any and all ethnic groups that are relevant to the story.

Several staff members said last week that Owen found such cover photos un-American. They said he instituted the ban after a Sept. 4 special section featured front-page photos of three local businessmen of Iranian and Iraqi descent. One editor resigned over the policy.

"We regret any ill will or bad feelings brought about as a result of this unfortunate episode," Owen said in a statement.

Staffers told the San Diego Union-Tribune in today's editions that Owen rescinded the policy after media attention and outrage from some in the business community.

▶ BICYCLE FAIR CANCELED

The K-State bicycle fair that was scheduled for today has been canceled.

Russell Fortmeyer, chairman of the Student Senate Parking Committee, said the fair was canceled because of planning problems. It might be rescheduled, but a date has not yet been set.

The fair was supposed to help inform students of bicycle regulations and the need to register their bicycles.

Bicycle registration is free and can be done at Parking Services in Burt 128 or by the K-State Police in East Stadium.

After Nov. 1, students who have not registered their bicycles will be ticketed.

▶ TOWEL REMOVED FROM PATIENT

MIAMI (AP) — A man underwent surgery in 1988 because of internal bleeding.

The operation stopped the bleeding but not the pain.

Samuel Hernandez went back to the surgeon in 1990. The diagnosis this time: gas.

In 1993, Hernandez, a social worker, went to another doctor, who X-rayed his stomach.

The doctor discovered the source of Hernandez's pain for the past five years. A surgical towel that had been left inside his abdomen. The doctor removed the towel.

Hernandez sued the original surgeon and the hospital for unspecified damages, alleging negligence and claiming the number of towels used in the 1988 procedure was deliberately misrepresented in the operating room notes.

But by the time the suit was filed, the state's four-year statute of limitations had run out.

A judge threw the case out.

Last week, however, a state Court of Appeals reinstated the lawsuit.

The court ruled that Hernandez deserved an extension because he alleged the hospital employees kept him from discovering the source of his problem.

▶ ROACHES MISSING, POISONED

Forty cockroaches were reported poisoned and 35 missing from the Department of Entomology in Waters Hall Saturday morning. According to a K-State police report, a cage containing the missing roaches was later found. A criminal damage report was filed, with damage totaling $1,125.

The dead insects, reportedly from Madagascar, were worth about $15 apiece. The Department of Entomology had no comment.

Awareness, fun at Lafene

Rachelle Harkness
staff writer

Dunk tanks and dart throws will be available for students at Lafene Health Center today.

Lafene will be host to a carnival to inform students about the different services it offers.

"This is an opportunity for all students, freshmen and seniors to get acquainted with Lafene," Kelley Fink, R.N. and health educator, said.

Drawings for T-shirts and sweatshirts will also be available. Other prizes available for students will include a free trip to Kansas City International Airport from KCI Roadrunner, movie and dinner passes, and I Can't Believe It's Yogurt will have 200 free samples.

Throughout the carnival, Lafene's staff will be available to answer any questions students might have. Staff will also be giving tours of Lafene's 13 departments.

"I haven't ever gone to the carnival, but this year I've heard a lot about it and plan to stop by between classes," Amy Coulson, junior in marketing, said.

Lafene's services are constantly changing, and it's important students are aware of these changes.

Hopefully the carnival will help educate students about Lafene and give them a positive attitude toward it, Cindy Burke, R.N., M.S., said.

"Sometimes people have a negative feeling toward Lafene. We want to let students know that we are there for them," Burke said.

The carnival has been around for three years, and the staff hopes this will be another successful year.

Burke, Fink and Reita Currie, R.N., were the primary planners for the carnival. Other committees also helped plan the carnival.

Sponsors for the carnival include I Can't Believe It's Yogurt, Kansas State Bank, and KCI Roadrunner.

The carnival will be from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. today on the northwest side of Lafene.

Lizard devours exhibit

Associated Press

APPLE VALLEY, Minn. — Maureen, a Komodo dragon at the Minnesota Zoo, kept turning up her nose at the white rats she was offered. But when a pink flamingo made the mistake of dropping in, Maureen found it irresistible.

One leg and some pink feathers were all that was left.

At least Maureen is eating, zoo officials said Monday. She had been finicky about the white rats, quail and chicken on her menu.

"This was a gourmet meal for her," zoo spokeswoman Jackie Northard said.

Maureen and Doni — two 70-pound Komodo dragons from Indonesia — are the zoo's star attractions. Doni has been eating anything put in front of him since the lizards arrived in July.

The flamingo, which was in an adjacent exhibit, was devoured Friday night or Saturday morning.

"Normally they don't fly out of the exhibit," Northard said. "Once or twice a year, one will fly out, and we know that it's time to clip their feathers again. They've never become dinner before."

Komodo dragons, an endangered species, can grow up to 10 feet long and weigh 300 pounds.

Unlike most lizards, they are meat-eaters and have been known to eat humans. They have serrated teeth and powerful jaws.

In the wild, deer and wild boar are among their favorites.

Kansas team wins national design award in aviation

▶ Team, described as outstanding, designs passenger plane. Competition focuses on involvement from universities and communities.

J. Scot
staff reporter

Students and faculty from K-State, the University of Kansas and Wichita State University were part of a joint team selected as national winners in the first General Aviation Design Competition for U.S. aeronautical and engineering universities.

"The Kansas joint team was outstanding," Mary Sandy, director of Virginia Space Grant Consortium, said.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration, in collaboration with the Federal Aviation Administration and the general aviation industry, sponsored the competition.

"Through three schools, we designed the Shrike, a two, four or six passenger plane," said Brent Carpani, senior in mechanical engineering and member of the design team.

The design competition was created and funded by both NASA and FAA.

"The two goals of this competition are to get the university community involved in the revitalization of general aviation and to provide real-world design and development opportunities," Sandy said.

Sandy said the judges were very impressed with the team efforts by all three Kansas universities.

The contest challenged teams of undergraduate or graduate students, working with faculty advisors, to address design challenges for general aviation aircraft and related transportation systems.

"The whole purpose of this competition is to generate revitalization ideas for general aviation," said Allen Cogley, professor in mechanical engineering and project adviser for K-State.

Kansas is traditionally an aviation state, and winning this competition means a lot, he said.

"We want to maintain this reputation," Cogley said.

The purpose of having a joint team was to stop the boasting and competing between the universities, he said.

"If Kansas is going to compete with California and Massachusetts, we need to stop competing with each other and work together as a team," Cogley said.

NASA and FAA decided to make this an annual competition, allowing students to participate in a national effort to develop technologies for an aircraft transportation system for smaller aircraft.

"They want small business owners to fly rather than drive to their destination in a plane that is reasonably priced and easier to fly and train in," said Doreen Comerford, graduate student in human factor psychology and member of the design team.

K-State is already making plans for competition next year.

"We will participate in the same manner as last year with a joint team, and we're going to win again," Comerford said.

For taking first place, the participating departments of the joint Kansas team shared a $5,000 award.

The student design team members shared a $3,000 award.

"Each university should be proud of its accomplishment and its teaming effort. Kansas, as a state, should be proud of its team," Sandy said.

Second place and a $2,000 award went to the design team from Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University, Daytona Beach, Fla.

Third place and a $1,000 award went to Mississippi State University. An honorable mention went to the UPM Design Group, made up of members from the University of Virginia, Charlottesville, Va., the Pratt Institute at Brooklyn, N.Y., and the Mallen Research Corporation of Charlottesville, Va.

Recruiting for next year has already begun.

Any student can participate, although it is preferred that the student is a senior or graduate student.

For more information about next year's joint team and competition, call the mechanical engineering office at 532-5610.

Communications Decency Act of 1995 limits free flow of information

The issue is one of free speech – or more accurately, the free flow of information.

The Communications Decency Act of 1995, now in Conference Committee in the U.S. Congress, is simply a bad idea.

This legislation, sponsored by Sen. John Exon, D-Neb., seeks to crack down on perceived problems of obscenity on the Internet.

But who is to decide what is obscene?

Local standards, the traditional arbiters of defining what is obscenity, simply don't apply to a global network where Tokyo and Amsterdam are just as local as Aggieville.

The Internet is a global medium that does not respect international boundaries, borders or local social mores.

Even if Exon was successful in putting all of the Internet pornographers in the United States behind bars, what is to stop those offenders from setting up shop in, say, Mexico or Europe, where pornography standards aren't as strict as they are here, and then freely shipping it back across the border with impunity?

The truth is, what we in the United States call "pornography" isn't obscene at all in other parts of the world.

And Federal Regulation certainly won't stop little Internet-literate Johnny from connecting up his computer to dirty picture archives in Europe.

One misguided way the act seeks to control the spread of this bad information is by making information carriers responsible for information carried over their networks.

This would mean that a service provider, like K-State, could be responsible if someone downloaded child pornography over University lines.

And realistically, there isn't much K-State could do to protect itself or prevent such an action from happening, short of clamping down hard on the free flow of information and closely monitoring everything that flows over its lines. So much for the free exchange of ideas. Are you watching, Big Brother?

Traditionally, media carriers have not been liable for the information carried over their equipment.

Southwestern Bell, for instance, is not responsible if little Johnny calls up a 1-900-SEX-LINE. The same should be true for Internet carriers as well.

In the case of phone sex lines, concerned parents can opt to have a 1-900 call blocker placed on their phone if they want to keep Johnny from calling sex lines.

Similar options exist for the Internet as well, with software now out on the market that prevents Johnny from connecting his computer with known pornography sites.

The issue is one of free speech — or more accurately, the free flow of information. The Exon Act seeks to censor information. And we have learned from long experience that once you start drawing lines around what information can be shared, then our right to communicate freely begins to dwindle.

To help stop the Communications Decency Act, call, write or e-mail your elected represenative in Washington and let them know how you feel about this legislation.

Quite frankly, if you don't like the information that you encounter on the Internet, you can always change the channel.

But don't try to legislate that information away.

Religious choices of individuals

DEMAND RESPECT FROM OTHERS

I got waylaid outside the K-State Student Union last week on my way to class. It took me all weekend to get hacked about it, but now I am. So here it is.

The condition of my soul is my business, not the business of some guy with slick hair and a shiny suit. Actually, his suit wasn't shiny; he was wearing jeans and a flannel shirt. But his hair looked slick to me.

He came from the crowd like a Tomahawk missile.

I'm sure he felt that God had landed a beam of light on my forehead, directing him to me. (If that was the case, let me say, God, you've done much better work. That tongue of fire thing from the Old Testament was real impressive.)

Before I knew what was happening, he had my attention and was asking me if I knew where my soul would be in the event of the second coming, which is eminent.

I was very tempted to ask if he had some inside knowledge he'd care to share with me, but I didn't.

Instead I took the coward's way out and said I appreciated his concern but I was really, really late. Then I fled with my soul in my throat.

Why did this bug me? I don't know. Depending on who you ask, either a) I'm in jeopardy of spending eternity in a lake of burning oil, and I know it, or b) I just have a really well-developed sense of personal space. Personally, I think it's a bit more complicated than that.

KADY GUYTON

Before I get any mail denouncing me as a heathen, let me clear up one thing: My parents are both youth ministers, and my brother has spent close to a year overseas doing mission work. I've been baptized and I'm familiar with the Bible (not as familiar as I probably should be, but I can find the gospels).

I have nothing against religion or Christianity. I was raised on it. But this particular aspect of the faith has always bugged me.

I was never comfortable sharing my beliefs with perfect strangers; it just seemed intrusive. I always felt on a par with the Jehovah's Witnesses, exactly where I did not want to be.

To me, the whole question is very personal, not one to be made by a stranger in a mall.

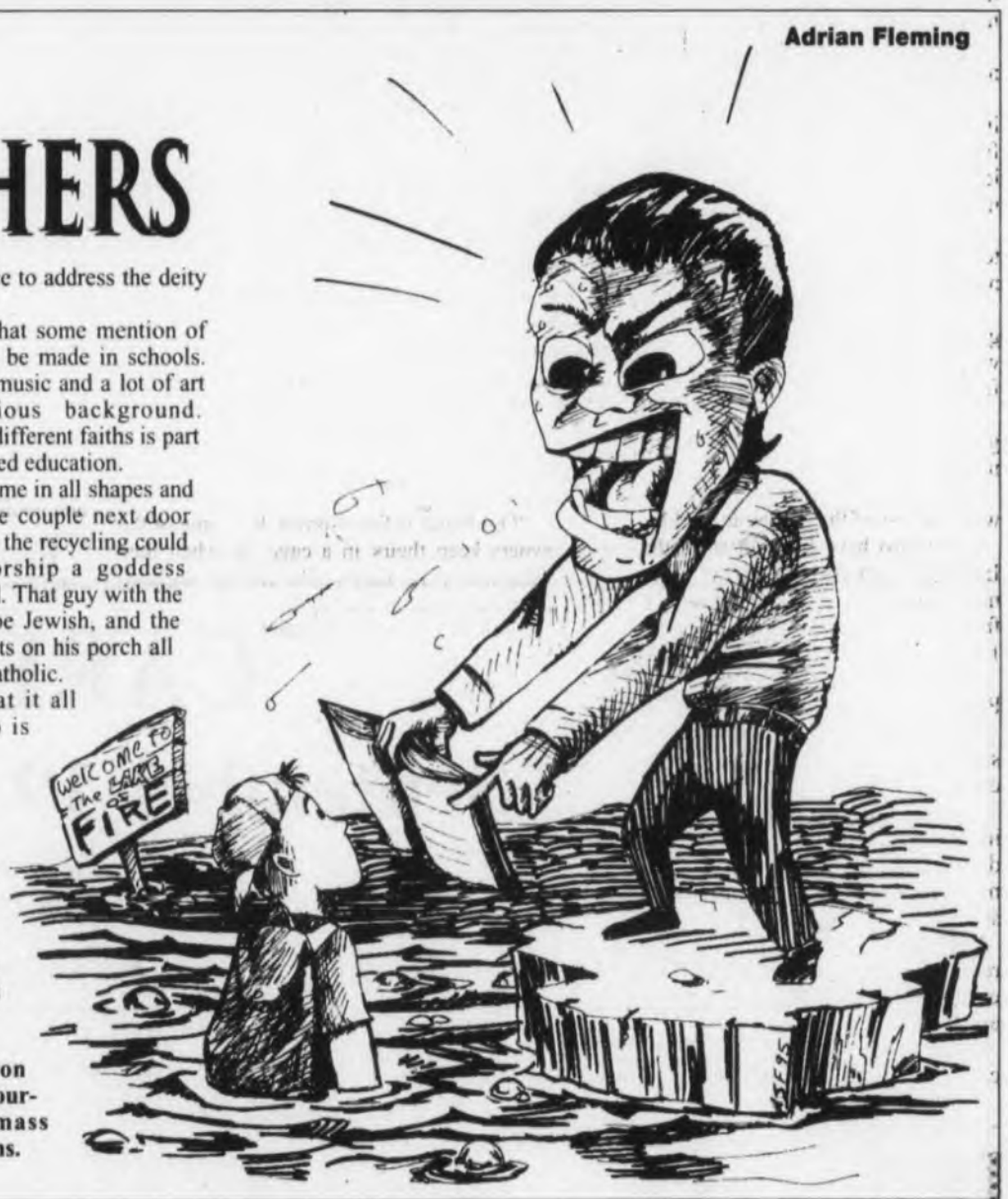
I also feel it's not something I want to share with a guy in front of the Union. My spiritual life is well in hand, thank you, and I don't think Earl from Birmingham needs to know about it.

This country was founded on religious freedom — God, gold and glory and all that. Whether I pray in my living room, naked in a field, or in All Faiths Chapel shouldn't matter one bit to anyone else.

I try to respect all the religions. Every one of them was founded with the belief that they are the way, the truth and the light, and I'm certainly not going to argue.

To that end, I'm all for a moment of silence in schools as opposed to an out-loud prayer.

This country is not as predominantly Christian as it was 30 or 40 years ago, and people should be given the chance to address the deity of their choice.



I also feel that some mention of religion should be made in schools. Most classical music and a lot of art has a religious background. Knowledge of different faiths is part of a well-rounded education.

Believers come in all shapes and sizes. That nice couple next door who pick up all the recycling could very well worship a goddess instead of a god. That guy with the Harley might be Jewish, and the old man who sits on his porch all day could be Catholic.

I think what it all boils down to is privacy and respect — the privacy to make your own choice and the respect to recognize that other people might make a different one.

Teachers, students challenged equally

Equality, contrary to popular belief, is not always a noble aspiration for a country to follow. In seeking to span the gaps within our society such as race and sex, the national conscience has ignored one of the greatest determining factors of what a person will become: intelligent.

Intelligence in our society merely falls under a personal category, ignoring the truth that different facets of intelligence exist. Following the notion of equality in education, every American has the right to what was once a foremost public education.

As any student of American history knows, education was once a benefit available only for the exclusive class of America. As time went on and the obligation to live up to the written ideals of our Constitution grew, the product of American education grew in size to the point where it exists today. Our product, because of this growth, has lagged for some time behind that of other industrialized countries. Often-cited reasons for this decline include lethargic students, violence and lack of state preparation spiraling back to grammar school.

However, I believe the core of a student's educational experience must be examined before the other aforementioned areas. The preparation teachers undergo to be certified as professionals is one of the roots of the problem.

In order to enter into the College of Education at K-State, a student must take two entry-level classes and pass the Pre-Professional Skills Test. The PPST is a test that examines three areas: reading, writing and mathematics. The questions on this test are easy enough that any high school graduate should be able to pass the exam, yet some students must take the test over a few times in order to receive the adequate, state-mandated scores required to pass and be admitted into the education program.

COLUMN

JUSTIN WILD

The first concern that arises is, simply, the quality of education a child will receive from an individual who had difficulty passing a basic exam. A teacher who could not pass a basic skills exam does not have the right to ask a student to do the same, nor does that educator have a right to question why education is in a state of decay in our nation.

The second area of reform needed in the training of teachers, which I'm referring to on a broad scale, is the preparation spent in the collegiate classroom, preparation that would benefit a future teacher. A teacher training at K-State will only receive 30 hours of teacher aiding and one semester of student teaching with the age group of students they intend to teach. The rest of the extensive training is spent among peers, testing out teaching scenarios and learning how to deal with problems on a textbook-only basis, therefore taking out the unpredictable human element of teaching.

These points lead back to two great factors every teacher should possess: intelligence and intellect. Intelligence is knowledge, and intellect is the wisdom to use it in context and make the knowledge grow and change over time as new ideas come to light.

Teachers' basic intelligence is tested by the PPST, and their intellect is challenged by the classroom, both public and collegiate. When one of these two variables is missing from the equation, we come up with the wrong answer to a problem which has been growing for years.

Although no two people can truly be equal, the belief in equality is one that is benevolent, and is also, in turn, a sharp thorn. On a basic level, a teacher and student should share equal skills. An educator is not helping a student by expecting standards that they themselves may not be able to reach.

Editor,

This is in response to the police reports in Monday's Collegian. Of the 10 reports I read that day, eight of them involved DUIs.

It's time these people grow up and take responsibility for their actions. Mommy and Daddy might be able to bail you out when you're short on beer money, but not when you're in jail for manslaughter.

There's something to be said about this society's attitude toward drinking here: "I can drink, but I don't have to think."

Maybe we should throw all these people into one big parking lot and let them play "drunk crash up derby?"

Please, don't drink and drive.

▶ PROTESTING INJUSTICE

Editor,

I would like to applaud Erin Mansur-Smith's appeal to President Clinton and other readers of the K-State Collegian to pardon Leonard Peltier for his alleged role in the murder of two FBI agents on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

The case of Peltier is certainly not unique.

The widespread violation of human rights around the world has encouraged me, like Smith, to pick up the pen in protest.

As a member of Amnesty International, I write directly to government officials urging them to release individuals imprisoned solely for their religious beliefs, non-violent expression of their political ideology or ethnic origin; to abolish the death penalty and other forms of cruel and inhuman punishment; and to end extra-judicial executions and "disappearances."

All appeals written to government officials by thousands of Amnesty activists in 150 countries throughout the world urge them to make individuals accountable for the human rights violations they commit.

Just as thousands of people in Europe have objected to the way that America's criminal justice system has treated Peltier, we in the U.S. must also be willing to stand up for the rights that are continually denied to men, women and children in other countries.

Margaret Meade is quoted as saying, "Never doubt that a small group of thoughtful, committed citizens can change the world; indeed, it is the only thing that has."

Organizations such as Amnesty International offer students an opportunity to make the world a better place to live in.

I would encourage any students who want to make a difference to get involved in the local Amnesty group here on campus.

▶ ACADEMICS

Program assists advisers

Jonathan A. Yeomans
staff reporter

K-State students may not know the functions of the National Academic Advisors Association, yet it remains a resource for many academic advisers on campus.

"NACADA's purpose is to assist in student development through the improvement of academic advising," Bobbie Flaherty, executive director of NACADA, said. "Some of the services provided by NACADA are a placement bureau, a consultants bureau and a clearinghouse with information on academic advising."

Seventeen advisers belong to the K-State and K-State-Salina chapters of the association.

NACADA organizes regional and national conferences and a summer institute on academic advising.

"The conferences help advisers in all areas, including networking. They have workshops and round tables," Carolee Fairbanks, office manager of NACADA, said.

"There are 10 regions in the U.S. The regional conferences are in the spring and the national conference in October," Fairbanks said. "The areas change, but this year the national conference is going to be in Nashville."

Karen Pence, assistant dean of human ecology, said the conferences have been helpful to her.

"I've been to one regional and one national conference," Pence said.

The summer institute was an intense, week-long institute that focused on organizational structure, legal issues and evaluations of academic advising, Flaherty said.

NACADA has a quarterly newsletter and a twice-a-year research journal that are provided to all members.

"I read them more for ideas and a greater appreciation for different ways of advising," Pence said. "I've found them to be helpful."

"This year we have a free monograph," Flaherty said. "It will help to increase our visibility."

NACADA is now going on-line with the rest of the academic world.

"We also have List Serve on the Internet," Flaherty said. "It's a really nice forum with very quick feedback from many different people. There are 1,000 members."

List Serve has proved helpful for Pence.

"I can have daily interaction," she said. "It's a wonderful way to exchange information."

NACADA is open to anyone involved with academic advising. The dues are $50 a year for individual membership and $20 for graduate students.

Membership benefits include reduced rates to NACADA conferences and free subscriptions to the literature NACADA publishes.

Advisers interested in the program can contact NACADA, at 532- 5717.

RAISING A Ferret family

▶ Ferrets occupy the majority of Troy Lynn's free time. Lynn commonly entertains up to 20 ferrets aside from her own in her Wamego home.

■ Wamego woman educates others on the joys of ferrets

Troy Lynn, extension agronomy keyboard operator, often has sleepovers at her house. But to some, Lynn's guests might seem a bit unusual.

They're ferrets.

In addition to her own ferrets — Teddy Bear, Willow, Vampire, Gizzy, Zipper, Dino, Abby, Marley and Dusty — Lynn said it's not uncommon for her to have more than 20 other ferrets visiting.

"Our house is ferret-proof, but some of the owners keep theirs in a cage, so when they come over here, they really love it," she said about her home in Wamego.

Lynn first became acquainted with ferrets in 1985 when she received one as a wedding present.

After her divorce in 1987, she decided to start Ferret Family Services. The organization now has 180 members from across the United States — including members as far away as California, Virginia and Michigan.

"It started as an info-type service where I'd work with them and research what I could, and it just kind of grew from there," she said.

In 1991, the not-for-profit organization started the newsletter "Ferret News," with information on medical tips, recipes, stories and national updates concerning ferret-related news.

One of the many services the organization offers is grief counseling.

"If people have had a bad or stressful day they can come over and play with the ferrets," she said. "In the meantime, they can talk about their problems."

Professional photographs of Lynn and her ferrets are hung on the walls, along with a ferret-shaped clock, a sign saying ferret crossing and a ferret calendar.

"They're much more quiet than dogs and easier to take of," she said. "They have a litter box like a cat and can be walked. They eat cat food."

Lynn said unlike cats, their nails will not claw.

"Basically, they're quiet, intelligent and enjoyable," she said.

Although each of the ferrets has a cage for eating and sleeping, Lynn keeps the cages open. To prevent losing them, she has her entire house and back porch ferret-proofed.

"They have to be supervised," she said. "They're curious and don't have a homing instinct."

Lynn said when they first built the completely screened-in porch, each of the ferrets climbed all the way around the sides of the walls near the ceiling looking for every possible way out.

"They're allowed here when we're home," she said. "We hope to get it ferret-proof enough that they can be outside when we're not home.

"They're just so intelligent. Where there's a will, there's a way."

Another service of Ferret Family Services includes placing lost ferrets in foster homes until their real or new owners are found.

"Once found, we hold them in a foster

HOLTZ RECOVERING FROM SURGERY

(AP) – Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz was in stable condition Tuesday after surgery to remove pressure on his spinal cord.

The operation was completed without complications. It was needed immediately to avoid permanent spinal cord damage and possible paralysis.

The coach is expected to be hospitalized through the weekend, meaning he won't be on campus for No. 24 Notre Dame's game Saturday against Vanderbilt. Holtz will be out at least three weeks, and defensive coordinator Bob Davie was named interim coach.

NBA UNION SURVIVES VOTE

(AP) – The efforts to decertify basketball's union failed today by an overwhelming margin, paving the way for labor peace in the NBA.

In an election held by the National Labor Relations Board, 226 players voted to keep their union and 134 voted to decertify. The election clears the way for the player representatives to approve a new labor contract Wednesday in Chicago and for owners to approve it Monday in New York.

A lock at receiver

Wildcat Kevin Lockett is off to a fast-paced start

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

Although the season is two games old, it's already been a tale of two seasons for junior wide receiver Kevin Lockett.

Though the Wildcats started 2-0 last season, Lockett was out of the picture offensively.

In wins against Southwest Louisiana and Rice, Lockett, who was coming off a 50-catch season as a freshman, had only two catches for 28 yards.

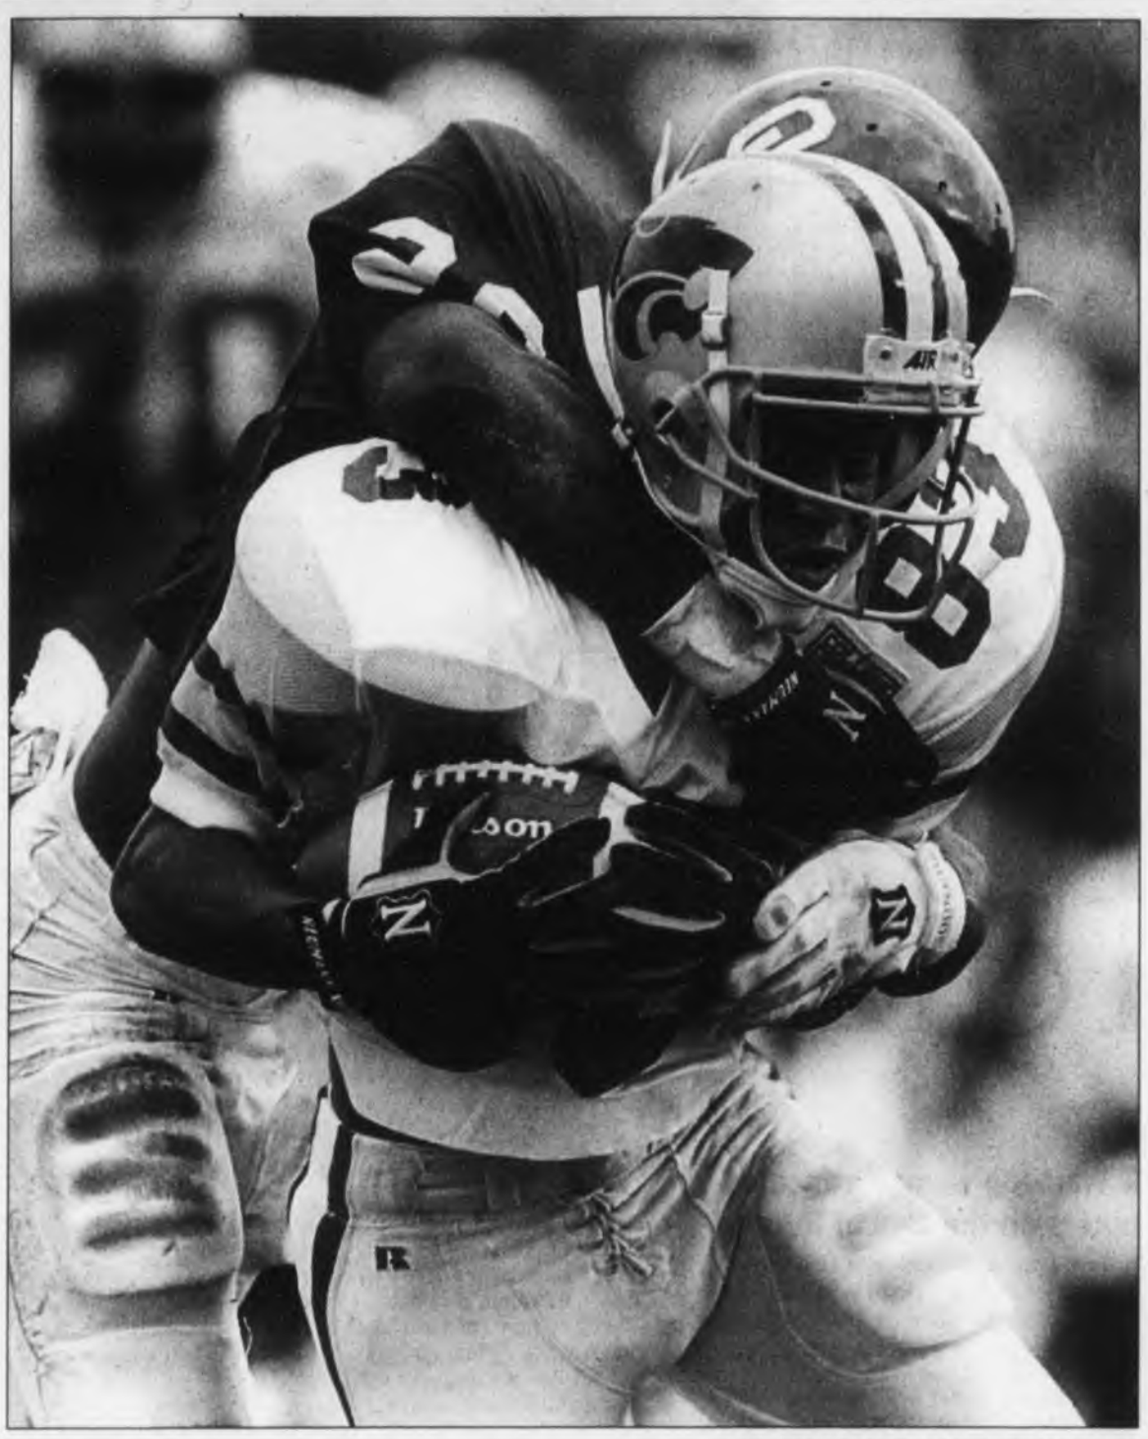
But this season's 2-0 start has been an 180-degree turnaround. In wins against Temple and Cincinnati, Lockett has seven catches for 109 yards and three touchdowns, including the 22-yard game winner Saturday night to give K-State a 23-21 win against Cincinnati.

Lockett said his for-the-team attitude is a key to his better start this season.

"I feel like I'm much more of a factor," Lockett said Tuesday. "I'm doing a lot more things — running routes, blocking, catching the ball — and I feel I'm more into the offense just because of the unselfishness I have this year."

Lockett's grab in the end zone as time ran out Saturday night completed the comeback for the Cats. A timeout was called before the play, and K-State coach Bill Snyder said the play was designed to go to Lockett, and was called due to K-State's field position.

"We didn't know where we were exactly going to be when that last snap came up," Snyder said. "The reason we threw that one was because we got ourselves close enough to do it. Had we been another 15 yards from the goal line, we would have done something different."



The play worked. Quarterback Matt Miller rolled left and then heaved a pass to the far right of the end zone to Lockett.

"I knew something had to be done some way, and I didn't want to let my teammates down," he said.

"Fortunately, it happened to be a good pass, it seemed like the ball was in the air forever, and I made the catch and we won the game."

Replays show that Lockett caught the ball in the end zone, but his momentum took him into the field of play. Lockett turned around, and ran back into the end zone

"I felt I caught the ball in the end zone, but I wasn't actually sure so I turned around and went into the end zone to make sure," Lockett said. "I'd hate to thought I caught the ball in the end zone, drop the ball and celebrate and have them spot the ball on the one-yard line."

Junior receiver Kevin Lockett is caught by a defender last season at Oklahoma. Lockett has seven catches for 109 yards and three touchdowns this season.

Following the big catch, Lockett said he let his emotions get the best of him, jumping up and down before being mobbed by teammates on the sidelines.

For those brief instances, Lockett forgot all about the NCAA celebration rules.

"I thought there would be a flag and Coach Snyder would be upset. But luckily there wasn't a flag. But Coach Snyder was still upset," Lockett said.

If the first two games is any indication, the trio of Lockett, Tyson Schweiger and Mitch Running (a combined 26 catches, 341 receiving yards and four touchdowns) will be a constant for the Cats this season.

"We have a balanced attack so when we go into games so balanced, the teams have to prepare for all three of us, not just one of us," Lockett said.

When life is just unfair

As if it wasn't bad enough that he knocked me out, took my money and left me on the side of I-70, he had to go one better.

Because of him, I missed the Great Cat Comeback.

With the simple flash of a badge and an easy motion of his hand toward the side of the road, the predator had his prey.

Five hours, $80 and one missed flight to Cincinnati later, I awoke.

Now, the predator's face cannot escape me.

I see him on campus, but I don't. I see him at the mall, but I don't. I see him at restaurants, but I don't.

COLUMN

TODD STEWART

But worst of all, I see him every night, in my sleep. There, he terrorizes me. The face is a haunting image that I cannot escape, and may never be able to escape.

Still, I could almost forgive him, but for one reason I cannot. I will never forgive him for making me miss the Cincinnati game.

It would have been fine had the Cats not somehow come back. If K-State had lost, it would have been somewhat fair — even a Wildcat rout I can forgive him for. But no, not for this.

I missed watching Matt Miller create six turnovers on his own and go from goat to hero in three seconds.

I missed Kevin Lockett bailing Miller out with one of the most memorable receptions in K-State history.

I would have rather suffered a near-heart attack watching the last three seconds than a concussion hundreds of miles away from the action.

No longer will I listen to people say how lucky I am, that I could have been shot or killed.

These people say I should count my blessings. I say the Lockett celebration photo tells my side.

It just isn't fair.

I wish I could be writing this column about Miller's six turnovers, or maybe his heroic finish, or hell, even his hair. But I cannot. The face encompasses me.

I wish I could be writing this column about the defense's first-half breakdown, or its second-half coming around, or even about Nyle Wiren's hair. But I cannot. The face encompasses me.

> "With the simple flash of badge and an easy motion of his hand toward the side of the of the road, the predator had his prey. Five hours, $80 and one missed flight to Cincinati later, I awoke."

I wish I could be writing this column about what a loss would mean to the season, or what the win does for the team's confidence, or even written about what the team can do in the two weeks between games. But I cannot.

I deal with my problems. The injury is all but healed, and a slight headache is the only remnant of the attack.

Sooner or later, the face will be pushed to the back of my memory.

Sure, there are other games. Some may even be more dramatic. I feel no better knowing this. This was the Cincinnati game, my game, and he took it all away from me in a split second.

I can deal with a highway mugging and a robbery, but I cannot deal with missing Lockett in the corner of the Cincinnati end zone.

It's just not fair.

Snyder proud of Miller; Lockett receives honors

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

Despite all of the turnovers, despite a myriad of errors on offense, despite it all, Kansas State still won the football game. And to K-State coach Bill Snyder, problems with a 2-0 record are easier to answer than problems are with a 1-1 record.

"The victory allows you to be 2-0 instead of 1-1," Snyder said yesterday. "(If we're) 1-1 right now, there's a lot of question marks. We got a lot of question marks at 2-0, but not nearly as many at 1-1."

Coming back from a 21-17 deficit with 44 seconds left in the game give the Cats plenty of confidence going into the Sept. 23 date against Akron, Snyder said.

"It adds to the confidence factor," he said. "It adds to a lot of the things about believing in yourself, never giving up and not accepting defeat."

But coming that near defeat showed the players never to take anyone lightly again.

"It put a lot of reality into a lot of the guys' heads," receiver Kevin Lockett said. "I don't think we really overlooked Cincinnati or bypassed them or took them for granted.

"But I think it made a lot of guys realize that regardless of the opponent, we have to play hard every snap. Just because we're ranked 21st, we just weren't going to roll over Cincinnati. It put a lot of fear in a lot of guys' hearts, and it put a lot of fear in my heart."

Snyder also said K-State was scared by the prospect of losing the game.

"They've been frightened," Snyder said.

Defense big-play prone

Snyder said he is concerned about the defense being beaten for big plays early in the game.

"I'm most certainly concerned," he said. "I am concerned about that, and they were mental errors in both games that allowed those scores to take place right off the bat."

In the season opener against Temple, the Owls recovered an Eric Hickson fumble and then scored on a 58-yard pass on their first offensive play from scrimmage. At Cincinnati, the Bearcats scored on a 67-yard pass on the second play of the game.

So look for the Cats, if they win the toss against Akron Sept. 23, to take the ball, Snyder said

"We may not be able to defer again," Snyder said. "We have to take the ball to keep the score down in the first quarter."

Players of the Week

Lockett was named Big Eight Offensive Player of the Week in a split vote against Oklahoma's Jerald Moore.

Snyder proud of Miller

Snyder said he was proud of the way quarterback Matt Miller bounced back from a horrible first half.

In the second half, Miller threw two touchdowns and generated 23 points. For the game, the senior went 18-of-32 for 231 yards and rushed 19 times for 61 yards.

"I told Matt that I appreciated his courage and his toughness. He took some real shots in that game and kept coming back," Snyder said. "He made some mistakes and fought back through them."

Snyder was quick to point out that not all of the interceptions were completely Miller's fault. On two of the Cincinnati picks, to Snyder, the pass protection was porous.

"Matt had some help," Snyder said. "He didn't commit himself to error all by himself. The mistakes he made were varied throughout parts of the game."

Phillips faces assault, trespassing, destruction of property charges

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska football star Lawrence Phillips was charged Tuesday with assault, trespassing and destruction of property in connection with an attack on his ex-girlfriend.

Phillips, considered a top Heisman Trophy contender, was arraigned Tuesday in Lancaster County Court.

Coach Tom Osborne kicked Phillips off the team shortly after his arrest Sunday night, but he later said there was a possibility the running back could rejoin the second-ranked Cornhuskers.

The coach took no disciplinary action against backup running back Damon Benning, who was arrested a day before Phillips on suspicion of assaulting a woman.

Lancaster County Attorney Gary Lacey said he had not yet reviewed the police reports in the Benning case and has not made a decision on whether to file formal charges against the player.

The assault charge alleges Phillips hit a woman Sunday at the Lincoln apartment of Nebraska quarterback Scott Frost. Lacey said the property charge alleges Phillips hit some mailboxes with his fist or body as he left the building. The damage was estimated at $327.

Lacey said he has not spoken with the woman. Police said she has left Nebraska for her own protection.

University officials said Phillips, who had three brushes with the law, was dismissed from the team because he violated an agreement with the coach.

"My understanding is that he was told, 'Any more problems and that's it,'" Herb Howe, an associate to the chancellor, told the Omaha World-Herald.

"Lawrence has an agreement with Tom as far as what his behavior is going to be. And once he violates that depending on the understanding, there's going to be consequences. And the consequences in this case were that Lawrence Phillips was dismissed from the football team," athletic director Bill Byrne said.

Osborne said Monday that Phillips could return to the second-ranked Nebraska team this year.

"There's a possibility he might still play some this season," Osborne said. "He'd have to get certain things done. It certainly wouldn't be any time soon. He may not play at all."

Osborne said backup tailback Damon Benning will play this week despite being arrested on suspicion of misdemeanor assault Saturday after allegedly grabbing and pushing a woman at his Lincoln apartment. Osborne said he believes Benning is innocent and was defending himself.

Osborne spent hours Monday discussing the arrests of his top two running backs. Off-field problems have become a familiar subject for Osborne, who is preparing for the home opener Saturday against Arizona State (1-1).

Two other Cornhuskers also face criminal charges. Tyrone Williams was charged with felony weapons violations, and Riley Washington is awaiting trial on a charge of attempted second-degree murder. Williams continues to play for Nebraska, and Washington has been allowed to practice.

The weekend arrests stunned fans of the defending national champions. Hours before the alleged assault, Phillips rushed for 206 yards and four touchdowns against Michigan State. Tabbed an early Heisman Trophy contender, he was the nation's third-leading rusher last year with 1,722 yards.

Osborne said he dismissed Phillips after determining the player was involved in an assault.

"Lawrence and I have agreed on what happened, and there's no question — I wouldn't call it a beating — but he certainly did inflict some damage to the young lady," Osborne said. "She was dragged down some stairs, and there were some injuries."

Phillips, 20, a junior from West Covina, Calif., turned himself in to police Sunday after the early-morning incident at Frost's apartment.

Police said Phillips climbed into the third-floor apartment, hit the woman and dragged her to the building's foyer. Residents pulled him away.

Earlier this year, Phillips pleaded innocent to misdemeanor assault, disturbing the peace and vandalism after a fight with another student. He entered a pretrial diversion program and paid the student $400. In July, he pleaded guilty to disturbing the peace and was fined $50.

Benning, who missed the Michigan State game with a pulled hamstring, was arrested at his Lincoln apartment early Saturday.

Benning said his 19-year-old ex-girlfriend came to his apartment and threatened to damage his car. He said she pushed him in the door, threw rocks at him and ripped his shirt.

"If I had any physical contact with her at this point, it was only to hold her off of me," he said in a statement.

Benning is scheduled to appear in court Sept. 27.

"We're sorry about it, but if it's like he says ... certainly we're not going to fault him for what he did," Osborne said.

Benning and Phillips were released after posting bond. Benning attended practice Monday, but he didn't speak to reports. The team voted to decline media interviews this week.

Washington was charged with attempted second-degree murder in connection with an Aug. 2 shooting at a Lincoln convenience store. Osborne said he has allowed Washington to remain on the team because he believes he is innocent.

MAKING HERBAL TEA

Boil or heat water in a microwave. One cup for each cup of tea. When water reaches a rolling boil, remove from heat.

1. Making tea from leaves, flowers or powders:
   Add your herbs. Usetwo teaspoons of herbs per cup of water. Use a teaball or teabag, or stir the herbs into the water.
   Steep. Cover the pot and let it set for 10 minutes or so.
2. Making tea from roots or bark:
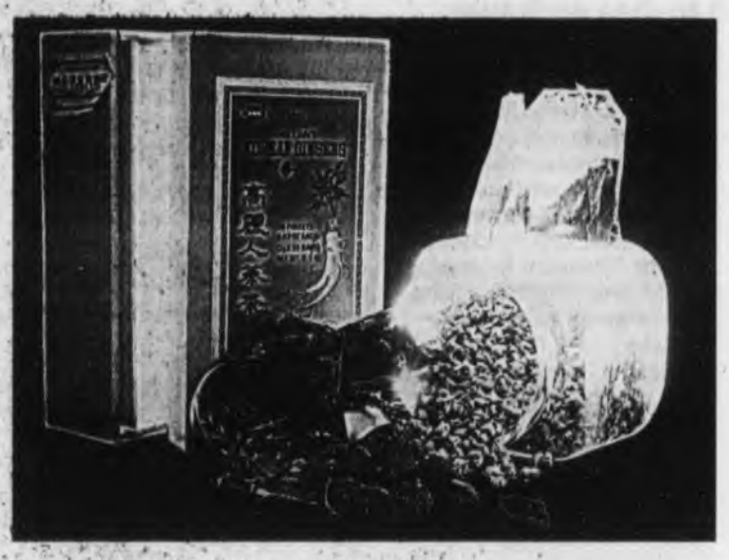
   Simmer. You should let your herbs simmer instead of steep. After adding your herbs, turn the heat to the lowest setting, and let your tea cook gently for 10 minutes.



Strain. Remove teaball or pour the tea through a strainer into a cup.

Drink and enjoy.

QUITTING TOBACCO

Chewing on whole Licorice Roots is helpful in quitting tobacco. Licorice is soothing to irritated throat tissues and increases saliva. One cause of the withdrawal symptoms is that the body craves the higher estrogen levels to which it is accustomed, and licorice temporarily stimulates estrogen production.

Herbal Healing

Tea and other herbs could help where conventional medicine fails

A cacophony of aromas leads the nose of those who enter the bazaar shop to the glass jars filled with weed-like substances that line one wall.

A 5-year-old girl sips "celebration" tea made of strawberry leaves, orange, rosehips, cinnamon and chamomile from a paper cup. Other people stand throughout the shop looking at the jars, tinctures, incense sticks and oils.

No, it's not a typical shop. In fact, some say the House of Hezekiah in Kansas City, Mo., is a shop of miracles, relief and ultimately, hope.

Jerry Webb, Olathe resident, is one person who said he hopes that herbs may help cure him of cancer.

Jerry, 43, was diagnosed with melanoma, a type of skin cancer, in October 1992. Since his diagnosis, he has undergone two radiation sessions and six surgeries. Each day he takes 41 pills and follows a strict diet, which includes drinking 40 ounces of fresh-squeezed juices.

He said he met a man from La Monte, Mo., who was diagnosed with inoperable cancer and had less then two years to live. The man's nutritionist suggested a herbal diet. Two years later, the man was diagnosed cancer free.

"I figure I have nothing to lose," Jerry said.

Jerry's wife, Betty, said the medicines prescribed by her husband's physician have done nothing to cure his cancer, just prolong it. She said she hopes an herbal diet will do more.

Apricot pits and essiac tea are part of Jerry's herbal diet.

Betty said,apricot pits fight tumors and cut off the blood flow where they are connected with the tumor. She said apricot pits can be highly toxic to people who take them and don't have a tumor.

Essiac tea has traditionally been used to put cancer in remission. It is an Indian herbal concoction that has been around since the 1920s, Betty said.

She said there are documented cases in which the tea has cured people of different types of terminal cancer and arthritis.

Some say herbs have traditional uses in curing medical conditions and can maintain health alone.

Mary Kenney, owner of the Herb Garden in Mission, hasn't seen a doctor for eight years. Instead she relies on herbs to maintain her health.

Kenney, who has worked in the herb industry for eight years, said she first became involved with herbs when she was diagnosed with chronic bronchial asthma.

"They said I'd have emphysema in 10 years and drag around an oxygen tank," Kenney said.

She said she proved her doctor wrong when she cured herself with herbs in four months.

Kenney said she was also diagnosed with a fibrosistic cyst in her breast by a doctor who said she would have to have her breast removed.

She said she quit eating chicken and took blood purifiers along with herbs, and when she returned to the doctor, her cyst had disappeared.

Kenney tells her customers to be sensible when using herbs and ease into them. She also said she preaches nutrition and eating correctly.

More than possible remedies for illnesses exist in herbal shops.

The Herb Garden offers free healthy-living classes every Wednesday and free iridology consultations.

Iridology is the science of using the eye to detect which glands and internal organs are under stress by looking at holes and discolorations in the eye, Kenney said.

She said the eye has nerve endings from every part of the body and she can look at the eye and determine nerve ending problems.

But you don't have to drive to the Kansas City area for herbs and information on how to use them.

The People's Grocery Cooperative Exchange in Manhattan has about 200 herbs and spices, tinctures, teas and soup powders. It also has literature for sale containing different uses of certain herbs.

Amy's Health and Discount in Aggieville also sells about 130 different herbs and spices, tinctures and books. It also gives free guides to its customers about herbal health.

And for those who still are still suspicious of herbs, there is yet another alternative in experimenting with them in Manhattan.

Java and Espresso Royale Caffe in Aggieville both sell some of the same herbal teas that are sold in the herbal shops in the Manhattan and Kansas City areas.

(Top right) Herbs used to make herbal teas come in many varieties from dried leaves to roots and berries. Herbal teas can be made from a single kind of plant or blended together for taste and effectiveness.

▶ FACULTY SENATE

Enrollment rises, funding decreases

■ Funding forum may lead to idea exchange

Joni Pruitt
staff reporter

Maintaining K-State's quality education in an environment of reduced funding and increased enrollment was a subject of debate at the Faculty Senate meeting Tuesday afternoon.

K-State's enrollment is expected to increase by 13 percent in the next decade, but federal and state funding has been dramatically reduced.

John Havlin, Faculty Senate president, announced there would be a University forum at 1:30 p.m. Sept. 18 in Forum Hall that will address this issue.

> "sounds like to me that the policy decision to change teaching modes has already been made."
> JAMES HAMILTON
> ARTS AND SCIENCE SENATOR

The announcement spurred debate among faculty senators who were concerned the forum would be viewed as an agenda for action instead of an open dialogue about possible solutions.

"It sounds like to me that the policy decision to change teaching modes has already been made," James Hamilton, arts and science senator, said.

"Alternate ways of addressing the issue like redesigning faculty time are not even on the agenda." he said.

"It seems to me that before strategic planning starts, we should have a campus-wide discussion about these issues," Hamilton said.

Some of the changes that are being discussed are increasing the teaching load, creating a two-tier faculty and enlarging classes' sizes.

"There are a number of things that need to be laid on the table," Talat Rahman, arts and science senator, said.

"Some of the things people have been saying are very alarming."

Havlin said how to maintain quality education will not be discussed at the forum.

The forum will allow students, faculty, staff and the community to talk about the changes that will be required to enhance the learning environment.

In other business, Faculty Senate members voted unanimously in a straw poll that it did not favor the use of Jon's notes in class.

The poll was taken to get a faculty consensus on the issue so that various newspapers could be informed of K-State's stance, Havlin said.

Jon's Notes is a classroom note-taking business.

People are hired to take notes in classes.

K-State teachers had expressed concern that some of the notes that were being sold were inaccurate and the service infringed on their intellectual property rights.

The Manhattan operation of Jon's Notes Inc., a Nebraska-based business, recently closed because of the controversy.

John Johnson, Academic Affairs Committee chairman, said according to Dick Seaton, University attorney, any faculty member can legally request students to leave the classroom if they are not enrolled or have not obtained special permission from the instructor to attend class.

Faculty Senate also unanimously approved the review process for the graduate school dean.

The proposal will require the provost to meet with the graduate faculty to discuss the basis of the decision on reappointment.

Timothy Donoghue, vice provost dean of the Graduate School, will be prohibited from attending the meeting.

▶ ABORTION

Doctor jailed

■ Man charged in death of patient receiving abortion

Associated Press

NEW YORK — A doctor who botched an abortion, causing a woman to bleed to death, was sentenced Tuesday to 25 years to life in prison for murder.

Dr. David Benjamin, 58, was found guilty Aug. 8 in an extraordinary instance of criminal charges filed over a medical mistake.

"This was not a political case or malpractice," Judge Robert J. Hanophy said in imposing the maximum sentence. "It was depraved, indifferent murder."

The conviction was the first of its kind in New York state, and authorities could cite only one other U.S. case in which a doctor was convicted of murder for botched work.

Ordinarily, such cases are handled through malpractice suits or disciplinary hearings.

The jury rejected lesser charges of manslaughter or criminally negligent homicide before convicting Benjamin in the 1993 death of Guadalupe Negron. The 33-year-old mother of four bled to death from a 3-inch rip in her uterus.

The defense claimed she caused the tear by sitting up during the abortion. Defense attorney, Brad Leventhal, said Benjamin did everything he could to save Negron.

Benjamin testified he thought Negron was about 13 weeks pregnant and didn't realize until midway through the abortion that she was 20 weeks along.

His receptionist testified that was a lie, and she said he ignored the woman for an hour after the abortion.

The state said he also lied to paramedics who arrived to help Negron. The district attorney said the cover-up was one reason for pressing charges.

One month before Negron's death, the state had revoked Benjamin's license for gross incompetence and negligence for abortions performed on five women in 1990. In three cases, the women suffered a ripped uterus.

Benjamin was allowed to continue practicing while appealing the revocation.

▶ HIGHWAYS

Toll roads proposed for SW Kansas

Associated Press

LIBERAL — Some highways in southwest Kansas should be turned into turnpikes and toll roads in order to pay for improved roads, a group of Liberal leaders said.

Members of Liberal Highways Inc. discussed the possibility of creating toll roads on Friday with Kansas Turnpike Authority chief Mike Johnston.

The group suggested converting U.S. 54 from Wichita to the Oklahoma state line into a toll road.

The group members said they also want to study the feasibility of making U.S. 83, running through western Kansas, a toll road as part of a Canadian-American-Mexican trade corridor.

"There's an awful lot of truck traffic out here, and a lot of tourists come through here," Gerald Memming, Liberal's public works director, said.

Those kinds of traffic on inadequate highways pose serious safety problems, Memming said. Better highways might also boost the area economy, he said.

"Some industries have indicated they would be more willing to locate here if the highways were better," he said.

Johnston, a former state secretary of transportation, said he doubted a turnpike from Liberal to Wichita would generate enough toll revenue to pay for itself. A 1986 study showed that it would cost more than $500 million to build such a turnpike and that there was not enough traffic to offset those costs.

Famed physicist to marry nurse

Associated Press

LONDON — Stephen Hawking, whose fame as a physicist has progressed as relentlessly as his paralysis, turns his attention this weekend from the stars to a more earthly concern: marriage.

On Saturday, he'll say "I do" for the second time, marrying the former wife of the man who gave him back his voice.

Confined to a wheelchair by a progressive nerve disorder, the brilliant author of a best-seller on the cosmos, met Elaine Mason when she was brought in as one of his nurses. Both left their spouses and moved in together in 1989.

Susan Masey, Hawking's secretary, could not say whether the scientist's children, Lucy, Robert and Timothy, will attend the brief ceremony, which will be followed by a blessing at Cambridge's St. Barnabas Church.

> "For as long as I can remember, my father has maintained a resolute disbelief in his own disability, or rather, an inability to accept there is anything he cannot do."
> LUCY HAWLING > DAUGHTER

But the media will be there in droves, attesting to the star quality of a scientist whose mind spans the universe — but can move only two fingers and needs a voice synthesizer to pledge his troth.

Hawking's decision to get married again shows the unnatural determination that has kept him together against a killer disease, said the Observer newspaper on Sunday.

It also shows that the media image of Hawking, as a cosmos-roving intellect freed of earthly desires and needs, is ridiculously misplaced, the paper said.

Jane Hawking, who nursed Hawking for 26 years and whom he divorced amid some acrimony in 1991, told the Daily Telegraph in June that her ex-husband is in the grip of forces that he can't control and these are forces which broke up their home.

Hawking, 53, was diagnosed 30 years ago as having amytrophic lateral sclerosis, or Lou Gehrig's disease, which causes progressive paralysis by destroying muscle-controlling nerves in the brain and spinal cord.

Usually, it kills within two to five years of appearing.

But Hawking has lived to pioneer work on the Big Bang theory of the origin of the universe and on black holes — collapsed stars that attract everything, even light, with their powerful gravity.

"A Brief History of Time," his 1988 book on the mysteries of the universe, has sold more that 5 million copies and been translated into dozens of languages.

It reportedly has made him a millionaire.

Since 1979, Hawking has been Lucasian Professor of Mathematics at Cambridge University, a post held from 1669 to 1701 by Sir Isaac Newton.

He also gives lectures all over the world; brilliant, witty expositions that have helped to popularize cosmology.

Nothing fazes him.

"For as long as I can remember, my father has maintained a resolute disbelief in his own disability, or rather, an inability to accept there is anything he cannot do," his 24-year-old daughter, Lucy Hawking, wrote recently.

"This attitude is both admirable and infuriating. When faced with a long flight of steps to see a view, reliably said to be not very exciting, his insistence on being lifted to the top anyway drives strong men to tears."

He met his first wife in the early 1960s, around the time he was diagnosed with ALS, and they married in 1965.

As he gradually spent more time in his wheelchair, nurses were brought in, including Mason, now 45.

In 1985, he underwent an emergency tracheotomy and lost his voice. Mason's ex-husband, David, designed the computerized synthesizer that allows Hawking to communicate with a robotic voice.

Ozone hole growing; size has doubled

Associated Press

GENEVA — The hole in the earth's ozone layer is growing faster than ever and is already twice the size it was this time last year, the U.N. weather agency said Tuesday.

Ozone, a gas in the stratosphere, prevents harmful ultraviolet radiation from reaching the earth. Its depletion, caused in large part by industrial chemicals, is believed to increase the incidence of skin cancer and cataracts.

The hole, first observed over Antarctica in the 1980s, has reappeared each September and October since then. With the onset of winter in the polar region, temperatures plunge in the stratosphere and hasten ozone depletion.

The hole is getting bigger despite a reduction in ozone-destroying chemicals, such as chlorine and bromine, because these chemicals have a life of 60 to 100 years.

So far the hole has expanded to 3.9 million square miles — roughly the size of Europe — according to the World Meteorological Organization.

At that rate, the hole could surpass the record 24 million square miles it reached at the end of September last year, the U.N. agency said.

The accelerated spread of the hole has surprised, but not alarmed experts, who predict the ozone layer will get even worse before it recovers.

"From the end of July, through August and early September, ozone levels in this polar region have depleted by an average of 1 percent a day ... more rapidly than ever before," Rumen Bojkov, special adviser on ozone to the agency, said.

"Every 1-percent drop in ozone means roughly 1.3-percent to 1.5-percent more ultraviolet radiation reaching the surface," Bojkov said.

He said each 1-percent increase in ultraviolet radiation is thought to increase chances of skin cancer and eye cataracts by 2 percent.

The U.N. weather agency has been monitoring ozone levels in Antarctica for the last 40 years. Already in August, the region had 30- to 35-percent less ozone than in 1957, before depletion began.

The ozone layer also has deteriorated over Europe and North America, but to a lesser extent. The agency said ozone levels over Europe and North America have diminished 10 percent to 15 percent since 1957. At the same time, ultraviolet radiation has increased 13 percent to 15 percent.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

BEFORE TRUSTING YOUR FUTURE TO ANY COMPANY, ASK FOR SOME LETTERS OF REFERENCE.

You put more than just your savings into a retirement company. You put in your trust and hopes for the future, too. So before you choose one, ask some questions. How stable is the company? How solid are its investments? How sound is its overall financial health?

A good place to start looking for answers is in the ratings of independent analysts. Four companies, all widely recognized resources for finding out how strong a financial services company really is, gave TIAA their top grade.

IN THE FINAL ANALYSIS, TIAA IS LETTER PERFECT.

TIAA received A++ (Superior) from A.M. Best Co., AAA from Duff & Phelps Credit Rating Co., Aaa from Moody's Investors Service and AAA from Standard & Poor's. These ratings reflect TIAA's stability, sound investments, claims-paying ability and overall financial strength. (These are ratings of insurance companies only, so they do not apply to CREF.)

And TIAA–which, backed by the company's claims-paying ability, offers a guaranteed rate of return and the opportunity for dividends–is one of a handful of insurance companies nationwide that currently hold these highest marks.

CREF. FOUR MORE LETTERS EVERYONE SHOULD KNOW.

For further growth potential and diversification, there's the CREF variable annuity, with seven different investment accounts to give you the flexibility you want as you save for the future.*

Together, TIAA and CREF form the world's largest private retirement system based on assets under management, with over $145 billion in assets and more than 75 years of experience serving the education community. For over a million and a half people nationwide, the only letters to remember are TIAA-CREF.

TIAA CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.℠

*Not all accounts are available under the basic retirement plans at all institutions. They are, however, all available for TIAA-CREF Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs). CREF certificates are distributed by TIAA-CREF Individual & Institutional Services.

dent, said she would like to see the commission continue to operate the way they do now.

"If we can't trust the ones we vote into office and expect them at all times at the meetings, then maybe we need a change, but I'd like to see them go on like they are," she said.

Commissioner Sydney Carlin said she is not sure she is going to enjoy a change in the quorum.

Commissioner Bruce Snead said he thinks changing the quorum is logical.

He said he does not want to make governing easier or convenient, but the time commissioners have together to discuss issues is limited.

"I'm not interested in moving very quickly on this but prudently with my commissioners," Snead said.

Steve Hall, city commissioner, said he hopes the quorum does not become a campaign issue.

Four commissioners must vote for the change.

If the quorum change passes, the residents have 60 days to file a petition to put the change up for a public vote.

In other business, the final contract for Gary Greer, the city's choice for city manager, is being written and will be sent to him for his review and reply.

The contract includes a $72,500 salary for the position.

people around the world," Thurston said.

Hillary Clinton had an effect at the conference.

Many thought of her as the First Lady of the world, Thurston said.

Thurston said that Clinton said women's rights are human rights, and women are not second-class citizens.

Women's issues are global issues, Clinton said.

Health care was a major concern for the women at the conference, Thurston said.

In many countries with high infant mortality rates, women need prenatal and post-natal care.

Thurston said that the issue of abortion was not nearly as important at the conference as the issue of making birth control more accessible to women.

Thurston said she received a button that read "Reduce abortions, increase birth control."

She said women at the conference were also concerned about owning their own property and having inheritance rights.

Education was also an important concern, especially with women from third-world countries, Thurston said.

more comfortable.

"Guys are brought up to be comfortable with themselves. Girls are not," Kushell said.

Women are taught to be embarrassed about themselves, she said

"I want every woman in this room to go home and look at their private parts," she said.

While women are looking at themselves, they should tell themselves that their bodies belong only to them, and that they only have to share it when they are ready spiritually, emotionally, physically and mentally.

Kushell was brought to campus by the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee, Lafene Health Center and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

"Sex and equality between genders is not really discussed in any other lecture series, and how genders relate to each other is an important topic," said Matt Jones, Issues and Ideas Committee chair.

The program was exciting and educational, and she kept the audience entertained, Hall said.

Kushell gives the presentation year-round to college students across the country.

Mainly she talks to college freshmen, athletic groups and occasionally at open presentations, she said.

"This has been extremely fulfilling for me. Not only the performing, but educating people on safe sex and helping women to know about their bodies," Kushell said.

home for two weeks," Lynn said. "This gives the owners a chance to reclaim them.

"If they are not claimed, we give the foster parents a chance to adopt them. If not, we keep a list of everyone who wants a ferret."

In addition, Ferret Family Services also gives workshops pertaining to subjects such as ferret grooming and proper ferret care.

Janice Swanson, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry, had Lynn talk during one of her classes last semester.

Swanson said her students seemed to enjoy the presentation, largely because many had never had much contact with the animal before.

"Lynn primarily discussed ferret behavior," Swanson said. "Ferrets are a lot of fun, but their behavior can be problematic for those who don't understand it well."

SMASHING PUMPKINS, WATERMELONS ...

Remember Gallagher, that guy on TV who used a sledgehammer to smash fruits and vegetables on stage, splattering audience members with the innards? Well, his brother has taken over the act, and he's coming to Bobby T's in the Candlecrest shopping loop on Thursday.

The show starts at 8 p.m. Tickets are $6 in advance and $8 at the door. Oh, and wear something that won't stain ...

FAMOUS PHOTOGRAPHY IN K.C.

The photography of Dorothea Lange, well-known for her Depression-era images of migrant farmers and families during the 1930s, will be on exhibit until Oct. 22 at the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art, in Kansas City, Mo.

Lange has also photographed the imprisoning of west-coast Japanese-Americans in 1942, small-town life in Utah and Ireland and the environmental consequences of development.

For more information, call the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art at (816) 751-1ART.

Carry on in spite of blind sexism

I've noticed a disturbing influx of — ahem — cockiness on T-shirts. Some say "COED Naked." They depict men and women in various "sports," with subtle sexual overtones (for example, COED Naked Homework — Study HARD).

More to-the-point are the "Big Johnson" T-shirts.

For people unfamiliar with this doubtfully innocuous line of wardrobe, I'll briefly describe its consumer philosophy.

"Big Johnson" shirts chronicle the sexual adventures of a young, geeky-looking college boy who's always surrounded by a group of scantily clad, well-endowed women.

COLUMN

NOLAN SCHRAMM

"Big Johnson," as the character is called, has a smooth, confident smile on his face. He doesn't have to worry, after all. He may not be intelligent, athletic or physically attractive, but he has a big penis, and thus, he's inherently attractive.

So, naturally, all the women are depicted as flocking to him. A catch phrase printed next to the picture always plays on some sexual theme, objectifying women.

The shirts are sold mainly through adult toy stores, and they are marketed toward white, male college students, with (obviously) disposable income.

The question follows: What kind of insecure pig would wear a shirt like this?

A friend of mine hypothesized the Theory of Inversely Proportionate Penis Size.

For we lay people, the theory goes something like this: The number of "Big Johnson" T-shirts owned by a man is inversely proportional to the actual size of his penis.

But in all fairness, it is entirely possible that some of the men haven't stopped to consider what message the shirt is sending to people. It's saying, "I believe women are objects, and if I have a big penis, they will automatically be attracted to me."

Some radicals would advocate censorship of these shirts, but that's not the answer. Sure, the shirts overstep the borders of good taste.

But the real problem is the fact that the products sell in the first place. That's right, people BUY them. And the only way to eliminate sexist material in our society is to change consumer buying patterns.

This, in turn, will send the message to the manufacturers of sexist trash in a language they understand: profits.

Don't buy the stuff. Think about how the product depicts someone. It's the attitude we must change, folks.

Of course, there will still be those who continue to demean women, African-Americans, Muslims and whoever else is different from their narrow interpretation of life.

But eventually these self-proclaimed critics of social equality will die, and their various "-isms" will die with them.

For now, there is one positive aspect to seeing the people who wear these sexist T-shirts. It makes sexist men easier for women to spot.

EXON

ty, are pornographic but not Constitutionally protected speech.

Indecent materials, such as nude photos or sexually explicit conversations, are legal for adults but illegal for minors to receive or possess.

Critics charge that the legislation, if passed, would infringe on First Amendment rights and would be ineffective.

"Given the nature of the cyberspace, it's impossible to enforce this," said Dick Kurtenbach, executive director of the Kansas and Western Missouri Office of the American Civil Liberties Union. "We're also nervous from a First Amendment standpoint."

The ACLU and its supporters said they believe the federal government has no right to interfere with the materials that Internet users obtain, Kurtenbach said.

"Decisions about what someone chooses to download from the Internet belong to families and individuals," he said. "Families ought to be involved with what their children have access to."

The ACLU, which Kurtenbach said opposes all obscenity laws and restrictions against minors receiving indecent materials, see the proposed law as a form of censorship.

"Every censor wants to deny what they're doing is censorship," he said.

Rader said the legislation is not censorship.

"This bill was written carefully to conform with the First Amendment," he said.

Kurtenbach said families can now use software to prevent their children from downloading some indecent materials and should be allowed to choose whether to prevent their children from obtaining these materials.

Rader had another take on the matter.

"The fact of the matter is that no one was developing this software until Congress began looking at these issues," Rader said.

"The senator is gratified that the industry is coming out with these blocking devices, but his position is that even though we have bullet-proof vests, we don't throw away homicide laws," Rader said.

Rader also said computer networks wouldn't be liable under the law if they take steps to create adult forums separate from those that children can gain access to.

Users would have to provide proof of age to access these forums in the same ways phone sex lines verify age.

In spite of the allowances, the ACLU opposes the bill as an intrusion of the federal government into people's lives.

"We trust people to make the best decisions," Kurtenbach said. "To say that you're against big government, as many supporters of this bill do, and then turn around and support measures like this is ironic, to say the least," Kurtenbach said.

Kurtenbach said he believes the measure would be impossible to enforce because of the international character of the Internet.

"The idea that an act of Congress can affect what someone in Germany does is ridiculous," he said.

Rader said the Communications Decency Act has no means of preventing people in other countries from making illegal materials available to U.S. computer users.

At the local level, K-State might be forced to implement changes in computer network policy if the Communications Decency Act were passed.

The Exon bill requires Internet access providers like K-State to make efforts to prevent minors from gaining access to indecent materials and to prevent anyone from obtaining, distributing and possessing obscene materials via its computer networks.

The details about which steps a network would have to take if the bill were passed, which would be discretionary and which would be considered overzealous are unclear.

The international nature and sheer volume of traffic on the Internet could make defining these steps difficult.

Further compounding the problem of interpretation and compliance is the murkiness of the definitions of obscenity and indecency.

While child pornography has been declared obscene by both statute and court decisions, the legality of depictions of bestiality, sodomy, rape and excretory acts varies among communities.

In addition, the age for purchasing indecent materials varies from state to state.

For example, anyone who is 18 can purchase magazines like Playboy or Penthouse in Kansas but would have to be 21 to purchase the same materials in Nebraska.

These are the issues that K-State's computer network policy makers would have to grapple with.

John Bucher, director of K-State Computing and Network Services, said if the measure becomes law, the University's computer networks would be affected but exactly how isn't quite clear.

The University recently created the Data Administration Task Force to oversee computer network policies. Any changes in current computer network policies at K-State would have to be done by this task force, not CNS or an individual, he said.

"Whatever policy is developed won't be created by one individual person," he said. "If the Exon bill were to pass because it has such wide implications for this campus and others we would refer this to the Data Information Task Force."

Bucher said he personally shares some of the concerns of enforceability that the ACLU has about the legislation but said neither his personal views nor those of anyone else at CNS would become the rules for the University.

"This is not a CNS issue. It's a University issue," he said. "The University would have to decide where it's going to come down on the rules and regulations of individual users."

Beth Unger, ex officio member of the Data Administration Task Force, said if the law were passed, the task force would move cautiously toward any changes in computer network policies.

"The task force would have to be very careful because of First Amendment rights," she said. "We will comply with the law if it's passed and we really understand it but not exceed it in any way."

Litigation after the law's implementation would help guide the task force's decisions, she said.

"We would have to get the act itself and digest what it says first," she said. "Right now the interpretation of it is unclear."

Beef industry trying to improve markets

Associated Press

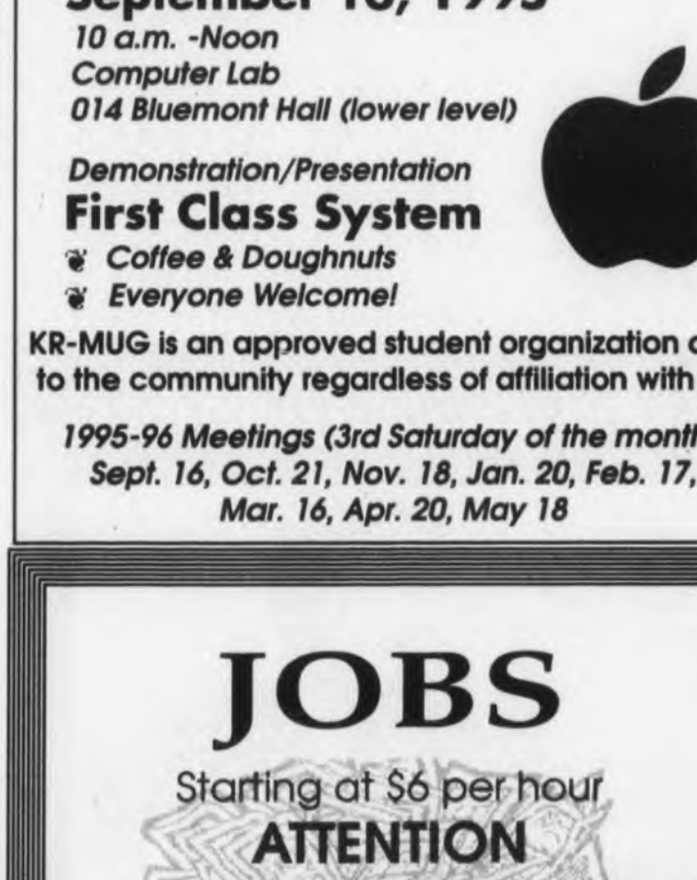
MINOT, N.D. — Beef producers in the upper Midwest are working to build a processing plant in the region that would give farmers a better shot at earning what they deserve for their cattle, an organizer said.



"We're looking out for ourselves," said Ryan Taylor, a rancher near Towner and communications director for the Northern Plains Premium Beef Cooperative.

"We're just trying to make a buck," he said. "There isn't a processor out there who is going to share all their profits and give them back to those who raise the raw commodity. We're at the bottom end of the system."

The group wants to build a cooperative packing plant that would process 300,000 cattle to be finished in South Dakota, North Dakota, Minnesota, Montana and the Canadian provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The cost is estimated at $35 million to $40 million.

A group of North Dakota farmers developed the cooperative idea and decided to expand the concept when a feasibility study showed the plant would run more efficiently with larger numbers of cattle.

The study also showed that feed prices were lower in the Dakotas than in traditional feedlot areas such as Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado and Nebraska.

Classified Directory

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

Embassy hit by grenade

Associated Press

MOSCOW — A masked attacker fired a rocket-propelled grenade that pierced the thick brick wall of the U.S. Embassy and exploded in an empty office Wednesday.

No one was injured in the daring mid-afternoon attack that came at a time of rising anti-American sentiment.

There was no claim of responsibility, and officials said there was no clear link to growing Russian criticism of NATO airstrikes on Bosnian Serbs. Russian and U.S. spokesmen insisted the attack was an isolated incident.

"It's the act of a lone maniac," said a senior Russian security official at the scene, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The grenade was fired at 4:25 p.m. from the opposite side of the busy Garden Ring road, crossing 12 lanes of rush-hour traffic. It punched through the facade of the mustard-and-white 10-story building on the sixth floor, sending thick smoke swirling. The blast broke two windows and gouged out brick and plaster, leaving a hole and scorching the wall.

There were no reports of arrests, but the Interfax news agency quoted security officials as saying they had a composite sketch of the attacker, a tall, young man in jeans.

Embassy spokesman Richard Hoagland said the attack was an isolated act, and it will have no effect on the Russian-American relations.

In Washington, the State Department said President Clinton was briefed on the attack, which came just a day after the Kremlin accused NATO of genocide against the Bosnian Serbs, Russia's historic allies.

It also came on the eve of a visit to Moscow by Deputy Secretary Strobe Talbott, charged with trying to heal the widening rift between Washington

"If they reject my approach or the message, they reject God."
Tim Carlisle, traveling preacher

"He's misrepresenting Christians when Christians already have a bad reputation on this campus. All I have to say is Satan's most powerful tool is half-truths from the word of God."
Megan Anderson, senior in civil engineering

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Tom Carlisle, a traveling non-denominational preacher, is confronted by Megan Anderson, senior in civil engineering and a Christian, Wednesday afternoon in the K-State Student Union free-speech zone. She said she was upset about the way Carlisle was presenting his beliefs and passing judgment upon sins committed by students. Anderson said she thought Carlisle's actions turn people off to Christianity.

The word of God?

Reformed rebel warns students to abandon sinful lives

Nikola Zytkow
staff writer

The self-proclaimed preacher paced the free-speech zone, warning K-State students their sinful lives are leading them on the road to hell.

"If you're doing your own thing, you're no better than Adolf Hitler," Tom Carlisle, a traveling non-denominational preacher, said.

Donning a tablet inscribed with what he said were the sins of the world, Carlisle delivered his message to a growing number of curious as well as angry onlookers, Wednesday afternoon.

Whores, abortionists, racists, thieves, prostitutes, drunkards, rock 'n' rollers, pot smokers and homosexuals were among some of the categories of sinners listed on the tablet strapped around his neck.

"God hates sin. The sin and the sinner go straight to hell together," Carlisle said, wiping the sweat from his brow. "You're either serving God or pleasing the devil."

Although Carlisle was given a chance to speak, it wasn't long before he was bombarded with student opinions and questions.

"Got hates the sin, not the sinner," a man shouted from the audience.

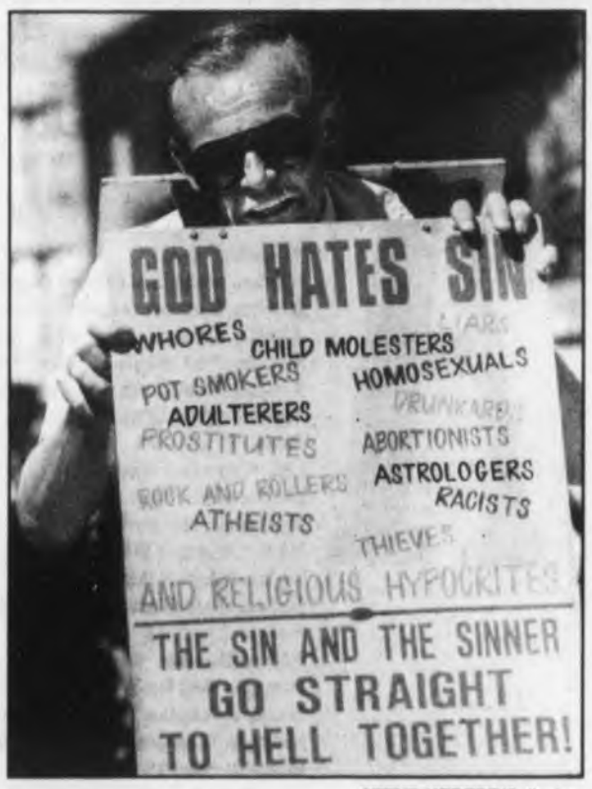
What happens to people who don't ever have a chance to hear the Bible? Monty Mattison, senior undecided, asked.

Even if they don't know it's wrong, their conscience will let them know, Carlisle replied, while a majority of the audience booed with disbelief.

"Why is rock 'n' roll wrong?" someone yelled out.

Carlisle ignored most questions and comments and told students they still have time to repent — they still had a choice.

"My God is no tyrant who just flips a quarter to see if you make it," Carlisle said. "Tails if you make it, heads if you don't."



"I used to be a rebel rock 'n' roller. I used to be a drunkard," Carlisle said, while many laughed at the revelation.

"Get your ass out of here — go back to KU," a few audience members yelled out.

"He's not hurting anyone, these people are just as ignorant as he is," Andy Carter, observer, said.

"He's speaking in a condemning matter, he's aggressive, and it's making the crowd aggressive," Mattison said. "But I can respect

▶ HEALTH FEES

Lafene affected by budget cut

B.C. Camp II
staff reporter

A cut in health fees has caused changes at Lafene Health Center.

February 24, 1994, Student Senate suggested to the Kansas Board of Regents that student health fees be cut from $80 to $70. The decrease has caused Lafene's director, Lannie Zweimiller, to be busy this fall.

"We normally see an upsurge in patients around this time," Zweimiller said.

"The fact that we are short one doctor because of the budget cut is causing it to be a problem," he said.

The doctor retired last year and left a vacancy that won't be filled for some time.

"There is a physician's position and a nurse's position that won't be filled until some things change. The loss adds up to about 25 appointments per day," Zweimiller said.

"All together there are six positions that won't be filled," he said.

The vacant positions include clerical help, receptionists and a patient-relations job, which deals with complaints Lafene users might have.

With the $326,000 cut from fees and another $100,000 lost due to an enrollment drop, Lafene has lost about $700,000 in the past two years.

Zweimiller said he believed at this rate Lafene will only have $290,000 in reserves by June. This is only 7 percent of the 25 percent required to be in reserves and well below the operating costs for the summer.

"They've tied my hands," Zweimiller said.

"They cut my budget by $326,000 a year but

All bicycles must be registered by Nov. 1

Kimberly Helfing
staff reporter

After Nov. 1, bicyclists without a registration decal might find their bikes chain-locked.

"Parking Council will meet to discuss this, but chances are, if a bicycle is parked without a permit, a device will be put on it," John Lambert, director of public safety, said. "We feel there's been enough warning through the Collegian about the Nov. 1 deadline."

Lambert said the council discussed placing written warnings on bicycles without a decal, but then it decided the notices would just end up cluttering campus.

"I don't know if any of that has been completely decided yet," Lambert said. "But from my standpoint, we'll have to lock them up."

Lance Lunsway, parking control supervisor, said chain-locking bikes without a decal is necessary so Parking Services can find out to whom the bikes belongs.

Bicyclists have until Nov. 1 to register their bikes at the Parking Services Office in Burt 128 or in the K-State Police station in East Stadium. Registration is free.

"What we are enforcing now is handicap rails and riding on the sidewalk," Dwain Archer, director of Parker Services, said. "Beginning Nov.1, we will begin enforcing the bicycle-registration decal."

Locking a bike to a handicap ramp railing outside a building on campus could prevent a student in a wheelchair from entering the building.

For this reason, a bike parked

Meter increase creates parking spaces

Robert Patnode
staff reporter

Fewer students are using the metered lot in front of the K-State Student Union since parking meter rates were increased this summer.

Last spring, the K-State Parking Council approved an increase in parking meter rate from 25 to 50 cents an hour. The increase took effect Aug. 1.

Parking Services has not done a formal survey of the lot's use, but Lance Lunsway, parking control supervisor, said he and his parking officers have seen more empty spaces in that lot.

Lunsway said a formal study of how the meter rate increase has affected that lot is scheduled for next week. He said the increase was made because Parking Services needs more money to balance its budget.

Dwain Archer, director of Parking Services, said Parking Services receives no outside support. The bulk of its money comes from parking permits, meters and tickets.

Lunsway said although the increase has created more empty parking spaces, Parking Services isn't concerned about any lost revenue.

"We knew that it would probably loosen things up, and we wouldn't have full meters all the time," Lunsway said. "As far as trying to make up for that, it hasn't become a concern. There's a lot more revenue in."

Some students dislike the parking meter rate increase.

Sean Pendley, graduate student in regional and community planning who lives at Woodway Apartments, said he had parked regularly in the metered parking lot but has parked there just one time this year.

"It's not worth it," Pendley said. "If you think about it, you have to pay 50 cents an hour, and if you have classes all day, that can add up during the course of a semester."

Ray Herzog, senior in chemistry, said he did park regularly on campus and at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Now, he said, he walks to campus.

"You can only come up with so much change," Herzog said. "If you continually deposit that much change, you should buy a permit.

"Where's the money going? That is the most difficult part to accept of the increase of parking on campus," Herzog said.

Lunsway said the increase is planning for future parking considerations.

"It is doing a little planning for the future," Lunsway said. "It s trying to balance the budget. "

GARDEN CITY MAN COMPLETES TERM OF SENIOR STATE LEGISLATOR

GARDEN CITY — Garden City businessman Terry Presta was selected on the first ballot Tuesday night to fill out Rep. David Heinemann's term in the state House of Representatives.

Presta's name was forwarded on Wednesday to Gov. Bill Graves, who will make the official appointment.

In a vote of 16 Republican precinct committeemen and women in the 123rd House District, Presta received 11 votes, Phyllis Bigler three and Harold Orosco two.

Heinemann, 49, the most senior legislator in Topeka with 27 years in the House, resigned a month ago to become chief attorney for the Kansas Corporation Commission.

Presta, 37, an oil products distributor and member of the Kansas Oil Marketers Association Board of Directors, will fill out the final 16 months of Heinemann's term. The seat, along with the other 124 in the House, will be up for election in November 1996.

RIGHT TO LIFE SEEKS SUPPORT

WICHITA — An effort by Right to Life of Kansas Inc. to force a legal ruling on when life begins — as a way to ban abortions — has drawn opposition from a Republican conservative leader in the House of Representatives.

Speaker Pro Tem Susan Wagle, R-Wichita, wrote fellow anti-abortion legislators, calling the effort a bad idea and self-defeating in the fight to protect pre-born children.

Right to Life is asking House members to support a proposed resolution in the 1996 session that would require Attorney General Carla Stovall to file a lawsuit striking down Kansas' abortion regulation law as violating a constitutional requirement to protect citizens' lives.

The resolution, Wagle wrote, "is a deliberate attempt to circumvent the authority of other elected officials in Kansas, mainly the Senate and the governor, all of whom have a voice in state government and were elected by Kansans, just as you and I were."

GOVERNMENT DEBATES BUDGET

WASHINGTON — Republican leaders seem agreed with President Clinton on the need for a stop-gap spending bill to prevent a massive government shutdown as Congress and the administration inch toward a collision over budget-cutting strategies.

"We don't want any stoppage," House Speaker Newt Gingrich said Tuesday after a White House meeting with Clinton. "We don't want to lay off government employees. We don't want people to be in a position where they're being harmed.

"If there's any way we can work together in a mature, adult manner and get this thing done right," Gingrich, R-Ga., said, "I think we're going to cooperate fully."

However, he vowed not to compromise on the GOP's determination to balance the budget within seven years.

White House press secretary Mike McCurry characterized the meeting as a candid and sobering conversation about the work that lies ahead for the Congress.

The crunch comes Sept. 30 — the end of the fiscal year — when the government's appropriations run out.

So far, Congress has not sent Clinton any of the regular 13 appropriation bills for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. Moreover, the administration has threatened a presidential veto of eight of the measures working their way through the House and Senate.

False alarms bring about residence hall action

Mary Emerson
staff writer

Haymaker Hall kept the Manhattan Fire Department busy this past weekend.

As a result, the Haymaker Hall Governing Board has issued a formal, written statement to the students living in the hall, discouraging the behaviors that led to multiple visits from the fire department.

Firefighters responded to Haymaker on three separate occasions Sept. 8, 9 and 10.

The first incidence was an accident and not the result of a student.

"One was the screws were loose on the fire box, and the fire box started leaning away from the wall, and the alarm went off," Kim Winkler, director of Haymaker Hall, said.

The other two were caused by students.

"The second was someone playing a prank by pulling the alarm," she said. "The third was the fire extinguisher. Somebody purposely set it off in the hallway."

A staff member mistook the thick powder in the air on the third floor for smoke and called the fire department.

The fire extinguisher was removed by K-State Police for fingerprinting.

"We don't know who it was, but we would sure like to. And so would a lot of the residents," Winkler said.

"It may just be one or two people, but it affects everyone — some people lose sleep, and some have tests they are trying to study for," she said.

The message from HGB reminds and reinforces the idea to residents that the hall is a community, and the action of one person affects all the other residents.

"For future reference, we hope that those responsible for actions recently will remember that their actions affect not only themselves but the nearly 600 other citizens who live in this hall. It is our duty to stand up and make sure that the actions we commit do not infringe on the personal freedoms of the rest of the hall," the statement said.

Besides causing commotion for the rest of the residents, there is also a criminal aspect to the events.

"It's a felony — that's the bottom line," Winkler said. "Any tampering with fire equipment is a felony, and we will prosecute."

The Manhattan Fire Department attributes the disturbances to normal occurrences.

"We've had nothing major. Nothing but false alarms," David Johnson, fire director at Manhattan Fire Department, said.

"They've all just been goofballs. Just playing around and being normal K-State kids," he said. "That's always normal at the beginning of the year."

Students await results of shuttle experiments

Phil Roberts
staff reporter

After being delayed by the treacherous weather of Hurricane Luis, Space Shuttle Endeavor is scheduled to return Sept. 18 from its 11-day flight into space.

With that date in mind, there are several anxious scientists at K-State awaiting its return. Not only are there astronauts on that flight, there are also eight scientific experiments.

"My enthusiasm level is up there," Rachelle Wolfe, marketing coordinator for BioServe Space Technology, said.

The eight experiments BioServe is conducting involve bone development and growth, plant growth, cell self-stabilization and water purification.

The experiments were sent into space to determine the effect gravity has on each one.

The space flight is also a test for pharmaceutical treatment of such diseases as osteoporosis.

One of the experiments involved studying the effects of gravity on T-cells.

The study was conducted for the purpose of seeing what effects gravity might have on astronauts for an extended period of time in space.

"We've found that there are immune deviations in their systems," Tony Schountz, graduate in immunology, said.

"Their systems don't look right. They don't get sick or anything, but when they come back their blood cell counts are different," Schountz said.

The projects have been conducted by various undergraduate, graduate and post-doctoral students, and members of BioServe.

"It's very beneficial for the students if they have an interest in space technology or pharmaceutical research," Wolfe said.

The students do get very involved with the various tests. In fact, some of the students actually developed their own experiments, wrote the paperwork and sent their tests up in the space shuttle.

Greg Gallegos, graduate in plant physiology, is one of the students awaiting some of the results.

"I wanted to come up with some concepts of my own. I wanted to provide testable hypotheses," Gallegos said.

BioServe has been at K-State since 1987. There are two different divisions of BioServe: One at K-State and another at the University of Colorado.

The department in Colorado builds the hardware necessary to send the experiments into space.

K-State's job is to provide and send the different biological experiments.

This is BioServe's ninth shuttle mission.

The next mission is scheduled to take off on Sept. 26. That mission will include 11 or 12 biological experiments.

BioServe's experiments are primarily funded by NASA, which provides the base resources for the experiments.

The experiments are also supported by several corporate entities, private companies and foundations and government agencies.

K-State funded about $15,000 in travel expenses to send students and equipment to Florida for the final preparations of the experiments before the launch and for the actual launch.

NASA donates about $2 million to the research projects, with part of it going to Colorado and the other part coming to the K-State division.

"It really is incredible. It's amazing to have (BioServe) right here in the middle of Kansas," Wolfe said. "It's like having NASA in our own back yard."

Lafene's financial ills caused by former Senate

If you're upset you can't get an appointment at Lafene Health Center without waiting at least a week, voice your concerns with Student Senate at 532-6541.

The pain and suffering of Lafene Health Center's financial crippling is being felt by the Lafene staff as well as students who attempt to make an appointment with a doctor there.

The truly painful part is it could have been easily prevented.

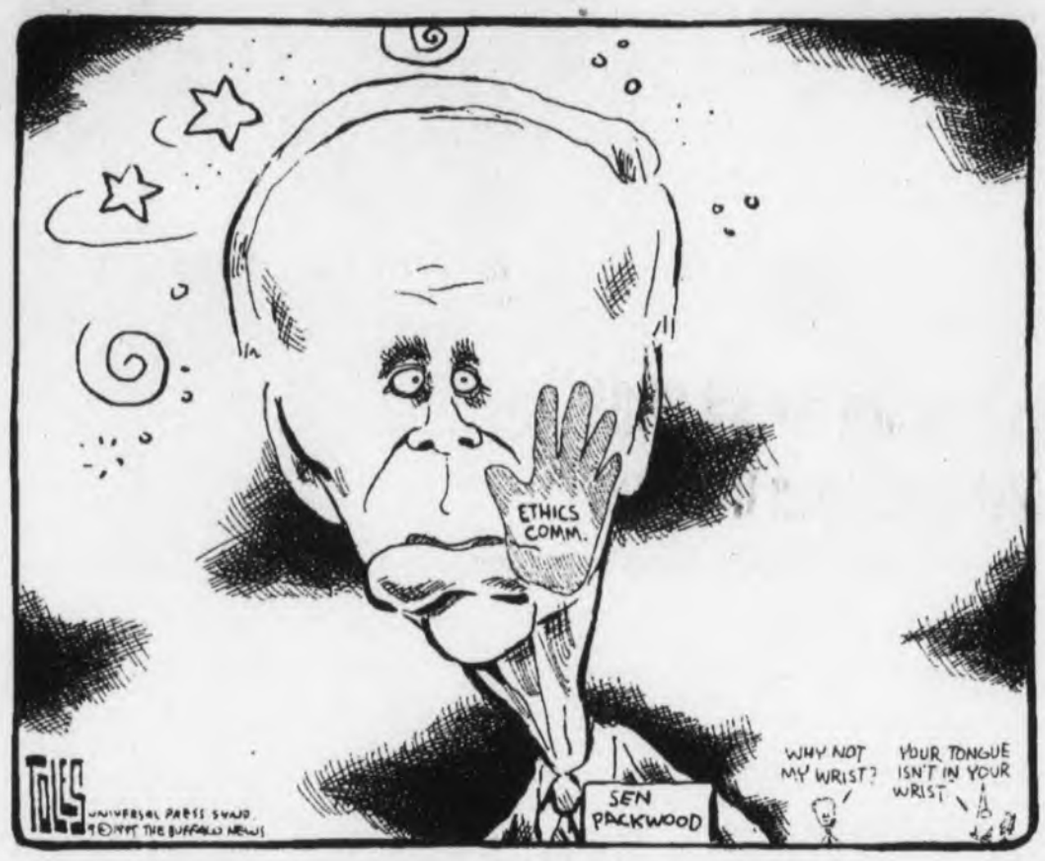
Two years ago, Student Senate decided Lafene had too much money in its reserves.

Senate's attitude was that no other student-funded group on campus had as much unused money, about $2 million, so why should Lafene have the comfort of such a financial cushion?

So, senators decided to cut Lafene's funding by $10 per student, from $80 to $70, to deplete their reserves.

At the time, Senate was warned by Lafene administrators that after the reserves were depleted, fees would have to be dramatically increased to avoid losing the quality of care students had come to expect from Lafene.

Senators decided to ignore this warning, however.



Lafene's predictions have come to fruition.

The health center is now understaffed, creating long waits for visits and requiring more than a week to schedule an appointment.

There are now six positions vacant (because of inadequate funding) that will not be able to be filled until after the spring of 1996. That is the next opportunity Senate will have to approve Lafene's funding.

When that happens, possibly senators should choose to be informed about the consequences of their actions and remember the financial muck a past Senate created for Lafene to wallow in.

Men and women exhibit alarming differences

MATT HAWKINS

I was recently asked by a concerned reader, "Brad, how do you come up with such ridiculous topics for your totally insane columns?"

Well, concerned reader, thank you for asking. My primary method of topic development consists of a highly evolved random process in which I simply spin around and around in my chair until I begin to feel yesterday's lunch in the back of my throat, and then I rush to my computer at maximum impulse power and begin typing.

Granted, most of what I type looks like this: &^3% @ ad#*f ff&^%dork.

Another sophisticated method I use to determine a topic is to take an empty Coke bottle and spin it like we used to do when I was a kid playing "Doctor" with the little girl next door — whomever the bottle pointed at when it stopped spinning had to take off their clothes and ... (EDITOR ALERT!: Mr. Seabourn has gone beyond all reasonable bounds of journalistic ethics and forced us to censor this portion of his column. If you have any comments concerning this alert, please direct your responses to Sen. Bob Dole, Washington, D.C.) ... so if you find my method of typing in the nude offensive, don't read the rest of this column.

Thank you, concerned reader, for your wonderful question. Let me also say that if any other concerned readers out there in the real world have questions they would like me to answer or a super-serious topic they would like to see demolished in a jovial and jocular journalistic fashion, please send them to "Brad's Wacky World of Extemporaneous Writing," c/o K-State Collegian, Kedzie Hall, Kansas State University, Manhattan, KS, 66506.

While we are on the subject of sex: I don't know if you have noticed lately, but men and women are different (my wife interjects at this point that this is an excellent example of the MAJOR difference between men and women — men are ALWAYS on the subject of sex, EVEN when sex is not actually the subject).

It seems appropriate to discuss this minor detail since the PRIME DIRECTIVE for interpersonal relationships while in college is: "A Saturday night in Aggieville coupled with enormous quantities of beer seems to have a direct and significant bearing on what ultimately qualifies in the early morning hours as a man or a woman."

A casual stroll through Aggieville last weekend provided numerous examples in support of this directive ("Whoa, Dave! What IS that creature Bill is taking home with him?" "I don't know Steve ... sorta looks like a large, quasi-hairless rodent to me.")

COLUMN

BRAD SEABOURN

Because this is Thursday, I think we can safely assume most of you have clear enough thought processes by now to finally be able to determine the difference between large, quasi-hairless rodents and members of the opposit sex (for a select group of women this is actually quite easy: you have men on the one hand, and the large, quasi-hairless rodent is Sen. Bob Packwood).

However, aside from the obvious physical differences (large, quasi-hairless rodents aside), such as the fact women always seem to have a headache when they go to bed, or when they wake up, or when they are taking a shower, or when they are doing their aerobic exercises in those tight, nylon exercise shorts, or when they are lying on the kitchen table suggestively dicing erotic-shaped vegetables for the evening meal ... aside from THESE facts, it is the cerebral differences I would like to undress — I mean, "address."

Men and women, quite simply, think differently. Take the taboo topic of birth control.

Man: "Did you use the multi-purpose Cool Whip/birth control foam?"

Woman: "No. I thought you were going to use the dual purpose water balloon/birth control device?"

Man: "But I thought you KNEW I quit using that because it doesn't have the FEEL of a real water balloon?"

Woman: "So, what you are saying is: we just had sex and you didn't use ANYTHING?"

Man: "Well, yes, sort of. But I thought you ..."

Woman: "Sort of? SORT OF!"

Man and Woman (in unison and in complete, uncontrolled fear of pregnancy): "AHHHHHHHH!"

In addition to frequent, unexplained headaches and a skewed sense of sexual responsibility, women possess what is commonly referred to as "female intuition."

As proof of the existence of this extra sense which, by the way, exists in every female form of life on the planet, I submit one of the Seabourn family's dogs as Exhibit A.

Sidney, our large, female, eating/pooping machine, is, under normal conditions of temperature, pressure, and huge quantities of Milk Bone dog biscuits, your average, active, female Labrador.

However, on certain totally unpredictable occasions, she will perceive with her intuitive, female, dog sensors an invisible "intruder" (who is probably using a canine version of a Klingon Cloaking Device) and immediately throw herself into maximum dogwarp overdrive, running around the yard as though she were being chased by Jesse Helms.

This Red Alert usually lasts several minutes until all of her dilithium crystal fuel reserves are exhausted or she discovers a squirrel, at which point (and here is the truly female characteristic manifested at its fullest) ... she will sit down and cry.

I could go on and on with many other weird examples of female ... (telepathically) "Brad, this is your wife. You are being scanned by my superior female sensors. Although I am not in the room and can't actually see you, I KNOW what you are up to and you had better stop RIGHT NOW!"

Uh, as I was saying, men and women are not only different, women are better.

Federal budget defies balancing

Ever since I was a child, my parents stressed to me the need for living within my means. In the real world, even greedy, evil corporations must make the books balance at some point or face being bought out or going bankrupt. Not so with the federal government.

Although the federal government has been in debt — off and on — since the beginning of this country, it usually kept it in check by posting surpluses in subsequent years or doing without in a certain funding area. This has changed over the past few decades. According to financial analyst Joe Batalia, the federal debt is currently in excess of $5 trillion, and the value of the dollar has eroded by 80 percent in the past 20 years.

If the present rate of increases in spending continues unchecked, most analysts agree the debt will exceed the entire budget in roughly 10-15 years.

Reducing the rate of spending is much easier said than done. More than half the budget consists of funding that's required by law, otherwise known as entitlements. To alter this spending, Congress must pass another law to change the previous one. Entitlement spending includes welfare, Medicaid — and the current hot topic — student aid.

Enter stage right: a Republican-controlled Congress. Elected with the help of its promise of provisions to reduce the debt and the rate of spending, the Congress stands ready to clash with the president on virtually every spending bill that passes.

COLUMN

JEREMY STEPHENS

There are now 13 different appropriations bills, each addressing a different area of spending. Both the president and leaders in the Congress have implied they are willing to allow the government to shut down, except for essential services, until they are able to pass a budget that they both agree on.

President Clinton says he really wants to balance the budget but to do it without hurting anyone and over a longer period of time than the Republican plan. This is what politicians have said for decades. Let us not forget that actions speak louder than words. The debt has grown larger, not smaller.

During his campaign, Clinton spoke strongly about reducing the debt and the deficit, although he did make exceptions for investments in America, which basically constitute more spending under a different name. While he did reduce the debt, he did so largely by financing it on short-term bonds which had low interest rates then. They either have expired, or will do so soon, and need to be replaced. However, the interest on these types of bonds has risen considerably, so don't expect a smaller debt without real cuts anytime soon.

The mainstream press has caused many people to believe Republican-sponsored tax cuts are funded by their proposed cuts in social spending. This kind of thinking is sick and wrong. The belief that it is wrong for people to want to keep more of what they earn instead of giving it to the government shows that this country has had too much dependence on government.

It is not only right for people to want to keep what they earn, but it is the most effective way to increase the incomes of everyone because government can not spend money as effectively as people can. For example, although Bill Gates is worth more than $10 billion dollars, he has also made countless numbers of other people rich as the computer industry grows, and who knows how many more people Microsoft could have hired if their taxes weren't so high.

On the other hand, a welfare check makes people dependent on government rather than themselves, over one quarter of welfare funding is spent in administrative costs, and Gates pays much better than Uncle Sam, yet he's the bad guy for being successful.

The budget debate that will erupt soon will be interesting to watch as politicians wage class warfare and fiscal conservation battles and both sides are willing to shut the government down in order to prove their own point. For those of you that care, call your Represenatives in Congress and let them know where you stand.

▶ COLUMNIST HYPOCRISY

Editor,

When Richard Nixon proclaimed in his Checkers speech that the executive branch ought to be held to the same standards of justice as the public, few knew how insincere he was. We often assume that we can trust the statements of our elected officials. But, we absolutely rely on it from the press.

So when a member of the Collegian staff weighs in on an issue, we students expect objectivity. This is what we did not get from Jason Hamilton's Tuesday column.

Before readers accept Hamilton's indictment of Parking Services, they should know a thing or two about his past, just as voters should have known a little more about the character of Nixon.

Two years ago, under the Ed Skoog administration, Hamilton chaired the Parking Citation Appeals Board (PCAB). Under Hamilton's stewardship, PCAB granted nine out of every 10 parking appeals, costing Parking Services thousands of dollars. One such appeal, granted personally by Hamilton, was filed on the grounds that extraterrestrials had moved the subject's vehicle.

It would not be an overstatement to say Hamilton is directly responsible for the destruction of the appeals system. The current unwieldy and unforgiving appeals regime is nothing but the aftermath of Hamilton's last half-baked parking revolution.

Hamilton's past actions have shown nothing but contempt for Parking Services. Readers of his column should be aware that he is, in fact, part of the problem, and should think twice before accepting his solution.

Smatterings

Smoke them if you've got them. Roaches, that is

The Collegian reported Wednesday that the Department of Entomology discovered 40 of the department's Madagascar roaches were found poisoned, and another 35 are still missing at a cost of about $15 a pop. This just goes to show you should smoke those roaches before letting them accumulate. If you don't, someone eventually will lace your roaches with poison or just take them, especially when the roaches are made from that exotic stuff from Africa. That's just some advice for next time, dude.

$11 million for $2,000? Seems an even trade-off

They were calling Marianne Driscol at work and while she was home sleeping. They threatened to put a contract on her life. They threatened to bomb her office. Finally, a Texas judge decided the group of thugs had gone too far in trying to collect the $2,000 Driscol owed. They were fined a total of $11 million for their activities. What unruly group of thugs was harassing Driscol? Loan sharks? Mobsters? In-laws? No. It was a collection agency collecting on her Visa bill. In unrelated news, the IRS continues to confiscate homes, cars, college funds and retirement plans as well as send people to federal prison to collect the money it claims is owed to Uncle Sam.

Tuck a buck? I mean, coin my groin?

As the U.S. moves to convert one-dollar bills to coins, protests have been arising, mostly from the right-wing schizoids who believe the U.N. has taken over Missoula. But recently, the plan has been criticized by another special-interest group: strippers. Tipping dancers by putting dollar bills in the their G-strings would be more difficult, critics claim. "All that weight! We wouldn't be able to carry it if we got, like, 20 singles in coins," one unidentified stripper said in a Washington Post story. It is unclear about whether, if coins replace dollar bills, the G-strings would eventually be shed in order to give audience members access to the dancers' coin slots.

It's a small, small sidewalk after all

Mickey Mouse is putting on a cop badge. Katrina Laurent has been banned from Disneyland for a month. The charge? Excessive and habitual speeding in her wheelchair. She had been stopped three times for tooling around at break-neck speeds of 4.5 mph and was accused of colliding with another Disneyland patron before the temporary suspension of her annual entrance pass. In local news, innumerable morons who insist on illegally riding their bikes on campus sidewalks, oblivious to the dozens of pedestrians they force into the grass, pedaled about without being ticketed.

Hey sister, come to China often?

Reuters reports that the Non-Governmental Organizations Conference in Huairou, China at the same time as the United Nations Fourth World Conference on Women in nearby Beijing featured events that would have been more appropriate on USA Up All Night than CNN. Such events included a Lesbian Flirtation Techniques Workshop and a meeting called the Role of Inflatable Plastic Dolls and Dildos in Improving Health. "The inflatable life-size plastic doll will take the brunt off women and help to solve many global problems," the latter workshop's introduction said. Smatterings was unable to determine what technique was most effective for taking off a woman's brunt, much less than what it is.

Lead and follow

Ballroom dancing teaches skills beyond the box step

Students learning ballroom dancing will not only snare the spotlight at wedding receptions, they will also become better at country and Latin dancing.

Sara Saunders, sophomore in elementary education, teaches about 30 dance classes each semester with Michael Bennett. The beginning and advanced ballroom dance classes are offered through UFM.

"The steps in ballroom dancing translate nicely at receptions and school dances and are similar to modern dances like two-stepping and the foxtrot," Saunders said.

"Everyone wants to look like the great-looking couple on the dance floor, and they can. They don't have to sit out when they could know how to dance every dance."

The hardest part is learning the footwork because an untrained dancer is not used to moving their body that way, Saunders said.

"I've learned about other cultures through dancing, and people get wistful for the past. This is a way to recapture that. It's the romance of men and women working together to make something beautiful — the give and take."

Ara Schlaman, sophomore in biology, said she signed up after attending cultural and international nights at the K-State Student Union.

"It's something I've been wanting to do," Schlaman said. "It's also kind of a connection between generations, and my grandparents are real excited for me to learn these steps."

Schlaman said she practices to improve her dancing coordination.

"Most people nowadays don't dance in partners, at least not most of the time, and it's hard for me to learn to let someone else lead," Schlaman said.

In a group of mostly students, the first session has more men than women enrolled.

Tim O'Brien, first-year architecture student, shared his partner as the men stayed stationary and the women rotated to allow equal practice.

"I saw my parents dancing at a wedding, and they were good," O'Brien said. "It was something I thought I wanted to learn. It's not just that I think it will come in handy later on — it's also a lot of fun."

Michael Bennett, dance instructor, teaches the waltz, foxtrot, swing, tango and cha-cha, and several variations of the traditional steps. Bennett said he believes anybody who wants to learn can.

Dance classes are also a great place for single people to meet, Bennett said.

"Part of the attraction is that they get to make contact with each other. People are breaking down walls, and since I make them introduce themselves, they are meeting each other," Bennett said. "Dancing is just another form of communication, except that you're using your bodies."

Ballroom dancing instructors Sara Saunders, sophomore in elementary education, and Michael Bennett demonstrate the sweetheart position of the cha-cha. Saunders and Bennett teach about 30 dance classes each semester.

Bennett said he believes good dancers are the ones who listen to each other.

"Men have to take charge in the dance, but it's their responsibility to convey to their partners what they want to do next," Bennett said. "She has to be firm against me, and I have to push back. It's a wrestling match that nobody wins."

Bennett teaches the students how to find signals in the music.

"I find cues in the music that they can feel or hear," Bennett said. "I start with the Anglo rhythms because they are more defined, and the Latin rhythms are more subtle and harder to distinguish."

One of the hardest aspects of learning ballroom dancing is teaching men how to lead their partners, Bennett said.

"Generally, women end up learning both parts and reminding their husbands or boyfriends, and then they end up leading, which makes for bad dancing," Bennett said.

"Dancers are suppose to make the impossible look easy, but it's basically two bodies talking and learning to move together."

Students practice their steps under Bennett's watchful eye. The class, sponsored by UFM, is taught on Friday evenings in the gymnasium of Seven Dolors Grade School.

Beginning students in ballroom dancing practice their cha-cha steps by standing on a line with men on one side and their partners on the other.

The world's greatest Wildcat fan

NICOLE POELL

One of the Wildcats' greatest fans is gone.

He wasn't an alumnus of K-State. He didn't have a special suite in the press box. He couldn't even attend any games.

He was my grandpa, Wilfred J. Poell, and despite all of the above, he was the biggest K-State fan I've ever known.

I always knew when it was K-State game day at Grandpa's house. Those were the days when the polka tapes he played constantly went off, and the ancient radio went on.

Grandpa always listened to the games from his garage, where he would putter around in his workshop or fix a grandchild's bike while cursing when the reception went bad.

He didn't dress from head to toe in purple like most Cat fans. Instead, he favored pinstriped "Big Smith" overalls and a tattered K-State baseball cap. On hot days, he'd listen to the game in the comfort of his boxer shorts and a T-shirt, crack open a few Budweisers, turn on a gigantic fan and settle in for Mitch Holthus' pregame show.

Grandpa's interest in K-State athletics had always been strong because three of his eight children graduated from K-State. Despite Grandpa's upbringing, two of his kids graduated from the University of Kansas, and he often referred to them as "those damned Jayhawkers." That's one reason Grandpa enjoyed a KU loss as much as K-State win.

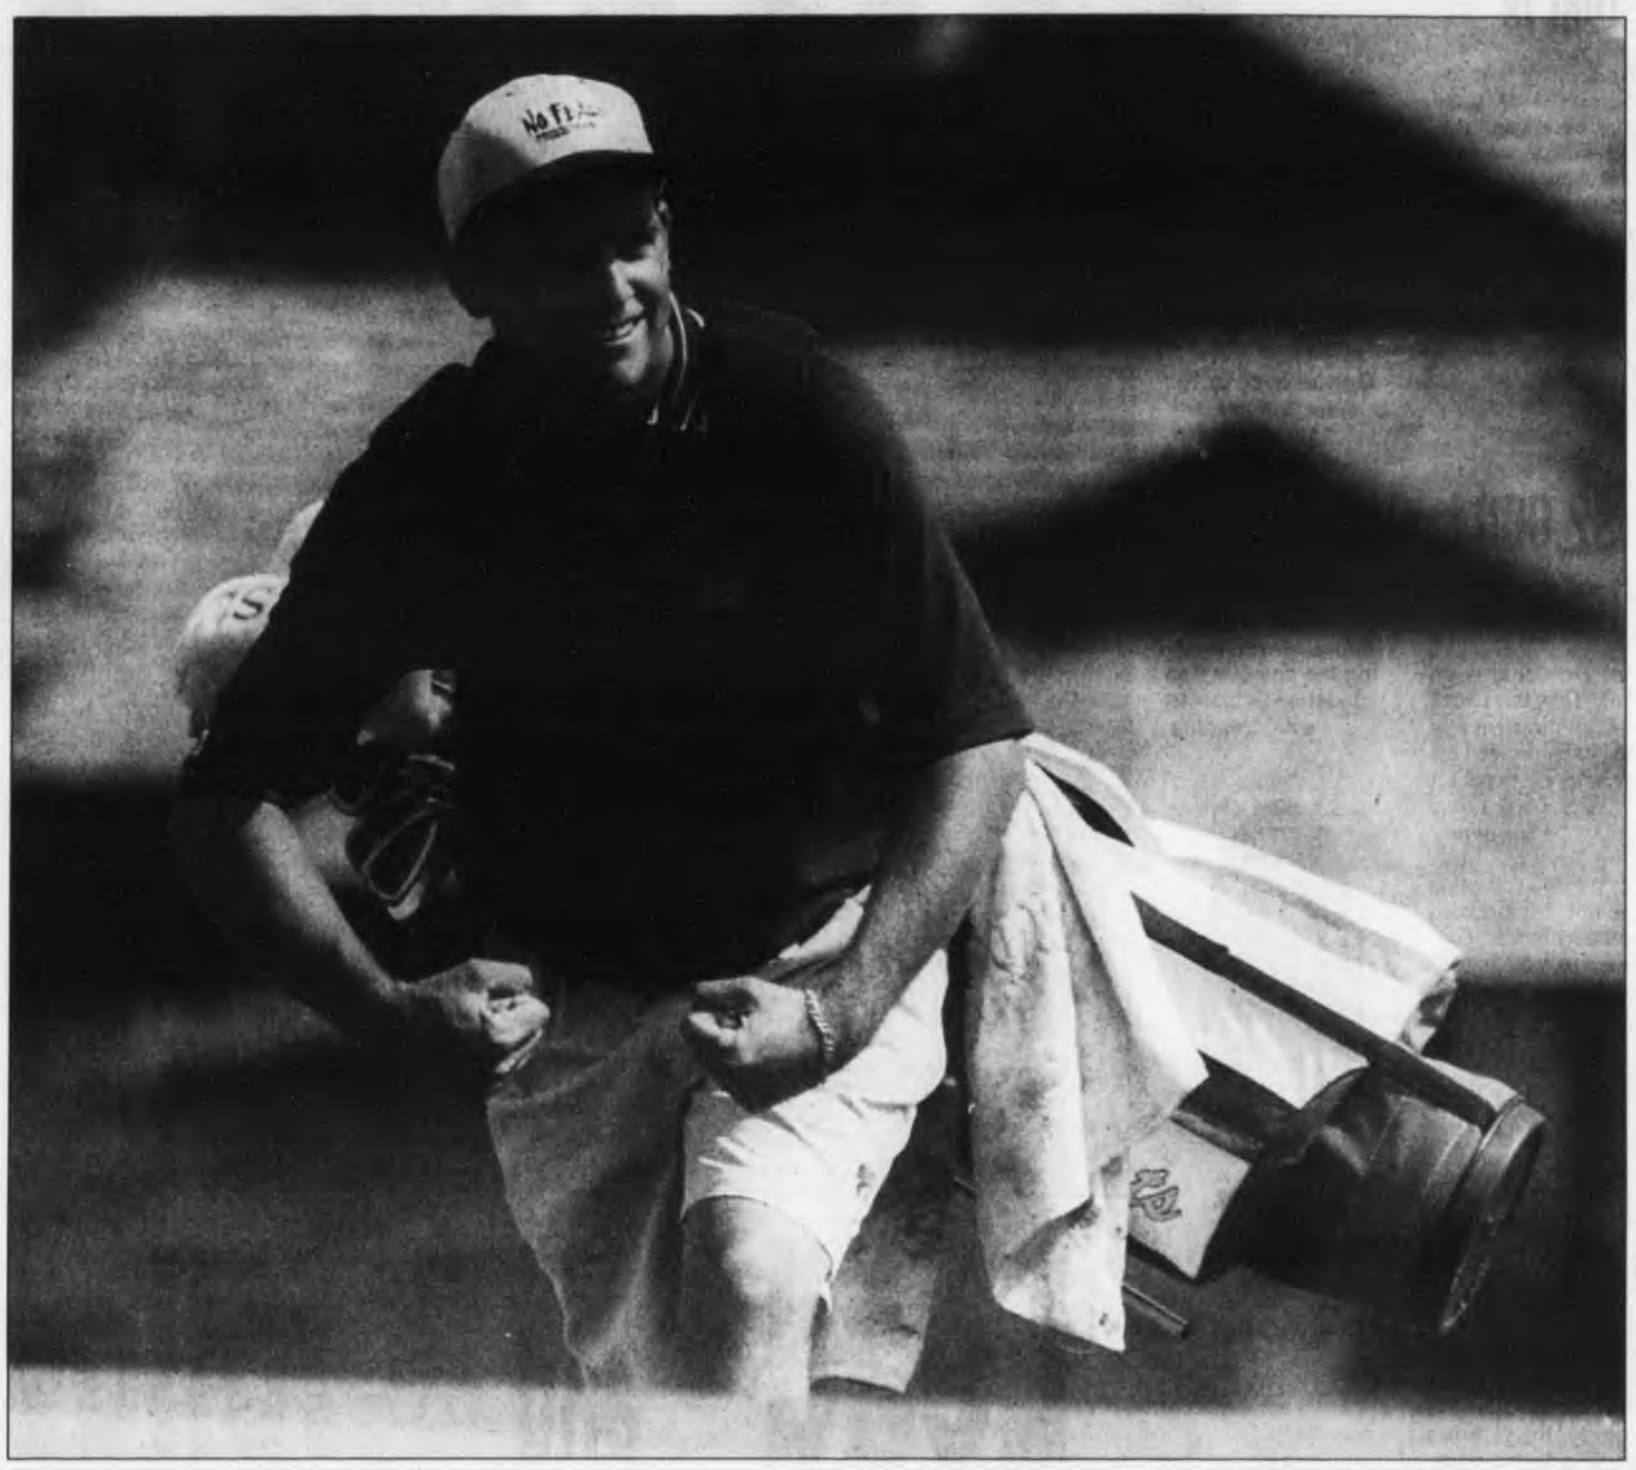
For example, when KU was eliminated from the NCAA basketball tournament last season, Grandpa wrote our family a letter saying, "How 'bout those damned Jayhawkers losing! I'm sure Bethy and Mitch are upset. Think I'll send 'em a towel to cry in." He even taught his children and grandchildren to say, "P.U., I smell KU," whenever we neared Lawrence, a tradition I will continue with my own children.

Grandpa was so happy when I began working as a sports writer for the Collegian. He would cut out all my columns and display them on the refrigerator for all to see. Whenever I visited, he would offer me a beer, and we'd sit in the garage and talk.

I would share all kinds of stories with him about the coaches and games I'd written about. He especially liked hearing about Billy Tubbs' temper tantrum at a basketball game one night. "God, I can't stand that Tubbs, that sonofabitch," Grandpa said in his distinct German accent.

I remember one visit in particular — it was the last one I'd ever have with Grandpa. As usual, he offered me a Bud from his always-stocked fridge, and we sat down beside the wood-burning stove in the garage to discuss K-State's basketball season and the new coach, Tom Asbury.

After I shared some stories about Asbury and the team, Grandpa said, "By God, Cola, I think that 'ole Asbury is going to be one hell of a coach. You tell him that next time you see him."



I invited Grandpa to come up to a basketball game sometime so he could actually see a game rather than listen to it on his old radio. But his knees were in bad shape, and he said it would be too hard to get up and down all those stairs. Then he slipped me a $20 (as he always did), hugged me and said he'd be reading my stories and listening to the Cats on the radio.

But the radio in Grandpa's garage is silent now.

He died last spring of complications as a result of an accident. At his funeral, each of his 18 grandchildren carried a different memento of his to the altar. Among them were his old, faded K-State cap and a Big 8 basketball.

While Grandpa won't be in his garage cheering on the Cats this season, I have a feeling he's cheering them on from another place. A place where his can of Budweiser overfloweth and where the radio reception is always crystal-clear.

Experience to boost K-State men's golf team

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

Much like his counterpart at the volleyball office, men's golf coach Mark Elliott has his team hitting the road this fall.

While Jim Moore's team heads to Long Beach State, Nebraska and Sam Houston State this month, Elliott's squad will play tournaments at Air Force, Kansas, Illinois State, Northeast Louisiana and Texas Arlington between now and Nov. 14.

But with the experience the Wildcats possess, they are primed to contend in each of the five tournaments after winning two meets last season.

"This team is a little bit more experienced than we've had in the past," Elliott said.

The senior trio of Troy Halterman, Scott Hovin and Jason Losch will lead the Cats with junior Chad Buckridge when they travel to Colorado Springs, Colo., today.

Pending NCAA clearinghouse regulations, freshman Mark Sears will round out the traveling squad.

The top four players provide stability to a team with six freshmen.

> "We're experienced enough where we should be right there every tournament."
> MARK ELLIOTT
> K-STATE MEN'S GOLF COACH

"Those four have a lot of experience, so we feel we're in good shape," Elliott said. "That's a good nucleus to build around."

Last season, Hovis qualified for the NCAA tournament as an individual and led K-State in stroke average (75.9), fairways in regulation (76 percent) and putting (31.1 per 18 holes).

Elliott said the key to Hovis' scoring well is his short game.

"Scott's come a long way with his ball-striking ability, and he's such a good putter," Elliott said. "The key at our level is to have a good short game. You have to be able to get it up and down and make your putts."

Elliott said each of the top five players have a well-rounded game and can hit any club in the bag at any situation.

"They can all hit all the clubs," Elliott said. "To play at this level, you can't just have a couple of favorite clubs."

Although K-State has a good short game, it can also hit the fairways off the tee and make most of the greens in regulation.

"These guys all hit far enough to reach the par fives in two," Elliott said. "This group is a solid-driving group, and they're a little more accurate than teams in the past."

With the top four players set, it allows the younger players to develop under practice conditions rather than in tournaments, with team strokes on the line.

"The experience takes some pressure off the freshmen," Elliott said. "To develop our younger players, they do that in practice. We're losing four players next year, so we need these young guys to play better and post better scores."

With this weekend's tournament in the high elevations of the Rockies, one might think the ball would automatically travel farther. Not so, Elliott said.

"The higher you hit the ball, the bigger the difference," he said. "If you hit the ball low, it doesn't make a difference."

All of which means K-State might use the fairway woods a lot more than their long irons this weekend. Elliott said if the pin is 200 yards away, you can play like it's 180.

For the fall season, Elliott said it was important to beat teams in K-State's district such as Nebraska and Wichita State. But he also said the fall season isn't supremely important to the team's success later in the season.

"It's not vital," Elliott said. "We're a fairly experienced group, so we want to be in the running to win the tournament every time we tee it up.

"We're experienced enough where we should be right there every tournament."

WOMEN'S GOLF OPENS SEASON IN NEBRASKA

The K-State women's golf team returned home Tuesday after playing in Lincoln, Neb., at the Chip-in Club Invitational.

In a field of 20 teams, the Wildcats found themselves in the No. 12 spot at day's end. Taking home first-place honors this year was Texas Tech, with a team total of 939. Nebraska, Southern Methodist and Tennessee tied for second with 948.

The highest-ranking finisher for the Cats was Trisha Hoover, who shot 81-88-84 — 253 to earn a tie for the No. 40 spot. J.J. Rorie of Texas Tech led all scores with a 74-79-75 — 228.

TENNIS TEAM HIRES NEW ASSISTANT COACH

Kansas State tennis coach Steve Bietau announced that the squad has hired Monika Kobilikova, a 1994 graduate of Brigham Young University, to be the team's new assistant coach.

Once one of the top juniors in Czechoslovakia, Kobilikova lead the BYU Cougars tennis team to Top-20 finishes in each of her years with the squad and at one time finished the season as the No. 12-ranked women's tennis squad in America.

Bietau said Kobilikova brings a high level of technical expertise to the K-State tennis program, backed by having played an important part in one of the top programs in college tennis.

"She has a strong tennis background and a sense of confidence about herself that's well-founded," Bietau said. "She's somebody I feel extremely good about having in contact with our athletes.

"I think she's going to be great for our program."

Kansas City Chiefs name, logo caught in political crossfire

■ GOP event uses logo without team's approval

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

The "Kansas City Chiefs' Golf Tournament," a Republican fund-raiser, got some unwanted attention this week when the Chiefs announced they had not authorized the event.

"A current flyer promoting a Kansas City Chiefs' Golf Tournament sponsored by the Republican House Campaign does not carry the endorsement of the Kansas City Chiefs and is not an official club function," Bob Moore, director of public relations for the Chiefs, said in a letter to the Kansas Democratic Party.

"Furthermore, the use of the team's name and logo are prohibited in promotion of the tournament without the permission of the Kansas City Chiefs. No permission was given."

The event was planned with the help of several members of the Kansas City Chiefs' Ambassadors Club, a group composed of former players.

"When we put this together, we had a lot of people from the Kansas City Chiefs' Ambassadors Club participate," Mike Farmer, chair of the Republican House Campaign Committee, said.

"The Ambassadors Club uses the Chiefs' logo, and I'm sure they have permission.

"But this was something that shouldn't have been done, and I apologized personally last week," Farmer said.

"It was an oversight."

> "Furthermore, the use of the team's name and logo are prohibited in promotion of the tournament without the permission of the Kansas City Chiefs. No permission was given."
> BOB MOORE
> CHIEFS' PUBLIC-RELATIONS DIRECTOR

But Lyn Shaw, executive director of the Kansas Democratic Party, has questioned the ethics of such an act.

"Fund-raising is a part of politics, and we certainly do not begrudge the Republican House caucus from seeking endorsements and raising money," Shaw said Tuesday. "However, there are rules and ethical standards to be followed. The gratuitous use of a professional sports organization's name and logo without their knowledge sets a dangerous precedent.

"I find it appalling at a time when voters are demanding tougher ethical standards for lobbying and campaign finance, the Republicans are using such deceptive and unethical, if not illegal, tactics in their fund-raising efforts.

"Apparently, the Republicans would like us all to do as they say, just not as they do."

Farmer said he feels the Democrats have overreacted to a simple mistake.

"I think the Democrats are making much ado about nothing," Farmer said.

"I'm really disappointed that they came on so strong with this."

Architect discusses structure

Chad Moreland
staff reporter

Vast research and compatible surroundings are two key components of architecture.

British architect Paul Shepheard discussed these issues and others related to his book "What is Architecture?" Wednesday to a nearly full house at Forum Hall.

Shepheard, who lives and works in London, has been actively practicing thematic landscape for the last 20 years.

"Landscape, buildings and machines are all equal structures in architecture," Shepheard, a graduate of the Architectural Association, said.

Contradictions in the land and chaotic situations in the world are also issues that have an important effect on architecture, Shepheard said.

"Architecture deals with certainties all the time, so it involves an attempt to predict chaotic patterns," he said.

Trying to predict the success of a structure with its surroundings is like trying to predict the weather, Shepheard said.

In order to understand the landscape, Shepheard said he believed it must be researched. This would allow architects to find out how to protect the land and further the success of architecture.

"Today's style is invisible, and that's why we can't see it," he said. "You can't just imagine things in place — you have to set out and force them into place."

Shepheard said he looks at architecture in a way that varies from the standard view.

"He brought up many interesting connections, but I wasn't sure that I agreed with everything that he said," Paul Bonaventura, sophomore in master landscape architecture, said.

Shepheard's view of architecture brings up many complex issues in the field.

"I agreed with him on the points that I could understand, but I had a little trouble following him at times," Karyl Powell, junior in pre-nursing, said.

Brother carries on act, smashing tradition

Becky Shendan
staff reporter

If you're heading out to Bobby T's Restaurant and Bar tonight, you might want to bring along a raincoat.

Ron Gallagher, otherwise known as "Gallagher 2, The Living Sequel," will be performing there — and it could get messy.

In fact, you can pretty much count on it.

Gallagher 2 takes some of his act from his famous older brother Gallagher, who was famous for smashing various produce items and using stage props during his comedy monologues.

Ron Gallagher now tours the nation with the act, and he said his brother supports him and gave him total permission to carry on his act.

"My favorite part of the show is the Sledge-O-Matic," Ron Gallagher said.

"I love smashing everything at the end. It's great because everybody has such a good time."

The Sledge-O-Matic, a trademark of the original Gallagher, is a giant sledgehammer used to smash almost anything in sight — especially watermelons, Ron Gallagher said.

Ron Gallagher said he decided to go into comedy because it was a lot more fun than what he was doing at the time, which was selling heavy equipment.

He said his brother put him into his act to fool the crowd and then later encouraged him to start doing comedy.

"I went on stage for the first time and had such a great time," he said. "Anyone who performs will tell you the same thing. Once you get on stage, you never want to quit."

Ron Gallagher said he's been doing the act for about five years and has incorporated his own material into his brother's act.

"Actually, right now, I would say the act is about 70-percent mine, and 30 percent my brother's," he said.

Ron Gallagher said there has been some criticism about his using his brother's act.

"Every once in a while, I'll hear someone complain," he said.

"There's always going to be somebody who is negative about almost anything, but I'm there to entertain and perform for those people who came to see me. I can't let it bother me."

Aside from the savage mutilation of fresh fruits and vegetables, the show should not be too graphic.

▶ BOSNIAN WAR

NATO airstrikes uneffective

Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Despite two weeks of intensive NATO airstrikes against rebel Serb targets, the campaign is showing no sign of forcing a Serb pullback of heavy weapons from around Sarajevo.

With NATO aircraft poised to hit new rebel targets, a senior U.S. official prepared to meet anew with Serbia's powerful president, Slobodan Milosevic, in a bid to find a negotiated end to the 40-month-long war.

The warring parties have agreed to give the Serbs 49 percent of Bosnia and a federation of Bosnian Croats and Muslims the rest. U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Richard Holbrooke was feeling out the positions of the factions before any new meeting among them on the plan.

NATO warplanes on Tuesday attacked a half-dozen Serb military targets around Sarajevo and in eastern Bosnia — ammunition dumps, storage sites, militarily strategic bridges, and command and control posts.

Tuesday's pounding was the heaviest in the Sarajevo area since the intensive airstrikes began.

Man arrested after art scam discovered

Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — A man collected $410,000 from his insurance company after reporting two Italian Renaissance paintings stolen from the bedroom of his California ranch house. But it turns out the artworks had never left the Vatican.

About the only proof of ownership that Lucio Ambroselli had offered when he insured the works three weeks earlier were two amateurish snapshots of the paintings hanging in the Vatican Art Museum, investigators said.

Now State Farm Fire and Casualty Co. wants its money back, and Ambroselli has been charged with fraud.

Ambroselli, 57, was arrested last week after more than three years of investigation by the FBI and the Italian Arma de Carabinieri art theft unit.

The retired Alitalia employee is accused of swindling State Farm by claiming the paintings, an Iranian silk rug, a Russian icon and a jade Buddha were stolen in 1992. Police found the rug, icon and statue wrapped in sheets stuffed into a duffel bag when they searched his house on Friday.

"Can you imagine State Farm coming to your house and insuring your house without even having an appraiser look at it?" said art professor Phil Hitchcock of California State University at Sacramento. "They should have never insured those."

The insurance agent who visited Ambroselli's house in a gated community in Loomis, 20 miles east of Sacramento, was shown two sealed wooden crates. Ambroselli said the paintings were inside, undergoing a chemical treatment to protect them from light and humidity, and could not be shown, the company said.

Photographs of the paintings, which Ambroselli said were "Death of the Dragon" by Ghirlandaio and "Madonna Con Bambino" by Piero della Francesca, were affixed to the crates.

"If the agent had any questions about it, if he didn't feel that everything was in line before he issued the insurance, we would have taken whatever steps needed to ensure it was genuine," State Farm spokesman Lonny Haskins said.

When the paintings were reported missing three weeks later, Haskins said they had suspicions, but having no proof, they had to go ahead and pay the claim.

The company launched an investigation, and two paintings identical to those in the photographs were found at the Vatican Art Museum, where they had hung for centuries.

The works, it turned out, are really "San Giorgio Che Occide Il Drago," Paris Bordone's 1525 painting of St. George slaying the dragon, and "Madonna Della Pera," painted by Alessandro Buonvicino, known as Moretto da Brescia, in 1505.

20-year-old elected, becomes youngest mayor

Associated Press

GEUDA SPRINGS — As Tom Henning threw candy to children running alongside his inauguration parade, many people thought he was the newly elected mayor's son.

At 20, Henning is the youngest mayor of Geuda Springs, a community of about 250 in extreme southeast Kansas near Arkansas City.

There were no big campaign speeches, no passing out fliers or debating his opponent. Henning didn't really have an opponent because nobody else wanted to be mayor.

"It started out as a joke because there wasn't gonna be any names on the ballot," said Henning, covered in grease and carrying a wrench and pliers in his jeans pocket as he took a break from his job at a farm. "It was just gonna be write-in votes, so I told everyone to vote for me."

> "It's not like a big town. Everyone calls here to complain. If he's not here, they complain to me, and i don't want to be the complaint department."
> AMANDA HENNING, WHO DID NOT VOTE FOR HER SON FOR MAYOR

Jerry Hills, who operates a garage in Geuda Springs, said Henning kept mouthing off that he was running for mayor, so we wrote his name in.

Henning won the election in April with nine votes. He was 19. Former Mayor Sam Dargel and other names were written in for a total of eight other votes.

Probably five votes for Henning came from employees at Jerry Hills' garage, Hills said. Another vote came from Henning's father, John.

His mother, Amanda Henning, didn't vote for him.

"It's not like a big town," she said. "Everyone calls here to complain. If he's not here, they complain to me, and I don't want to be the complaint department."

Most of the time, Henning tries to save city money by doing work himself and gathering volunteers from around the town. He has spent several hours grading the roads and mowing weeds.

Before being elected, Henning had no experience in government, except as sophomore class president at Oxford High School, where he graduated in 1993.

"It's not as easy as I thought it would be," says Henning, of being mayor. "But it's not that hard."

Internet offers more bands for the buck

Darin Siefkes
contributing writer

This week, we will look into the various music pages on the net. All pages have been reviewed using Netscape (http://netscape.com), which is highly recommended above other viewing applications.

PHISH site
(http://archive.phish.net/phish/)

The Phish Net is dedicated to the cult band Phish. This page has information on the band, song lyrics, and T-shirts and memorabilia ordering info. It also has information on netiquette and general reference, so if you are new to the Net, here is a great place to start.

Phish followed the lead of the Grateful Dead by allowing people to tape its shows. So, the site includes the band's recommendations on techniques for taping and trading recordings.

It's a good place to get in touch with other people who like to 'bootleg' shows.

Pink Floyd site
(http://landru.unx.com/SIGS/DD/PRODUCTS/MUSIC/docs/floyd.html)

This page, put out by Network Digital JukeBox, has put the first three minutes of every song from several Pink Floyd albums on-line.

(http://ibms15.scri.fsu.edu/~patters/nin.html)

Of about 13 pages, the "UnOfficial NINE INCH NAILS Home Page" is one of the best. Its programmers have compiled all of the lyrics, tablature and a plethora of miscellaneous information about the band.

The picture archive of Trent Reznor is one of the best on the Net at this time. The page's authors have included every known interview with Reznor and several reviews in a style that makes them easy to view and save. There is also a links page to take you to other NIN sites.

Jacob Robertson's music page
(http://bert.cs.byu.edu/~jacob/groups/musical_interests.html)

Robertson, the page programmer, has put together one of the best-looking musical pages on the net.

The page contains lyrics and graphics of Led Zeppelin, Pink Floyd, Billy Joel, the Beatles and more.

Even with a 28.8k connection, this page is slow, but it is worth the wait. It's a good time to grab a cup of coffee.

Underground music
(http://www.iuma.com/)

This is the home for the infamous Internet Underground Music Archive (IUMA). This site is dedicated to exposing the music of more than 500 international, unsigned bands to the users of the net.

Every band on the IUMA is indexed for keyword searching. Through this search, users can discover what style of music each band plays, as well as numbers to call for concert information. You can even download songs.

And for the aspiring musician, IUMA also has links to many record company pages.

Know a cool link? Let me know about it. E-mail Darin Siefkes at (wings@ksuvm.ksu.edu).

Book bans spark interest

Associated Press

CHICAGO — WARNING! Do not read the next paragraph.

If that made you want to read on, you might have proved the American Library Association's point: banning books just makes teenagers want to read them.

"I think that's the best sell we could do for a book," said Pat Scales, library media specialist at Greenville (S.C.) Middle School and a member of the American Library Association's Intellectual Freedom Committee.

It makes sense to Patty Hart, a 16-year-old junior at St. Scholastica High School. "At this age, you're trying to gain your own independence," she said.

Classmate Yara Prieto, who's reading "Like Water for Chocolate," agreed. "If they wanted to ban that book, I'd want to read it more," she said this week.

As the ALA prepares for its annual Banned Books Week, Sept. 23-30, when it publicizes censorship attempts, it released a report on the 760 challenges to school and library materials reported to its Office of Intellectual Freedom in 1994.

Two-thirds of the challenges were in schools. Most reflected concerns with sex and the occult. Challenged titles ranged from Hans Christian Andersen's "The Little Mermaid" to Howard Stern's "Private Parts."

When a book was challenged at a school near Scales' several years ago, the work had a renaissance.

"We couldn't keep it in," she recalled. "The public library told me they just had a huge waiting list."

The book — Christopher Collier's "My Brother Sam Is Dead" — had not been a hit beforehand. It's about the Revolutionary War.

Insults to GOP speaker cause conflict

Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — After months of enduring insults from her Republican colleagues, GOP Assembly Speaker Doris Allen lashed out by belittling their manhood.

"Do I let a group of power-mongering men with short penises tell me what to do?" Allen said Tuesday, a day after Republican party leaders turned in more than 25,000 signatures to try to force an election in November to recall her from office.

The 80-member Assembly has been in turmoil for months because of maneuvering by Democrat Willie Brown, who held the powerful speaker job for 14 years, to stay in power even though the Republicans gained a 41-39 majority in November.

A single GOP defector allowed Brown to stay in power for months. Then, in June, he persuaded Allen — a little-known Orange County legislator — to run for speaker and delivered the Democratic votes she needed to defeat her GOP rival.

Since then, Allen's Republican colleagues have shunned and insulted her, calling her a pawn, traitor, puppet and even "Willie Brown in drag." One lawmaker said, "She's a deviant and needs to be punished."

Until this week, Allen insisted she would not quit the speakership. But on Monday, she conceded she might step down if she can't get pledges of at least $300,000 this week to fight the recall attempt.

Important legislation on such issues as earthquake insurance and relief for bankrupt Orange County is bogged down because of the political infighting. The Legislature is scheduled to adjourn Friday.

Allen's chief GOP ally, Assemblyman Brian Setencich, said he didn't have a problem with Allen's crack about her critics. "I think her comment was in jest or fun really," he said.

But Republican Assemblywoman Paula Boland said a man who made a comparable remark about women would be in trouble.

"You can't say one is in jest and the other is trouble," she said. "If a man made this kind of statement against women, can't you see the rallies and protests?"

On Tuesday, a special election in Orange County gave the GOP another 41-39 majority.

The election of Richard Ackerman will not be enough to remove Allen from office, but it could increase pressure on her to step down.

BIKES

this manner can receive a chain lock, Lunsway said.

"Parking in a handicap ramp is a real problem," Lunsway said. "If there's a fire, a person in a wheelchair might not be able to get out. There have been situations where a person in a wheelchair can't get into the building."

Lunsway said about 20 bicyclists have received chain locks on their bikes this semester. To remove the U-bolt lock, Lunsway said the bicyclist must come to Parking Services to pay past parking tickets and a chain-lock fee.

Lunsway said Parking Services does not know who owns the bikes they are ticketing.

"It could belong to a faculty or staff member, student or visitor," he said. "We don't know."

Both Lunsway and Archer said the first few months of school will be a time to educate students about bike rules and regulations.

"Right now we're trying to educate people instead of enforcing all bike violations," Lunsway said.

"We're not giving the strong arm to everyone but trying to educate everyone first."

Archer said he agreed.

"We're not so hard-nosed that we're looking for every violator," Archer said, "but we are enforcing the rules against people parked on a handicapped ramp or tree."

Archer said campus police are here to protect and serve — not to discourage people from riding bikes.

"Instead of being reactive, we're being proactive," Archer said.

"Now we're posting more signs and educating the bicycle community."

Lunsway said usually the campus police enforce moving bicycle violations and Parking Services enforces bicycle parking problems. In the future, Lunsway said this might change.

A bike fair had been planned for Wednesday to give students an opportunity to learn about bike safety and register their bikes, but the event was postponed.

"I think what took place was that the Union Program Council got busier, and several personnel changes took place," Darell Edie, chairman of the University Council Parking Operations, said. "I just don't think they were able to get things done like they had planned. It just all fell through the cracks."

Edie said the bike fair will be in roughly three weeks. He said it will be sponsored either by Parking Council and UPC or the council and Student Government.

"We want to have the fair while bikes are still on campus and before everyone's taken their bikes home," he said.

Edie said they plan to have the bike fair during a school day and run it from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at least partially in the free-speech zone between the K-State Student Union and Seaton Hall.

He said bicyclists would be able to ride their bikes up to a table and receive help from campus police in finding their bicycle registration numbers.

In addition, Parking Services plans to have bicycle vendors at the fair and bicycle safety information available.

and Moscow.

Hoagland said the grenade exploded inside a large photocopying machine, which absorbed most of the shock. The small room was empty at the time, he said.

"There were no warning calls," Hoagland said. "As of now, no one has claimed responsibility."

A spent grenade launcher, a black ski mask and a glove were found across the ring road, Hoagland said. Police said the launcher was lying inside an archway leading to a tree-covered courtyard that might have been the escape route. Some Russian media reports said the attacker escaped in a waiting car.

Glass, shrapnel and what looked like the rocket-propelled grenade's tail littered the pavement outside the embassy.

"Most likely it was an anti-tank grenade," said Moscow Civil Defense commander Col. Ivan Chigogidze.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Nicholas Burns said someone was using the copy machine five minutes before the explosion.

"They could have been killed," he said.

Interior Ministry commandos, police and embassy guards cordoned off the area. The embassy's Marine guards, armed with automatic rifles and machine guns, stood guard. Bomb-sniffing police dogs were also on the scene.

All but essential personnel were evacuated, but the modern annex behind the embassy's main building remained open.

Rush-hour traffic continued to crawl along the broad boulevard in front of the embassy as crowds of onlookers gathered on sidewalks. One elderly woman asked police officers if she, too, were in danger.

"Don't worry, lady," he joked. "They won't shoot at you or me. They're shooting at the lair of imperialism."

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

him for standing out here like that. There's not too many people that would do that."

Carlisle said he was traveling college campuses in an effort to humbly promote the word of the Lord. His last stop was the University of Kansas, where Carlisle said he was received by a similarly hostile audience. His next destination is the University of Boulder in Colorado.

Holding up a copy of Wednesday's Collegian, Carlisle pointed to a front-page photo of Lisa Kushell, comic and actress from Los Angeles, who presented "Hot, Sexy, and Safer II" Tuesday evening in the Union.

"I wonder why this whore got paid," Carlisle shouted at the crowd. "Any sex that puts you in hell is not safe."

A man in the crowd flung a packaged condom at him.

"What kind of sex is good sex?" Carlisle yelled out to the students.

"Doggy style," someone said, while the crowd roared with laughter.

"You can put your hope in that condom," Carlisle said. "But one day, your bubble will burst. Safe sex is not safe from God's judgment," he said.

Deb Taylor, Human Resource department faculty member, stood off to the side observing the students reactions.

"They're having fun with him," she said. "It's no different than Fred Phelps. All their messages are the same, but this one may be more comical."

"People like this come and go," she said. "It helps in the time of the radical religious right to expose these people. It shows their inability to show any other view than their own."

> "He's turning people off who are not Christians. If you preach the word of God, preach it with love."
> MARION CRAMER
> FRESHMAN UNDECIDED

Many students in the audience said they resented Carlisle's presentation of Christian ideas.

"He has a weak theology. I'm a Christian. The Bible says that to bring reproach upon the name of Jesus is a sin. He's not only made a fool of himself, but of Jesus," Kevin Bailey, senior in elementary education, said.

Megan Anderson, senior in civil engineering, confronted Carlisle in the middle of the courtyard while a majority of the audience applauded.

"He's misrepresenting Christians when Christians already have a bad reputation on this campus," Anderson said. "All I have to say is Satan's most powerful tool is half-truths from the word of God. I love God, and I care about all these people's souls. And if he hardens their heart against God, then Satan has won."

Marion Cramer, freshman undecided, nodded in agreement.

"He's turning people off who are not Christians," Cramer said. "If you preach the word of God, preach it with love. He's forcing his beliefs by using hatred, just like Hitler."

Greg Adams, senior in civil engineering, watched the unfolding scenario, disgusted at the way students were treating Carlisle.

"Tom is here telling people to repent of their sins and to run to Jesus Christ and have eternal life," Adams said, shortly before speaking on Carlisle's behalf in front of the crowd.

"People shouldn't pass judgment. They should seek God and find out the truth for themselves," he said. "What he says is true — please repent and turn to Jesus before it's too late."

Two hours into the shouting match, the topic of O.J. Simpson came up.

"Nicole Brown Simpson had no regard for human life," Carlisle said. "Her medical records show she had six little babies cut up to pieces and pulled right out of her womb."

"Does that justify her murder?" students called out, but they did not get a response.

Carlisle said he was not discouraged by the students' reaction. He said although he knows God was not pleased with some of the audience members, he hopes some seeds have been planted in the minds of those present.

"If they reject my approach or the message, they reject God," he said.

"I feel sorry for this guy. He obviously cares about what he's doing and about the people out here, he's been out here in the sun for hours," Lindy Loveridge, junior in art therapy, said. "But his approach doesn't work."

hey want me to keep 25 percent in reserves."

At the same time Senate voted to cut fees by $10, it also voted to maintain 25 percent in reserves for contingencies. This is 10 percent more than the amount Senate voted to be required in reserves in March of 1989.

In 1994 the Finance Committee proposed a bill that would cut student health fees because Lafene had amassed too large a reserve because of a mandatory $25 health fee for part-time students.

Lafene had also experienced a high utilization cycle, and Senate believed it would be in the best interest of students to reduce the fees.

"We passed the bill lowering the fee because we saw it as being excessive," Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator.

"If they want to try to scare Senate by saying they're going to raise the cost of services, fine, but I don't think the quality of service has gone down that much."

LeDoux, who sponsored the 1994 bill to lower Lafene's fee, said he believes the cost of education is getting out of hand.

"Before we reduced the health fee, it was the largest fee on campus. After reducing the fee by $10, it's still the largest fee on campus," LeDoux said.

"I'm a senior, and I've never set foot in Lafene. It's just not fair to everyone," he said.

All student fees are reviewed every two years, and the health fee is up for review during this school year.

"We are looking into ways to make the fees beneficial to everyone," LeDoux said. "There might be the option of a user fee and a optional fee," he said.

At enrollment, a student would be given the option of choosing one or the other.

The user fee would allow students to pay as you use it. Students would be able to choose whether they might need to use Lafene and whether they want to pay a health fee if the optional fee takes effect.

Some students are comfortable with things the way they are.

"I like how everything is now," Tucker Pierce, senior in secondary education, said. "I didn't even notice that fees were any lower. I just hope they won't charge for appointments. That would bother me."

And that is exactly what Zweimiller has proposed to do.

"There will be a slight increase in the cost of services, such as X-rays, prescriptions, lab work, physical therapy and an appointment fee," Zweimiller said.

However, the prices at Lafene will still be lower than anywhere else in the community, Zweimiller said.

The Lafene Advisory Committee is now looking for a cure to Lafene's money problems.

"We needed those fees," Zweimiller said. "It's like the city fire truck. Everyone helps pay for it, even if they haven't had a fire. Fees spread the cost out evenly."

The committee plans to survey students about what they would like to see done with Lafene.

■ Sleepout simulates night of homelessness

Dana Harding
staff reporter

A group of 30 students slept in cardboard boxes Thursday night in front of the K-State Student Union.

The overnight sleepout was sponsored by the SPURS sophomore honorary to raise awareness about homelessness. The money raised will benefit the Manhattan Emergency Shelter.

Students said they realized one night outside did not compare to the life of a homeless person, but they were trying to parallel the circumstances.

"It is not near the same experience. I'm sure that there are emotions and feelings we are missing out on. The important part is the we have done something and that we tried to make a differenc,e" said Lance Davidson, sophomore in math and engineering and a SPURS member.

Amy Martin, sophomore in biological engineering and vice president of SPURS, said she doesn't think homelessness can be replicated by people who aren't homeless.

"We have very little of the actual feeling. We won't be able to fully undertake the situation. One thing that is hard is that we all have friends here," Martin said.

Because this is the first year the event was organized, some members said they were worried about the response SPURS would receive.

"I was a little nervous because we planned this event last spring, and I thought that the members might have forgotten about it. But everyone has been excited about it for the past month," Amy Bartel, sophomore in architectural engineering and president of SPURS, said

"We have had a good turnout. I hope it will turn out to be an annual event and can include other organizations on campus."

Mayor Edith Stunkel spoke to the students about homelessness and the effect students can have on the problem.

She challenged students with four solutions to homelessness. Students should know themselves and to how they feel about the homeless problem, learn the scope and trends of the problem, set measurable goals and learn how interventions can achieve the goals.

"Each one of you has the opportunity to make a difference. I suggest knowing yourself and following this process will help," Stunkel said.

On a broader scale, society responds to homelessness in two ways, Stunkel said. People either think they can or cannot make a difference.

"The humanitarian response is to set up a shelter or to be an advocate to Congress, but then there are people who want to distance themselves from the problem by clearing out parks or avoiding areas with homeless people," Stunkel said.

The Manhattan Emergency Shelter opened in January 1985 with a goal to provide the homeless and economically disabled a place to reestablish their pride and financially stabilize.

The shelter provides shelter, food, a clothing room, counseling, basic nutrition classes, money management and budget classes and life-skills classes that are available to the public.

Most services are provided to families that are relocating, families facing financial disasters and women who have left abusive relationships rather than people who do not have a residence.

"Last year we served 404 unduplicated, first-time individuals. Out of the 404, 343 were adults and 70 were children under the age of 18," said Junell Norris, executive director of the Manhattan Emergency Shelter.

When people go to the shelter seeking help, they are first sent to the Riley County Police Department to be screened.

"We send them to the police department as a part of the check-out procedure to ensure that they do not have police records," Norris said.

Individuals are then read the house rules and within 24 hours must develop a plan of action with a case manager.

The plan organizes how each individual needs to reestablish independence. Individuals can be housed for two weeks to a month, depending on the success of the plan.

Stunkel said homelessness is a new phenomenon, and there is hope that it can be solved.

"Each time I'm confronted, it is not the same experience. Each time I know I'm making a conscience choice in how I want to handle it," Stunkel said.

Lafene searching for more revenue

Jamie Willey
staff reporter

Student Health Advisory Committee members are looking for ways to cut costs and generate more revenue at Lafene Health Center.

In a meeting Thursday morning at Lafene, SHAC members discussed various ways the center can make up for the money lost from the $10 per-person-per-semester drop in student health fees that Student Senate passed in fall 1994.

Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, said the health center is not short of funds yet, but it will be by the end of next June.

Zweimiller said the operation reserve for Lafene has been dwindling because of the $10 decrease in student fees, a drop in enrollment and the drop in use of services that students pay extra for, such as lab costs and x-rays.

SHAC said it is hoping Senate will recommend the student health fee be increased to at least the $80 it was before last fall.

Even if Lafene is able to gain the increase in student health fees, the center will still have to cut costs and find other means of raising money, Zweimiller said.

Zweimiller said the student health fee is a good policy because it spreads the cost over a greater number of people and keeps service fees down.

Some senators have discussed making services such as Lafene user fees, which means only students who used the service would pay for the service.

"What Senate doesn't realize is that it can't take $10 away one year and give it back the next year and still expect us to function," Katie Kimble, SHAC member, said.

A subcommittee has been formed to study the issue of cutting expenses and generating more revenue.

Tricia McKale, co-chairwoman of SHAC and the subcommittee, said the group discussed charging full-time students after their first two visits to the center and charging part-time students after their first visit.

The group also discussed turning the responsibility of sports medicine at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex over to the Rec Complex administration and allowing faculty and staff to have prescriptions filled at the pharmacy in Lafene.

Senate delays appointments

▶ Student Senate sent a resolution back to committee, swore in Senate interns and approved changes in the Student Governing Association by-laws.

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

Student Senate voted Thursday night to send a resolution appointing three members to the Holton Hall Advisory Board back to committee.

Because Holton Hall was built with student money, the board oversees the maintenance and who uses the building.

The resolution would have appointed Casey Carlson, junior in business administration, and Jennifer Bradley, senior in biology, as at-large members to the advisory board and Kyle Kessler, graduate senator, as the Senate member of the board.

Janelle Moore, chairwoman of the Student Affairs and Social Services committee, proposed an amendment to the resolution replacing Kessler with Jeff Sweat, arts and sciences senator and SASS committee member.

"We're the SASS committee," Moore said. "We believe one of our members should be on this board."

Moore said she asked for the change because Sweat had been on the board last year and had in fact re-established it.

She said the amendment was necessary because the version of the legislation she saw on Tuesday night at the executive board meeting listed Sweat as one of the three appointments.

She did not know he had been taken from the list until she saw the agenda Thursday night, she said.

Sweat was an at-large member of SASS last year and researched the Holton Hall Advisory Board history. Sweat was instrumental in getting the board re-established.

"This board was very, very fragile," said Aaron

Royal Purple staff worries about decline in sales

▶ Yearbook sales are down, and the Royal Purple staff is offering promotional deals to students.

Rachel Harkness
staff reporter

The Royal Purple yearbook sales are down this year, and the yearbook staff is trying to figure out why.

"Our sales at fee payment were down this year by about 700, but we aren't sure yet about other sales," Sarah Kallenbach, editor of the yearbook, said.

With sales low, marketing has been a No. 1 priority for the staff this year. Marketing classes at K-State are helping the staff with different ideas to generate yearbook sales.

Various promotional ideas are also contributing to the yearbook sales.

A free pizza party has been offered to the floor in the residence halls with the most pictures taken within each complex. The greek house with the most portraits taken receive $150 toward its philanthropy.

Surveys are taken each year to find out exactly what students want in a yearbook.

"The biggest complaint we get is that they're not in the yearbook or that they don't know anyone in the yearbook. But we make every attempt to get out everywhere to get pictures," Kallenbach said.

Last year the RP had a "Shoot Yourself" program. Students were offered the opportunity to have their picture taken free of charge.

This year "Shoot Yourself" will be taken in late February. The program will be advertised on the radio and at different locations on campus.

For some students, however, the price of the yearbook is just not worth it.

"The yearbook just has a lot of hoopla' in it. I can think of better things to spend my money on. If it were $10, I'd buy it," Maggie Otvos, senior in theater, said.

The cost for a yearbook is $21, which includes a $5 sitting fee. But some students are not concerned with the cost and would rather have a book to remember old times by.

"I buy a yearbook every year. I want to have something to remember all of the crazy times I've had in college," said Kelly Runnfeldt, senior in apparel and textile marketing.

The RP is one of the top yearbooks in the nation, Kallenbach said.

During the past five years, RP has won the Associated Collegiate Press Pacemaker and Columbia Scholastic Press Association Gold Crown Awards, two of the nation's top contests.

The price of the yearbook will increase to $25 next semester, and it will be available at the end of April or early May.

FBI NABS PEDOPHILES, PORNOGRAPHERS USING ON-LINE SERVICE

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI has turned the tables on a dozen pedophiles and pornographers using the America Online computer service, luring them into the hands of undercover agents as part of a nationwide two-year investigation dubbed Innocent Images.

The probe monitored America Online, the nation's largest computer network, to catch suspects distributing child pornography and arranging sex with children. It ended Wednesday with at least 12 arrests, and more are expected from the search of more than 120 homes that began Aug. 22, the FBI said.

The raids marked the first time federal agents investigated the misuse of such networks for exchanging typed conversation and other material from computer to computer.

"We are not going to permit exciting new technology to be misused to exploit and injure children," Attorney General Janet Reno said.

INTERNET SITES TO PAY FEE

NEW YORK (AP) — The Internet is taking another step away from its government-sponsored roots.

Starting today, the National Science Foundation won't pay to track addresses on the network, a practice that has cost the agency $5.5 million.

"We can no longer afford this," NSF spokeswoman Beth Gaston said.

As a result, commercial entities and non-profit organizations will have to pay a nominal annual fee to maintain their Internet domain, symbolized by the quirky abbreviations that usually end with .com or .org.

A charge of $50 will be levied against new enterprises when they sign up for an Internet site and existing Internet users on the anniversary of their registration.

The charge will not apply to individuals.

POPE BEGINS TRIP TO AFRICA

ROME (AP) — With celebrations and challenges awaiting, Pope John Paul II set out for Africa today to test the fabric that interweaves the Roman Catholic Church and the continent's social and political crises.

The high point of the pontiff's six-day trip will also be one of the milestones of his 17-year papacy: kissing the ground upon arrival in South Africa.

Headed first to Cameroon, the pope left Rome's Leonardo da Vinci airport at mid-morning today. He will also visit Kenya before returning home on Wednesday.

Giant crowds are expected to welcome the pope Saturday and attend his Mass the following day in a Johannesburg park. He has invited President Nelson Mandela, South Africa's first black leader, to share the altar.

KU HAZING INVESTIGATED

LAWRENCE (AP) — A University of Kansas fraternity is under investigation for hazing incidents that put two of its members in the hospital, but the fraternity's headquarters has already recommended action.

The Delta Chi fraternity has been on interim suspension since last month when sophomores Adam Mues and Nate Hines, both 19, were hospitalized for dehydration. Mues suffered kidney failure the week before classes began after sweating his way through four days of chores ordered by his superiors. He spent nearly two weeks at St. Luke's Hospital in Kansas City, Mo., where he underwent dialysis treatments.

"It was just a lot of manual-type labor," said Mues, reached at his parents' home this week in Kearney, Neb. He declined to say whether the fraternity's initiation was too harsh.

Hines said the ordeal was excessive.

"It was done to an extreme," he said. "I would never do that to someone. I'm against hazing."

RED HAT FAN FACES CHARGES

MACOMB TOWNSHIP, Mich. (AP) — He says she's stalking him, and it all started with a red hat. She says she's just being friendly.

Nonetheless, police have issued an arrest warrant for stalking against 79-year-old Frances Breiholz whose 80-year-old neighbor, John Papuga, said she has pursued him relentlessly for three years.

Even though Breiholz could face a year in jail and $1,000 fine if convicted of the misdemeanor, Papuga said he just wants her to get help.

Papuga said for three years, ever since he wore a red hat one day, Breiholz has been leaving him notes, calling, blowing him kisses and propositioning him in his driveway.

She said Wednesday that Papuga is making up the allegations. She said he stays inside most of the time, and she walks daily because she has diabetes.

"I used to wave when I walked by, you know friendly, hi," she said.

"What's wrong with that?"

KSU POLICE DEPARTMENT

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 13

At 1:19 a.m., an officer stopped a vehicle after seeing a female juvenile get into a car at 14th Street and Anderson Avenue. The female was nervous and acted as if something was wrong. It was found that the subject had left home to go riding with a male subject. Her mother wanted her at home. The female was brought to the KSUPD, and her mother picked her up. A report was filed for curfew violation.

At 1:35 a.m., Melissa Dorman reported the theft of her brown shoulder bag. She had placed her bag by a bike rack near the McCain loading dock. When she returned, it was missing. Officers located the bag on the east side of McCain one hour after it was reported missing. All personal items were recovered except for a Visa card and her driver's license.

At 9:20 p.m., Rebekah McNeal reported two dark sports cars driven by men were racing eastbound along the sidewalk on the north side of Nichols Hall. Officers were unable to locate the vehicles.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 13

At 10:43 p.m., a fight was reported in-progress at 12th and Moro streets. When officers arrived, the fighting had ceased.

At 10:48 p.m., Liberty Long, 1545 Denison Ave., was issued an MIP at Champion's.

At 10:48 p.m., Julie Alberson, 1545 Denison Ave., was issued an MIP at Champion's.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14

At 12:49 a.m., a woman reported excessive noise. She lived eight blocks from Aggieville and was not sure which bar the music was coming from. The Aggieville units were advised.

At 1:54 a.m., Donald Saunders, 500 Sunset Ave., Apt. 5, was arrested for DUI. The fine was $500.

■ Art exhibition opens in home of K-State student

Russell Fortmeyer
contributing writer

Don't you dare say the Manhattan art scene is dead when you are within the vicinity of Rhonda Bathurst.

Bathurst, junior in drawing, and some of her friends said they are using Bathurst's home to try to revitalize the alternative art scene.

With the opening of La Galerie Ephemere's "Fine Art Exhibition," Bathurst and company have done what hasn't ever been done in Manhattan, or at least in the last three or four years.

They are trying to create an environment to showcase works of art that don't always meet the specifications of school faculty, gallery owners or cafe clientele.

"The other places are businesses. They select art on a basis of who's going to come in," Bathurst said.

When showing in a home, artists do not have to alter their work for the audience.

She said she did this because she believed there was a real need for it in the community.

But Bathurst said she had other reasons for starting her own gallery. "It's fun. It's so much fun."

The show includes 18 artists of various backgrounds, including current K-State art students, former K-State students, regional artists and local artists.

They were all invited to participate by Bathurst.

Earl Aaron Levine of Abilene, originally from New York, said he thought it was a fabulous idea.

"I'm used to much more of an emphasis on art than this region offers," he said.

"FINE ART"

▶ The "Fine Art Exhibition" will be on display from 4 to 8 p.m. Friday and from noon to 8 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. La Galerie Ephemere is at 1508 Humboldt St., one block west of City Park and one block north of Poyntz Avenue.

The quaint first room offers art in every corner, such as Levine's female figure drawings, some unmarked ceramics that are also dotted about the entire house, and Leah J.A.A. Cunnick's paintings on glass.

The show, though artistically varied, has much more of a cohesiveness than most campus gallery shows due mostly to the unconventional locale.

Mike Mai's humorous "Weight of the World," a quasi-turtle with a toilet base affixed to its back, has a greatly different effect in a smallish living room than it ever would in a cold gallery.

Bathurst said she decided to live in the house because it was well-suited for exhibitions.

"It was a good place for this to happen, if it wanted to," she said.

If you're on a time constraint, which I was, be sure to head up the stairs, because Cunnick's work will follow up with you to reveal her wonderful painting, "Paper towels: Not just for depression anymore."

Brian Bays, whose excellent work was last showcased in a semi-solo show in the Willard Gallery last spring, has a room partially dedicated to his work upstairs, which is definitely worth a visit (and don't forget to see Mauel A. Alfonso's graceful "Dance of Life" in the hallway).

Hopefully, this show will spread some enthusiasm and spark some ideas among the artists in this town.

Employment services helps students in search of jobs

B.C. Camp II
staff reporter

Career and Employment Services can help you get a head start on finding a job.

"We want to encourage students to use our service as one-stop shopping for their employment needs," said Marcia Schuley, assistant director of Career and Employment Services.

"We have information on part-time jobs, interns and careers," she said.

The service provides information on job opportunities all around the world. There is no charge to go in and look at the job listings, but Schuley said she recommends students go through a formal registration process that costs $7.

"We want everyone from freshman to graduate students to come in and register," Schuley said.

"The economy is really good this year, and we want students to take advantage of it."

The formal registration gets you a disk that you can keep your résumé on. Every time you update your résumé, you can go in and enter it on file. This allows employers to look at your credentials without even being on campus.

"We get businesses calling us, looking for candidates, all the time," Schuley said. "It helps to have those candidates' résumés right in front of you."

The service also offers résumé workshops, where students are told what needs to be in a good résumé and what to do with it when you're done.

The service sponsors interview workshops with speakers who teach the proper techniques in getting and succeeding in interviews. The service also provides walk-in times for résumé critique.

In addition to the those services, you can find a variety of job opportunities in all areas on the Internet. You can go to any computer lab and browse the job market on different continents for free.

"It's really neat. You can look at opportunities in Hong Kong or France," Schuley said. "Some cities have a lot of listings that might be in your field."

In addition to the office services, Career and Employment Services will have a K-State Career Fair from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Sept. 19 in the K-State Student Union.

"I'm looking forward to it," Mark Ahmadi, a senior in electrical engineering, said. "There'll be companies from all over the country there."

Risk of closed-door decisions threatens city

The discussions need to be in front of the public, so we know what's going on.

Manhattan's City Commission may change its quorum to do business from three to four commissioners.

According to the Kansas Open Meetings Act, the change would allow two members of the commission to meet to discuss city business without calling a public meeting.

This sets a dangerous precedent. Issues would be proposed, debated and decided outside of the public's eye.

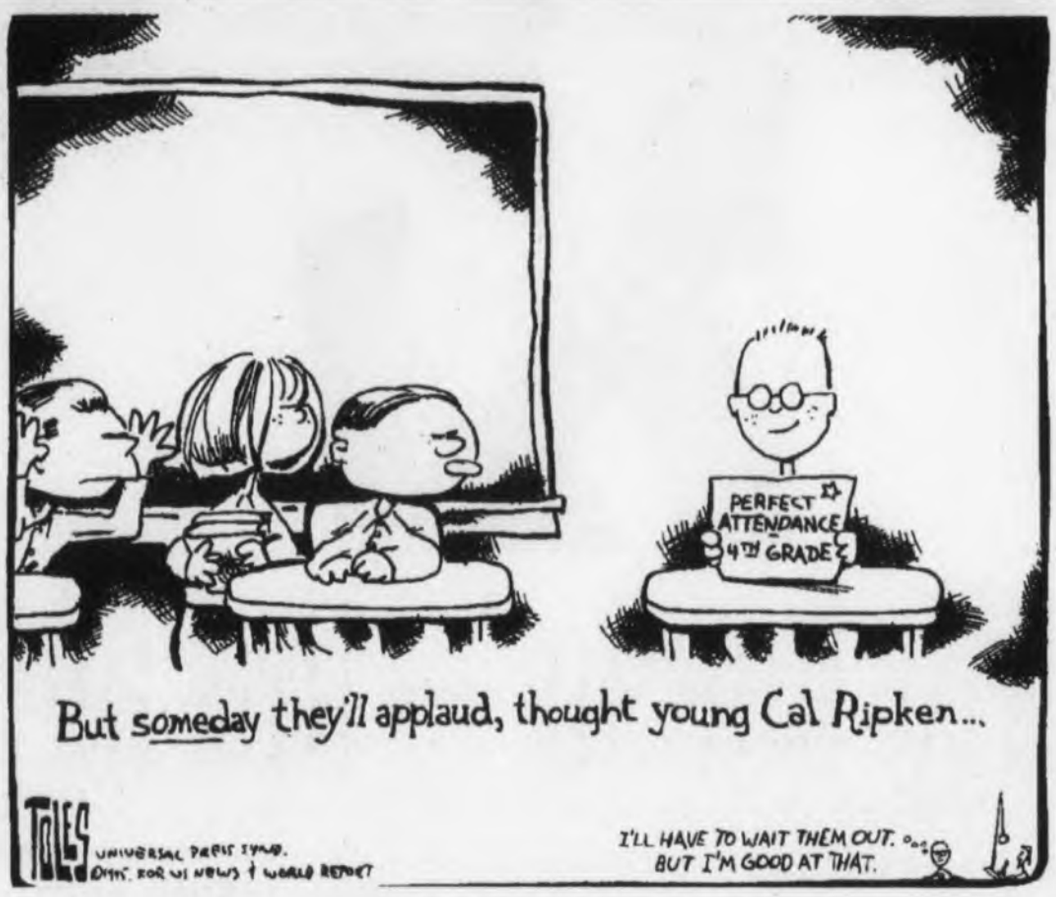
Robert Ritter, a former Junction City commissioner, said in the Wednesday's Collegian private corporations' executives are allowed to discuss their business outside of the board room.

But we are the commissioners' employers. Should a discussion in a board room take place without the input of the chairperson?

Ritter called the current system sheer stupidity.

"How can you run things if you can't discuss?" he said at the City Commission meeting Tuesday night.

The discussions need to be in front of the public, so we know what's going on.



"Our time together is limited. I think if two commissioners can talk together, there is the potential for improved decision-making," City Commissioner Bruce Snead said in Wednesday's Manhattan Mercury.

Along with this, there is also the increased potential of ethical considerations being breached.

The public has a right to know the decisions made in the weekly commissioners' meetings weren't already decided during the weekend — and behind closed doors.

By changing the number of the Commission's quorum, we are risking more than lost time.

Welfare system requires real reform, not charity

I went to see my friend Hank the other day. It had been while since we talked. I think it had something to do with a childish debate we had about Ronald Reagan.

Hank made some kind of comment about Reagan having been the best president this country had ever had. I, of course, questioned his sanity and he, in turn, questioned my parentage.

I'd had a little time to calm down, think up new arguments (and insults), and so went to see him. The conversation starte out well enough. We avoided such controversial topics as politics, sex, religion and sports and stuck to the weather. But after a fistful of chew and a Budweiser, my friend relaxed. That's when all hell broke loose.

COLUMN

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

We started talking about the GOP recent ly voting to reject attempts by the Democrats to add nearly 11 billion dollars during the next five years toward child care for the poor.

"It's about damn time," was Hank's response. Mine was unprintable.

"They're finally trying to dismantle a welfare system that's placed people in a cycle of poverty for generations." he said. "I thought you'd be all for that."

"I am, kind of."

"Grow a spine," he growled. "You either are, or you aren't." If looks could kill, Hank would have been have gone belly up.

"Yes, the welfare system needs reformed," I said through clenched teeth. "But, this is the flat-out punishing of people who want to go back to work. How do you expect people to have a job if they can't afford child care, and without child care how can they work?"

"Wah. People do it every day," he spat at me.

"I'll lay odds most of them aren't on welfare," I shot back.

"Oh come on, Bleeding Heart, it's not like money isn't going to be given for child care at all. Bob Dole wants to give $1 billion of federal child care for the poor, annually," he said.

"You know that's not nearly enough to fill the bill. Quality child care is scarce and exorbitant. It's going to cost a fortune just to expand on the services that already exist, let alone creating more," I said.

"Besides, Dole wants to fold it into a larger budget. One billion dollars into a kind of general fund states would get for all their welfare needs, including work programs."

"So," Hank said and opened another beer.

"So, that means the guarantee the money will be used strictly for child care is completely gone. There is no safeguard there to keep the money from being sucked up by other welfare needs."

"It's the state's responsibility to see the funds are used properly. Not the federal government's," he said.

"Excrement! If the federal government feels it has a responsibility to be a watchdog over song lyrics and movie content, it should feel responsible for seeing how its child welfare money is spent," I said.

"What welfare recipients need is help, not charity. What they need is job training, adequate housing and medical care. The GOP can discontinue the charity, but it has got to replace it with something better."

"Give them skills they can use to help themselves, including affordable child care. Or they'll never get out of their financial slump, and we'll be dealing with the same old problems over and over again."

"You're nothing but a liberal," he screamed.

"Yeah, and you're nothing but a conservative," I shouted.

Someone threw a punch, I think. I'm not sure who. The rest of the evening is a blur.

ADRIAN FLEMING

Player coddled; victim ignored

Those who are true Nebraska football fans will have to forgive me.

I think Cornhusker running back Lawrence Phillips probably should never play the game again, and I think Nebraska coach Tom Osborne should resign. I think some consideration is due the victim.

The Phillips case is rather clear-cut. Phillips was charged with assault, trespassing and destruction of property after allegedly assaulting his ex-girlfriend last Sunday.

COLUMN

DAN LEWERENZ

Now this wasn't your everyday, run-of-the-mill dispute that escalated into violence. That would be a sign Phillips needs help. But it wasn't even that simple.

According to police reports, Phillips climbed to the third-floor apartment of a teammate, struck the victim, then dragged her down the stairs to the building's foyer. Once there, residents were able to pull him off the victim. While leaving, Phillips allegedly struck some mailboxes, causing more than $300 in damages.

This type of calculating search and subsequent attack shows a deep-seeded problem that goes beyond everyday stress.

It's not the sort of thing he can take care of in a season, and it definitely shouldn't be rushed. And if Phillips can't get this worked out before completing his college eligibility, then so be it.

Ultimately, that's Osborne's decision — which brings us to Osborne's resignation.

Osborne has handled the entire situation terribly. Although dismissing Phillips from the team was the right thing to do, Osborne has tried to downplay the incident, offer excuses and open the door for Phillips' possible return.

"Lawrence and I have agreed on what happened, and there's no question — I wouldn't call it a beating — but he certainly did inflict some damage to the young lady," Osborne said Sunday night. "She was dragged down some stairs, and there were some injuries."

Hold on, Tom. What constitutes a beating? Broken bones?

How dare you say being knocked around and dragged down some stairs doesn't constitute a beating, especially when both of you have "agreed on what happened."

"Lawrence has been under a great deal of pressure recently with the NCAA investigation and with the public scrutiny of his childhood, and this may or may not have had something to do with his actions," Osborne said.

What Phillips did is inexcusable, no matter what pressures he is under. It's not like he beat up some NCAA investigator. He allegedly attacked an innocent bystander. And, saying that recent pressures "may or may not have had something to do with his actions" is giving an excuse.

"There's a possibility he might still play some this season. He has to get certain things done. It certainly wouldn't be any time soon. He may not play at all," Osborne said.

This one's the kicker. You admit Phillips has assaulted the woman (although you wouldn't call it a beating), but he may come back and play?

I used to think Osborne was a guy who wouldn't put up with any crap. So why even consider letting Phillips back on the team?

Osborne has become a slave to the polls. The rankings have become more important than the game or the players.

And, they've become far more important than the victim.

"We will do everything we can to help him get his life back together," Osborne said of Phillips. But what about the victim?

The woman Phillips allegedly beat has left the state for her own protection. Who is making sure she gets all the help she needs to get her life back together?

This is not the story of a star running back whose career may have ended. This is the story of a crime. Only with this crime, the victim has no face because the criminal is famous.

▶ DEFENDING EVANGELISM

Editor,

I just got home from class today (Wednesday), and on my way out of the K-State Student Union, I noticed an interesting sight.

There was a man in the Free Speech Zone preaching about Jesus Christ. Being a follower of Christ, my first response was: "Great. Here is another guy giving Christianity a bad rap."

However, the more I thought about it, the more I realized at least he was doing something to try to further Christ's kingdom (albeit with impersonal and condemning methods).

I recalled God used the prophets in the Old Testament, the Apostle Paul and Jesus Himself in many similar situations.

They were also called to speak to hostile crowds, similar to the one outside the Union (except they had to fear being physically harmed).

I remembered the prophets, Paul and Jesus were also ridiculed by a majority of the people for saying things people didn't want to hear. This man was definitely not afraid to offend others.

I am not trying to compare this man to Jesus, but I respect his willingness to publicly stand up for Christ.

I do not agree with everything this man was saying, but I was deeply disturbed by the fact that most of the people I talked to were angry at this man for being a poor representative of Christianity.

He is probably a poor representative of what we consider Christianity today, because most of us rarely take a stand for Christ.

If Christians really believe in the basic teachings and history of Jesus, then our lives would be radically changed as we submit to Christ's lordship.

This is where the problem is. Romans 10:9 says "That if you confess with your mouth, 'Jesus is Lord,' and believe in your heart that God raised him from the dead, you will be saved."

Too many are hearing the watered-down Gospel of praying a prayer and going on with their lives like the rest of the world. Simply put, Jesus Christ demanded, and still demands, repentance.

He emphasizes this throughout the gospels with statements like Luke 9:23: "If anyone would come after me, he must deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me."

Christ honors a repentant sinner who, by faith, is willing to give up all he/she is (impure and imperfect), for all that Christ is (pure and perfect) to be allowed into God's grace through faith.

I do not know if I entirely support this man's method, but at least the man outside the Union was willing to stand up for Christ.

Even though many of us disagree with the things that he said and the way he said them, we can definitely learn a lesson from his boldness and his desire to let others know the consequences of their sin in hope someone would repent and turn to Christ.

If we think this man is a "poor representation" of Christianity, then more of us need to show the world a "good representation" of Christianity, instead of being critical from the shadows.

I often wish that I was more willing to do the same.

COLLEGIATE 4-H

Students compete at fair

K-State 4-H members exhibit livestock, sewing

Chad Moreland
staff reporter

Members of K-State Collegiate 4-H are getting a chance to show off their handiwork at the Kansas State Fair in Hutchinson.

More than 40 students entered animals raised and groomed for the fair. Other members plan to help with a style show this Saturday.

"I had a heifer that did real well in showmanship, so I was pretty pleased," Kelli Ludlum, member of Collegiate 4-H, said.

Animals to be shown at the fair include cattle, sheep and swine. Judging depends on the species of the animal.

Cattle are divided into judging categories of heifers and market steers. Sheep are divided into categories of ewes and market lambs. Hogs are split into categories of breeding hogs and market hogs.

Collegiate 4-H students who want to enter the state fair must contact their home county extension agent.

"Since I'm from Bourbon County, I just contacted my agent there," Ludlum said.

Saturday's style show will give 4-H members an opportunity to work on sewing abilities and gain experience modeling in front of judges.

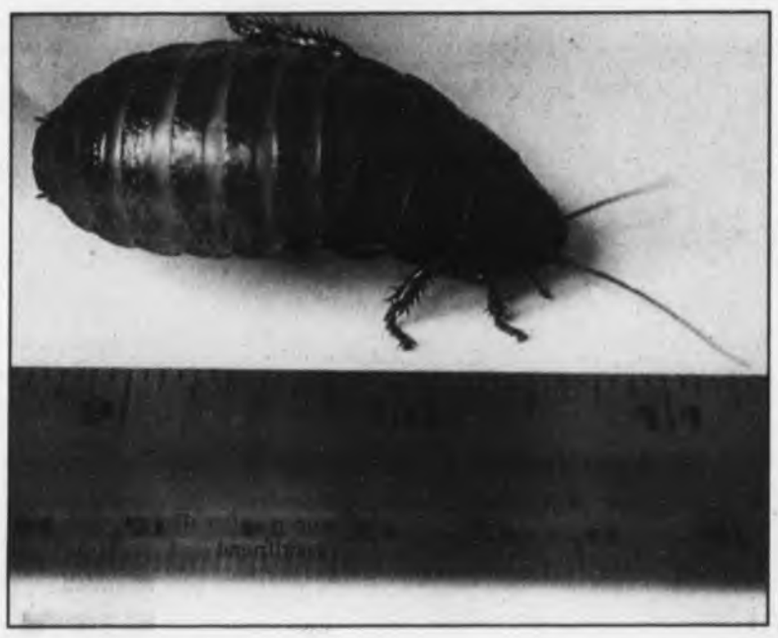
"A 4-H member either purchases a garment or sews one," Ludlum said. "You model that outfit before judges, and then in the evening you model in front of a general audience."

Many of the older members of Collegiate 4-H have helped younger students prepare and feel comfortable with the show.

"There are four volunteers from Collegiate 4-H going to assist the children in modeling, showing the clothes and helping them get dressed," said Meleesa Younggren, president of Collegiate 4-H and senior in animal sciences and industry.

Currently, the 4-H group has been working to involve as many people in the program as possible.

"It's primarily to teach younger children and youth different skills," Ludlum said, "whether it's in vocational areas like cooking or sewing, or there's also leadership-development activities, public speaking and lots of citizenship."



Recent developments have opened up opportunities for many 4-H members.

"They've changed the age in recent years so that you can be in regular 4-H until the age of 20, instead of 18," Younggren said.

"Many students are still able to show in their county fairs and in the state fair and be members of their regular 4-H clubs, as well as Collegiate 4-H," she said.

C. Michael Smith, director of the entomology department, holds a Madagascar hissing cockroach. The cockroach is the same as the cockroaches that were poisoned by a kind of phosphoric acid during a break-in at the entomology lab late Saturday night or early Sunday morning.

A Madagascar hissing cockroach rests near a ruler. The cockroaches usually reach a length of two to three inches and are used as educational tools at K-State as well as other Kansas schools. Now the cockroaches cannot travel because residue from the poison may still be on them, which could make anyone who handles them sick.

The Great Cockroach Caper

Death toll continues to rise after weekend poisoning, missing cockroaches recovered after misunderstanding

Associated Press

MANHATTAN — The colossal cockroach caper — or at least part of it — has been solved.

The K-State Department of Entomology reported dozens of large Madagascar cockroaches were reported stolen and poisoned.

C. Michael Smith, department chairman, said Wednesday about 40 of the roaches, which he described as teaching tools, were poisoned. Up to three dozen more were stolen Sunday.

The poisoned roaches are definitely dead, he said Thursday. In fact, the number has grown to about 55 with additional deaths from the effects of poison the past two days. The insects were poisoned with an all-purpose pest poison used in the department to keep insects from escaping.

But the missing roaches are back home.

The roaches reported missing by a department technician were the ones Smith had taken to the state fair in Hutchinson Monday morning and returned that night.

"It was just a lack of communication on our part," he said.

Campus police are investigating, but University detective Richard Herrman said there were no leads or suspects in the case. There was no known motive.

The Madagascar cockroach, which Herrman said is also called the giant hissing roach because of a noise it makes, may look terrifying. At 2-2 1/2 inches, it is about twice the size of a domestic roach.

But for folks with a fear of creepy, crawly things, Smith has some news: They make good pets.

"They are very large, very docile and carry no diseases. They don't bite," Smith said Wednesday. Each insect is valued at about $15 — the cost of upkeep from the time of hatching to adulthood.

"There is a misconception about insects. Most people think they are vermin-ridden at best, and they are going to destroy society. We've been trained from early on that all bugs are bad bugs. But only a small fraction of insects are detrimental," Smith said.

New coach brings stability to women's golf team

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

In recent years, the coaching situation at the K-State women's golf office had about as much stability as the New York Yankees managing position.

Six coaches in four years for K-State doesn't bring a whole lot of stability and consistency to the program.

So this past summer, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics made the position a full-time job, a move that has brought a wave of optimism to the players, the new coach and the program as a whole.

Kristi Knight applied for the job. Although she had played college golf at Oklahoma, Knight had no coaching experience.

But she got the job, and with a month's experience under her belt, the players said they are thankful she did.

"She's my seventh coach in five years, so when they decided to make it a full-time position, we had a better base to choose from and she's overly qualified," senior Debbie Chrystal said. "She played college golf, so she can relate to what exactly goes on."

Knight said Thursday she wasn't shocked when she got the job July 26, even though she hadn't coached before.

"I wouldn't say I was surprised, but that was a concern of mine going in, but I knew I had a good education, and I had experience as a student athlete," she said.

Before getting the K-State job, Knight was working at the Oak Tree Country Club in Oklahoma City, as an event coordinator. Knight said the experience of playing college golf lured her into coaching.

"I enjoyed my experience as a student athlete, and I've always been interested in college athletics," she said. "It's an opportunity to do a little bit of everything. I love golf, and it's an opportunity to be involved."

Chrystal said last weekend's season-opening tournament in Lincoln, Neb., was awkward for both Knight and the players.

"She (Knight) wasn't used to giving us advice and help because she comes from a player's standpoint, where she just played," Chrystal said. "But after being there a couple of days, she started to give us advice, and she was really supportive."

Senior Trisha Hoover, last weekend's top K-State finisher, said Knight's playing experience helps her relate to the team.

"It helps a lot because she understands what we're dealing more with than someone who hasn't played college golf," Hoover said.

Last year's coach, Tim Jennings, wasn't as supportive Hoover said.

"It's been a big help from last year because I remember not being really comfortable about playing bad and the coach would just make it worse," she said.

Chrystal said the coaching adjustment year in and year out made it difficult to play early in the season.

"The hardest thing about having the different coaches was that feeling your way out and them getting used to the program," she said. "It didn't affect our golf as much as the other things."

Since the beginning of the season, Knight has had a simple motto, Chrystal said.

"Her biggest thing, and this put a lot of people at ease, was that we're going to work hard and have fun," Chrystal said.

"She's been the first one to say, 'Let's work hard, but let's have fun,' so that's a nice feeling because you can enjoy it."

After almost two months on the job, Knight hasn't been disappointed.

"The job has been a lot of fun," she said. "I enjoyed getting involved in golf and college athletics again. I miss some of the things about Oak Tree, but here, everybody's friendly."

Unlike when Chrystal and Hoover came to Manhattan, the five freshmen won't have to worry about who the new coach will be every season.

"I'm jealous of the freshmen because they've got some stability," Chrystal said.

Team seeking to play 'up to our potential'

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

Consistency. In college golf, it's easy to talk about and hard to accomplish.

But the K-State women's golf team will give it a shot.

Judging by last weekend's tournament in Lincoln, Neb., the Wildcats may be on their way to climbing the consistency mountain. At the Chip-in Club Tournament, the top four scores taken by K-State in each of the three rounds were never lower than 78 and never higher than an 88.

"Our team is very stable," senior Debbie Chrystal said. "I don't think we played up to our potential. We might shoot really low, but it's always consistent, so pretty soon, everybody's going to click at the same time."

Coach Kristi Knight said K-State could have played better, but the tough course caused problems for everybody.

"We were a little disappointed," she said. "They played good in spots, but it was probably the most difficult course we'll play all year. They showed signs of potential, and they have all the ability to play well. I think they will before the season's out."

Senior Richelle Bond had K-State's low score of the tournament. She posted a 78 in the first round Sunday. Later in the day, though, she ballooned to a 104.

"The 78 was not a fluke," Knight said. "The 104 was a fluke."

The Wildcats got solid performances from two newcomers. Freshman Dagne Root finished the tournament with an 82, while sophomore transfer Ann Slater had an 86 and an 84 in the first two rounds.

"They had some troubles, but for the most part, they handled it well," Knight said. "There's a lot of talent on the team as far as the freshmen, and there's so much potential there, it's exciting."

Senior Trisha Hoover said the tough course was hard for the freshmen to adjust to.

"They did pretty good for their first tournament," Hoover said. "They had a lot of fun, but I think it was harder on them because it will be the hardest golf course we'll play.

"I think it's the best freshmen and transfer class we've had since I've been here."

For the rest of the fall season, Chrystal said getting consistent play from the whole roster week in and week out is the key.

"For us to be a successful team in the Big 8, we have to develop some consistency," she said. "Last weekend, our scores were consistent, and that will come down every tournament. As long as we keep the consistent scores, we'll have four pretty decent scores to count."

Cross country thriving at Navajo Community College

Associated Press

SHIPROCK, N.M. — Bill Silverberg's forehead shines with sweat as he shuffles through papers in his basement office between a boiler room and the gym at Navajo Community College.

It's registration day at NCC. Runners on Silverberg's cross-country team funnel in and out, unaffected by the simmering heat in the dusty office.

A few folding chairs are available for those who want to stay awhile to chat or check out the view, a sun-baked, dirt field surrounded by rickety trailers.

A former all-American runner, Silverberg says he's happy at NCC, where small-time facilities don't keep him from going after a big-time dream. He wants the school to produce an American Indian Olympic gold medalist, like Billy Mills, who won the 10K in the 1964 Games in Tokyo.

Silverberg roomed with Mills at the Olympic trials in 1964 and has stayed close with him since. He says his connection with Mills is one reason he wants to help Indian runners.

His reason for choosing NCC as the place to do that is simple as well.

"I like the underdog," Silverberg says. "We're definitely in that situation. We don't have the fancy dorms for them to live in. We don't have the fancy homes. We have no transportation for them. They have to bring their own equipment."

Somehow, that recruiting pitch and an annual budget of about $6,000 has kept some of the Navajo reservation's top runners at the school. It also has helped Silverberg land some African runners, who he hopes will push the Indians into training more effectively.

"We've always had tremendous talent out here," Silverberg says. "The problem has been motivating them. We figured if we could get some of the African world-class runners in here, it would help."

As a side job, Silverberg plans safaris to Kenya, where he met Kenya's Henry Rono — who in 1978 set four track and field world records in a span of 80 days — and Joseph Nzau, also a former Olympian. Both have helped Silverberg recruit, and Nzau is expected to serve as assistant coach at NCC this year.

They helped NCC land top African runners Abukar Adani of Somalia, Philip Keny of Kenya and Moli Yeskey, a two-time Olympian from Chad. Silverberg says they're at the school to advance their own careers and to push five Indian runners, including Lenny Esson and Eugene Hogue.

Esson is trying to revive a running career that almost ended four years ago when he injured his back while running for Yavapai College in Prescott, Ariz. Esson trains alone and takes correspondence courses at NCC while coaching a junior high cross country team in Leupp, Ariz.

He says training programs sent to him by Silverberg and Nzau have helped. So has their support.

"I can see a light at the end of the tunnel," said Esson, who heads to Shiprock on weekends to travel with the team to meets. "It helps knowing you have people like that who support you and believe in you."

Esson and Hogue are considered among the top marathon runners on the Navajo reservation, Silverberg says.

Both have clocked marathon times in the 2-hour, 30-minute range, which is almost low enough to qualify for next year's Olympic trials. It takes 2:22 to qualify for the Olympic trials.

The runners will try to shave their times this fall by training on shorter cross-country courses as NCC goes for its fourth small college men's championship in the program's fourth year of existence.

Silverberg said he hopes the runners will be ready to qualify for the trials in marathons next spring.

Getting to the Olympics may never have been a mission at NCC had it not been for a break Silverberg got from tiny Navajo Prep High School in nearby Farmington.

When Silverberg moved to Farmington in 1991, he had trouble finding work. His résumé includes stints as the track coach at the University of New Mexico and cross country coach at Oklahoma, but Silverberg's only job offer came from Navajo Prep.

He says he formed a loyalty to Navajos while working at Prep as football coach and athletic director.

"When I came up here, I didn't get a lot of help from white people," Silverberg says. "The Navajos were the ones who helped me. They're the ones who have gotten me the jobs."

So when NCC had an opening for a physical education instructor in 1992, Silverberg applied with intentions of expanding the role.

"A cross-country team here has always been a natural," he said, noting that nearby Gallup High School has won 12 straight state championships, mostly with Indian runners.

"The program here gives the good runners a place to keep it going."

The runners said while NCC lacks amenities, it creates a good training atmosphere, void of distractions, but surrounded by thin air and good long-distance running courses.

"If you come here, you know you're going to get better because they have good coaches," Yeskey says. "They know we don't come here for the great scenery or the social life. All we want to do is run."

▶ INDIVIDUAL EVENTS TEAM

Forensic team begins season

Gina Buster
staff reporter

K-State's individual events team kicks off its season this weekend at Southwestern College in Winfield.

Students will participate in a variety of events such as poetry, informative speaking, impromptu speaking, communication analysis, persuasion and oral interpretation.

Jared Adams, senior in speech communication, is the current national champion in the communication-analysis division, and he said he doesn't feel pressure to achieve that level of success again.

"I really hope this can be a relaxing year for me. I reached my highest goal, and it was great to compete at that level. But I'm looking forward to seeing this legacy at K-State continue and seeing the younger competitors do that as well," Adams said.

The winning legacy spans the last four years in which K-State's team has placed as one of the top five in the nation.

Craig Brown, director of individual events and instructor in the speech department, said he is excited about this team's talent.

"Our new competitors are very qualified, and if we play up to what we can do, we have the potential to make a run at first, second or third," Brown said.

More than 300 individual events programs in the nation and 100 teams participate in Nationals.

Last year, a member of K-State's squad qualified for every round in Nationals.

Throughout the summer, members comb magazines and books for topic ideas and begin their research. Once back at school, they continue to research their topics, often spending 40 hours a week preparing for the upcoming season, Adams said.

The team had a work weekend, which is an intense weekend of writing and coaching, last weekend, Brown said.

One thing that attracts students to the squad is the people, Adams said.

"We're not a bunch of nerds who like to hang out in the library. The people on the circuit are some of the nicest people I have ever come across. I'm always in awe of the respect they have for each other," Adams said.

Janelle Moore, junior in microbiology, said she thrives on the competition.

"We all have a very competitive mindset. It's always nice to win a trophy, but it is more than that. It's all about competition," Moore said.

This year the individual events team has 33 students — 17 of whom are returning competitors.

One advantage the K-State squad has is its location.

The Midwest is well known for its high standard in forensics, and this is a good part of the country to be in to get good competition without having to travel that far, Brown said.

KSU professor named dean

Becky Klenklen
staff reporter

A K-State professor was recently appointed as the dean of West Virginia University's College of Engineering and Mineral Resources.

Allen Cogley, professor of mechanical engineering, and his wife, Kay Cogley, director of pre-award services and assistant vice provost for research, will move to Morgantown, W.Va., Oct. 1.

"CEMR has approximately 110 faculty and staff in 10 departments with approximately 2,200 students," Allen Cogley said.

After teaching and researching at K-State for eight years, Cogley said he had a lot of good experiences.

"There are always good memories of K-State," he said.

Cogley is especially fond of being involved with the senior design team at K-State that won the national competition in July.

"He was instrumental in winning the NASA-AGATE Design Competition in July 1995, made up of a team from Kansas University, Wichita State University and K-State," said Peter Gorder, assistant professor of mechanical engineering.

"He brought a wealth of experience and set high standards to K-State as well as to the state of Kansas and other universities," Gorder said.

Cogley has been a professor at K-State since 1987. He was head of the department of mechanical engineering from 1987-92.

"Allen is an excellent organizer and facilitator and has provided great leadership for a diverse group of faculty across three universities in the state in the area of aviation design and research. His talents will be greatly missed. K-State needs more leaders like Professor Cogley," John Uhlarik, professor of psychology, said.

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

After seven years at K-State, Kay and Allen Cogley are moving on. The Cogleys are shown here posed for a photo outside their north Manhattan home Thursday afternoon. Allen, professor of mechanical engineering, has accepted the dean's post with the College of Engineering and Mineral Resources at West Virginia University.

K-State hired Kay Cogley five years ago as the director of pre-award services. It was a new office that proposals for research grants are sent to.

"I will greatly miss everybody at my office and at K-State," she said.

Though she hasn't accepted a position with WVU, she said it is a possibility.

"We're excited about our move. I think Allen's new position will be a challenge, but one that he can definitely handle," Kay Cogley said.

Cogley's position became available after the merge of the College of Engineering and the College of Mineral Resources at WVU on July 1.

Previously, Cogley was the department chairman at the University of Alabama, Huntsville, from 1983-87.

He was also a professor of energy engineering at the University of Illinois at Chicago, a visiting scientist at NASA-Ames Research Center and a research engineer at NASA-Langley Research Center.

Cogley received a bachelor of science degree in aerospace engineering from Iowa State University in 1962, a master of science degree in aerospace engineering from the University of Virginia in 1964 and a doctorate in aeronautics and astronautics from Stanford University in 1968.

News Digest

▶ KANSAS COUNTIES DECLARED DISASTER AREAS BY GOVERNOR

TOPEKA — The U.S. Agriculture Department has designated 88 counties of Kansas as disaster areas because of adverse weather, making farmers in them eligible for low-interest emergency loans on crop losses, Gov. Bill Graves announced Thursday.

Forty-three of the counties were designated because of heavy frost in April, and the rest were hit with hail, high winds, tornadoes and flooding in May, June or July. Some had both freeze and storm damage. Only 17 counties are not included.

Farmers and ranchers in the 88 counties have eight months to apply for loans. To be eligible they must have suffered a 30-percent loss of normal production, be unable to get credit elsewhere, have adequate security and the ability to repay the loan.

Primary freeze disaster declaration counties are Clark, Edwards, Finney, Gove, Grant, Gray, Greeley, Hamilton, Haskell, Hodgeman, Kearny, Lane, Meade, Morton, Ness, Pawnee, Reno, Rice, Scott, Seward, Stafford, Stanton, Stevens, Trego and Wichita. Counties that border those 25 also are eligible.

Primary severe weather declaration counties are Butler, Cowley, Dickinson, Edwards, Elk, Ellis, Geary, Gove, Greeley, Kingman, Lane, Linn, McPherson, Montgomery, Morris, Neosho, Ness, Ottawa, Pawnee, Reno, Republic, Rice, Rooks, Russell, Saline, Scott, Sheridan, Stafford, Thomas and Trego. Counties that border those 30 also are eligible.

Gallagher 2 shoots for laughs

Claudette Riley
staff writer

Throngs of K-State students and middle-America families packed Bobby T's Restaurant and Bar last night to see "Gallagher 2: The Living Sequel."

The woman guzzling Red Dog and barking to be sprayed with Gallagher 2's fluids in his exhaustive arsenal of projectile weapons said she saw the original Gallagher on Showtime and assumed comic sense was in the genes.

Concentrating on the lines surrounding the stage, Gallagher 2 held a pooping bird over women as their husbands held them in place.

Pinching a clone of Hulk Hogan's head, he spit at a distance of about five feet. Then, holding a Bart Simpson doll as it vomited on scurrying participants, he simply said, "Must have been too many Butterfingers."

Working the audience into a clapping and screaming frenzy, when many chose to stand on chairs to make better targets, he brought out the big dog.

Singling out anyone wearing fire-hydrant red, the dog brought cool relief.

The energetic and mostly funny routine of Gallagher 2 consisted of posing an endless dialogue of rhetorical questions. The sole intent of which, besides applause, seemed to center on striking the lowest common denominator possible in the public nerve.

Gallagher 2 ended with elaborate cooking concoctions based on their weight and distance potential. The dorm pie consisted of potato chips, French onion dip and beer.

One role of thumb that goes anytime you have to cover yourself with a trash bag ... a good time is not to be found. Most of the hysterical cheering section chose to purchase house-provided bag for $1.

However, women in the bathroom said as they covered themselves in their own scented blue trash bags, "Sometimes you just got to bring your own protection."

Even though some audience members seemed to enjoy the show, paying $6 to hear groin jokes and watch a methodical humorist spill his creative juices over a packed crowd wasn't funny.

Speaker discusses benefits of multi-cultural education

J. Scot
staff reporter

Combining multi-culturalism and ethics are essential to a student's education.

"The key to multi-cultural education is to build diversity around a core of basic subjects within arts and sciences," Robert Audi, professor of philosophy at the University of Nebraska, said.

Circumstantial relativism is sometimes believed to be the key to a multi-cultural education, but relativism must be defined and agreed upon by each culture or it will not work, he said.

"We need to be open to new things. And what you do ought to depend on the circumstances," Audi said.

People should remember what is prevalent in their own culture may revolt another person, and there are limits to freedom, he said.

"To educate people on multi-culturalism, one needs to explain the values of learning about other people's cultures and their practices," he said.

Audi also identified the lack of role models for young people as a problem with ethical and moral judgment within multi-culturalism.

"Too few people are exhibiting excellence. A role model should be exciting and amusing," he said.

College students should look for role models in current life, but also in literature.

"Role models are people of moral character," Audi said.

Jim Hamilton, department chair of philosophy, said it would be beneficial for faculty if students at the university level would aspire to be adequate role models.

"This helps if the faculty would convey to the students the passion of their studies. I do know some faculty members who do, but more need to," he said.

Media and advertisers are also immensely influential in who people choose as role models.

"The media can do a better job in deeming people as role models without the issue of censorship," he said.

Hamilton said he was disappointed Audi did not address the positive issues within multi-culturalism.

"I was hoping he would have went deeper into the exposure of people with different values and cultures," Hamilton said.

Farrell Webb, assistant professor in human ecology, said he was disappointed because Audi was not definitive on the issue of multi-culturalism.

Audi did not say what role the University plays in promoting and defining multi-culturalism for the community at large, Webb said.

Kevorkian mocks charges

Associated Press

PONTIAC, Mich. — Dr. Jack Kevorkian arrived at court in homemade stocks and a ball and chain Thursday to ridicule his prosecution on assisted-suicide charges as a throwback to the Middle Ages.

"Nobody with brains should take this seriously," he told reporters at the Oakland County courthouse, where he was arraigned in the 1991 deaths of two seriously ill women. "It's nuts."

"Kevorkian is accepting his medieval punishment," his lawyer, Geoffrey Fieger, said.

The retired pathologist wore cardboard stocks, his arms and head stuck through the holes.

He also wore a mock ball and chain and signs that read "Common law of Middle Ages. What's next, the Inquisition?"

Another sign read, "Think this is a circus? You're right. But blame the seven Supreme Court jesters."

Midwest art shows diversity in landscapes

Russell Fortmeyer
contributing writer

A new exhibit of work by artists Larry Harris, Gary Miller and Alvaro Cardona-Hine has opened at the Strecker Gallery, 332 Poyntz Ave.

The show's focus is on contemporary Western landscapes offering a wide representative spectrum, ranging from realism to abstraction.

Gary Miller's oil paintings depict the very Western, albeit romantic, life of a cowboy on the range.

Although Miller hails from Salina, his heart is obviously in Texas, New Mexico and Colorado.

Miller is artistically indebted to the glorious Western scene paintings by artist Charles Russell, a rare artist who captured the dwindling life of cowboys, Indians, cattle-ranching and life on the range in an accomplished way. Where Russell triumphs, creating dramatic moments through thoughtful and precise details, Miller opts out.

Miller's work is photographic, capturing an instantaneous scene in oil. His characters don't exude any distinctly personal attributes, no clear facial characteristics, no dust rustling up from the ground, no hot breath fleeing a cow's nostrils.

His subjects are reduced to sculptural groupings that play second fiddle to a colorfully rendered range and sky.

"Landscape is the most important for me. The riders, cowboys and horses are only points of interest," Miller said, adding that he isn't interested in historically accurate depictions of saddles and stirrups, but the overall look of the picture.

Miller said he hasn't exhibited much work in the 20-some years he has been painting seriously, but with the few paintings he is showing at Strecker, that's sure to change.

Alvaro Cardona-Hine's acrylics are at an 180-degree tangent to both Harris' and Miller's work.

Departing the world of realism and entering into almost total abstraction, Cardona-Hine has managed to trash all preconceived notions of space and perspective.

He has effectively presented a surface of intermingling colors that amazingly spring to life as a Southwestern landscape.

A native of Truchas, New Mexico, Cardona-Hine's work evokes a very Southwestern look of muted color scheme with splashes of a vivid color.

His "Mojave Series III" very minimally presents a wide, panoramic view of the high desert.

Larry Harris' watercolors and monotypes colorfully visualize the Kansas countryside. Harris' ideal countryside, depicted in such monotypes as his "Heading South," consists of a nice row of trees, a grassy pasture and a well-placed red barn.

The exhibit will close Oct. 6.

Cassie gives advice on homosexual bears, over-expressive sexual relationships

Dear Cassandra,

I am a 21-year-old woman who happens to be in love with Winnie-the-Pooh. I collect Winnie-the-Pooh everything. You name it; I've got it when it comes to Pooh stuff. All my friends and my ex-boyfriend insist that Pooh is homosexual. I tell them the concept of sexuality never comes into play in the Pooh stories, but they insist otherwise. What do you think?

Signed,
Pooh Freak

Dear Pooh Freak,

I am not a big follower of Pooh and his gang, and even if I were, I truly would not even think or care about the sexual orientation of a bear or his "little pal," Piglet. If you think it is cool to collect items that have a Winnie-the-Pooh emblem on them, then more power to you.

Who cares about your over-analyzing friends' opinion? Who knows, maybe Pooh stuff will be worth a lot of money someday. Then they will be jealous they didn't collect homosexual bears.

A person once told me I was odd because I religiously watched "The Scoobie Doo Show." He told me Thelma was a lesbian.

He also told me the reasoning for why Scoobie and Shaggy were always hungry: They were constantly smoking pot in the back of the "Mystery Machine" and always had the munchies.

People can over-analyze just about anything. If we started looking for the hidden meanings in everything, our entertainment in this world would be as depressing as the evening news.

Who cares if Pooh has hot dreams about Piglet, Christopher Robin, or that silly donkey friend of his? Who cares what he does with honey in his spare time?

Signed,
Cassie

Dear Cassie,

My roommate just broke up with her boyfriend. It's been a relief to me; because now I don't have to listen to her having sex when I'm up late at night trying to study.

The guy was kind of a jerk. One time I came home and found him on the couch with a friend of mine who wasn't my roommate. He paid me $50 to keep my mouth shut about the whole deal. But I swear, I only took the money because I really needed it to help pay the bills.

I'm really confused! If I tell her about it now, she'll be upset with me for not telling her before. But I feel like I don't want to tell her, after all those nights I wasn't able to study because of the moaning and groaning coming from the other room.

Cassie, am I being selfish, or do I have a legitimate course of revenge?

Signed,
Clueless

Dear Clueless,

I would say you were selfish for taking the money; however, you obviously have some rights on what you have to endure while you are in your own home.

At this point, you truly have to evaluate your own values. Which is more important, being there with your friend with a shoulder to cry on, or having a purse on your shoulder with a green piece of paper and a dead president printed on it? Of course, this is all in the past, and you can't change history. So what I recommend is coming clean with your friend. You owe her that.

Yes, I am sure she'll be mad at you, but at least you have been honest with her and more importantly, with yourself. You also need to share with her how uncomfortable you were with their loud sex and how it disturbed you.

The only way roommates can understand each other and get along is by communicating and being open with each other.

Signed,
Cassie

LAFENE

Zweimiller said there is a state regulation that says the Lafene pharmacy can't unfairly compete with private pharmacies. The pharmacy can sell prescriptions to students at a reduced price, but it might not be able to sell prescriptions to faculty and staff.

McKale said they also considered the possibility of trying to get Senate to double the part-time student health fee to $50.

Lafene does not charge students for office visits, but it does generate revenue from other services it offers.

The health center now gives respiratory physicals for people in various departments that work around asbestos, and it gives physicals to athletic teams.

Zweimiller said Lafene also makes money from treating visitors to the campus on an emergency basis, and it sells first-aid kits to departments on the campus.

Lafene has already started to cut back in personnel and equipment purchases, but the number of students going to the health center has increased, causing longer waiting periods and backups of appointments.

"Last year, we saw that people stayed healthier, and this year we see people using Lafene more than they did last year. It's cyclical health care," Zweimiller said.

About 13,000 people use Lafene's services, which means the staff deals with about 76,000 visits each year, Zweimiller said.

"It's highly used, and therefore we have to be thinking down the road for keeping the doors open. We have to be concerned about those 13,000 people," Zweimiller said.

Melanie Chaffin, co-chairperson of SHAC, said it was important Senate knows Lafene needs the money for long-term operation costs.

"I think our main goal right now is to get to them that we need more money for Lafene for the long term — not that we're greedy," Chaffin said.

Zweimiller said services might have to be cut and hours of operation decreased if Senate does not raise the health fee enough. The severity of cuts will depend on what the student health fee will be, he said.

"If they keep it at $70 and don't raise it, there is no way we can continue with the Lafene you see today," Zweimiller said.

SENATE

Otto, arts and sciences senator and former SASS chairman.

Holton Hall will be undergoing a turnover in occupants in the next year, and there is a possibility space will be opening up, he said.

"We need someone with experience on this board," Otto said.

Sweat said he had spoken with Kessler about the switch and there was no problem with it.

"Hey, I'm cool with it," Kessler said.

The resolution was referred to the Senate Operations Committee.

Senate interns were approved and sworn in during the 1-1/2 hour meeting.

In other business, two bills making changes in the Student Governing Association by-laws were approved.

The first bill changed the date of the spring 1997 student body elections to two weeks before spring break. The bill passed by a vote of 56-0.

The second bill changed the name of the State and Community Affairs Committee to Governmental Relations. A section stated the committee would make recommendations for the City-University Projects Fund.

SASS made the recommendations last year, but Moore said her committee felt there was no problem with the change.

"It has SASS support because we think it's going where it's supposed to," Moore said.

Usually the City-University Projects Fund is used for capital expenditures, but, as was in the case of the Wildcat Walk Escort Service was funded this year, it might be used for student services.

"Anytime a project dealt with SASS, we'd refer it to them," Tim Riemann, agriculture senator and SACA member, said.

Fraternity under investigation

Associated Press

LAWRENCE — A University of Kansas fraternity is under investigation for hazing incidents that put two of its members in the hospital, but the fraternity's headquarters has already recommended action.

The Delta Chi fraternity has been on interim suspension since last month when sophomores Adam Mues and Nate Hines, both 19, were hospitalized for dehydration in late August.

Mues suffered kidney failure the week before classes began after sweating his way through four long days of chores ordered by his superiors at Delta Chi. He spent nearly two weeks at St. Luke's Hospital in Kansas City, Mo., where he underwent dialysis treatments.

"It was just a lot of manual-type labor," said Mues, reached at his parents' home this week in Kearney, Neb. He declined to say whether the fraternity's initiation was too harsh.

Hines spent four days at Lawrence Memorial Hospital.

KU administrators expect to complete the hazing investigation within a week.

The fraternity's international office in Iowa City, Iowa, said today an alumni committee has recommended the expulsion of four members and placing the Kansas chapter under control of an alumni group for two years.

Tom Sheffield, director of chapter development for the national fraternity, said the recommendations become final when they are received by the chapter.

Both the chapter and the students can appeal to the fraternity's international governing board.

Braden Hopkins, the president of Delta Chi's KU chapter, said he felt obliged to remain silent about details of the hazing. But he said alcohol was not involved in the incidents.

"People assume that because it's a frat there was drinking," Hopkins said. "But I can say absolutely that's not true."

Bill Nelson, the coordinator for greek programs at KU, said the fact-finding part of the investigation is complete and all the parties involved recognize the case as a hazing that led to two men needing hospital care.

The hazing occurred during Hawk Week, a week of orientation before classes started for this fall semester. A small group of active members at Delta Chi supervised the hazing, which involved 10 pledges.

Hines and Mues said they were put to work from Aug. 13-16 mowing the lawn, painting a shed and doing other jobs around the grounds of the off-campus fraternity.

Sheffield said all 10 pledges were repeatedly ordered to do push-ups.

High temperatures those days ranged from 75 degrees to 99 degrees.

Hines said he thought the ordeal was excessive.

"It was done to an extreme," he said. "I would never do that to someone. I'm against hazing."

Balloonists shot down during race

Associated Press

MIAMI — John Stuart-Jervis survived the most perilous of assignments as a British Royal Navy pilot.

From the Suez Canal crisis of 1956, when his plane was shot down by Egyptian forces, to jungle warfare in Southeast Asia, he was always where the trouble was, said his wife, Caroline.

On Tuesday, the retired aviator was killed when his sport balloon was shot down by the Belarussian military during an international race.

"Ever since he was old enough to fly, he did," Mrs. Stuart-Jervis said Thursday in a telephone interview from her home in Naples. "If he had to go, I know in my heart this is the way he would want to go."

Stuart-Jervis, 68, and another pilot, Alan Fraenckel, 55, both of St. Croix, U.S. Virgin Islands, were killed.

Belarussian authorities said the balloonists failed to respond to warning shots and to radio demands for identification. Another balloon landed safely, and its occupants, also Americans, were taken into custody by the Belarussians.

Mrs. Stuart-Jervis said she doesn't believe the Belarussian explanation.

"They shot down defenseless people," she said.

"They owe the world an apology. They owe all the balloonists in this world an apology," said Fraenckel's cousin Rebecca Dale in Scotia, N.Y., where Fraenckel's father lives.

Stuart-Jervis and Fraenckel were representing the U.S. Virgin Islands in the annual Gordon Bennett gas balloon race, a contest to see which balloon can fly the farthest. The balloons took off from Switzerland, drifting across the continent.

Fraenckel, a former Navy pilot, worked for TWA and had flown for the airline for 27 years.

Mrs. Stuart-Jervis said her husband took up ballooning six years ago as an extension of his love of flying. Although she didn't share his passion for flying, the fact he was a pilot sealed her love for him.

"Flyboys are always so romantic," she said.

and PRICE v. CIBA-GEIGY*, Civ. No. 94-0647-CB-S (S.D. Ala. 1995),
SETTLEMENT CLASS MEMBERS

FUNDAL® WAS A COMMERCIAL AGRICULTURAL PESTICIDE WHICH WAS MARKETED IN THE U.S. BY NOR-AM CHEMICAL COMPANY. FUNDAL® WAS NOT MARKETED FOR RESIDENTIAL OR HOME GARDENING USE.

U.S. WORKERS WITH ON-THE-JOB EXPOSURE TO FUNDAL® MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR FREE MEDICAL MONITORING AND/OR CASH PAYMENTS UNDER THIS PROPOSED LEGAL SETTLEMENT.

PRICE* SETTLEMENT CLASS MEMBERS ARE ALL U.S. WORKERS WITH ON-THE-JOB EXPOSURE TO GALECRON® (INCLUDING GALECRON® AND FUNDAL®) WHO DID NOT EXCLUDE THEMSELVES FROM THE PRICE SETTLEMENT. PRICE SETTLEMENT CLASS MEMBERS MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR CASH SUPPLEMENTS UNDER THIS PROPOSED LEGAL SETTLEMENT.

PLEASE READ THIS NOTICE CAREFULLY. YOU MAY BELONG TO A CLASS OF PEOPLE COVERED BY A PROPOSED SETTLEMENT OF A LEGAL ACTION ("WOODWARD SETTLEMENT"). THE WOODWARD SETTLEMENT MAY AFFECT YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS. FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 1-800-211-6913

By Order of the Court, a class action has been conditionally certified for settlement purposes. On January 9, 1996, a fairness hearing will be held at the Courthouse, United States District Court, Southern District of Alabama, 113 St. Joseph Street, Mobile, Alabama, 36602, at 9 a.m. Central Time, so the Court can determine if the class action should be finally certified and if the Woodward Settlement, as summarized in this Notice, should be approved as fair, reasonable and adequate. Although participation in this settlement is voluntary, all Woodward Settlement Class Members who do not timely exclude themselves from the lawsuit will be bound by the Woodward Settlement if it is approved.

I. DEFINITION OF CLASS

Under the Woodward Settlement, Fundal® is defined as chlordimeform or any chlordimeform-containing product, either manufactured, formulated, packaged, distributed or sold by or on behalf of NOR-AM Chemical Company ("NOR-AM") or related parties, regardless of the trade name of the product; or any metabolite of Fundal®, including the substances known as 4-COT or 5-CAT. Galecron® has the same meaning as it did in the Price v. Ciba-Geigy Corp., Civ. No. 94-0647-CB-S (S.D. Ala. 1995), Settlement ("Price Settlement"), and is thus defined as chlordimeform or any chlordimeform-containing product, either manufactured, formulated, packaged, distributed or sold by or on behalf of Ciba-Geigy Corporation or related parties, regardless of the trade name of the product; or any metabolite of Galecron®, including the substances known as 4-COT or 5-CAT.

The Woodward Settlement Class is defined as:

(1) All persons who fall into one of the following categories, and who reside in the United States as of the date of filing of the Class Action Complaint, who have been exposed in the United States to Fundal® only, but not to Fundal® and Galecron® or to Galecron® only ("NOR-AM Exposed Persons"):
   a. Formulators: An individual (whether or not employed by NOR-AM Chemical Company) who in the course of his or her employment was exposed to Fundal® while at a plant or site which was involved in mixing, blending, packaging, handling or otherwise formulating pesticides which contained, in whole or in part, Fundal®;
   b. Applicators: An individual (whether or not employed by NOR-AM Chemical Company) who in the course of his or her employment, was exposed to Fundal® while involved in the application of pesticides which contained, in whole or in part, Fundal®, including, without limitation, aerial and land applicators, flagmen, mixers, blenders, loaders and other individuals who handled such pesticide prior to or during the application process; or
   c. Other Covered Workers: (i) An individual employed by NOR-AM Chemical Company who, in the course of his or her employment, was exposed to Fundal®; (ii) an individual who worked at Empak, Inc. in Deer Park, Texas and/or Micro Chemical in Louisiana and who was exposed to Fundal® in the course of his or her employment; (iii) or an individual who worked in a testing or research laboratory and who was exposed to Fundal® in the course of his or her employment; or
(2) The spouses, parents, children, other relatives, or legal representatives of the NOR-AM Exposed Persons described above.
(3) All members of the Price Settlement Class. The Price Settlement Class means all members of the settlement class certified by the court in Price v. Ciba-Geigy Corp., Civ. No. 94-0647-CB-S (S.D. Ala. 1995), excluding persons determined by the court to be opt-outs of that class. That settlement class thus includes persons residing in the United States who in the course of their employment were exposed to Galecron® or to Galecron® and Fundal® ("Ciba Exposed Persons"); and the spouses, parents, children, other relatives, or legal representatives of the Ciba Exposed Persons described above.

(Collectively "Woodward Settlement Class Members"). Note: If you are an NOR-AM Exposed Person or a Ciba Exposed Person, you are a Woodward Settlement Class Member whether or not you have been diagnosed with an illness. Spouses, parents, children, other relatives, and legal representatives are Woodward Settlement Class Members but the claims they are settling are limited to those arising from a NOR-AM Exposed Person or Ciba Exposed Person's exposure.

II. IMPORTANT MEDICAL NOTICE

To NOR-AM Exposed Persons and Ciba Exposed Persons (as defined above):

You may have an increased risk of developing bladder cancer if you had on-the-job exposure to Fundal® and/or Galecron®. Workers exposed to Fundal® and/or Galecron® should participate in a medical monitoring program because early detection of bladder cancer can result in more effective treatment.

If you had on-the-job exposure to Fundal® and/or Galecron®, it is recommended that you or your doctor call 1-800-211-6913 to learn how you can obtain further medical information or enroll in medical monitoring.

III. PROPOSED SETTLEMENT

The Woodward Settlement provides for the establishment by NOR-AM of two funds to provide medical benefits and compensation to eligible Woodward Settlement Class Members or their legal representatives. This settlement is intended, where applicable, to work as a complement to the Price Settlement.

The total package of benefits potentially available to a NOR-AM Exposed Person is the same as the total package of benefits potentially available to a Ciba Exposed Person. Thus, Woodward Settlement Class Members may be eligible for the same benefits whether they were occupationally exposed to Fundal® only, or to Fundal® and Galecron®, or to Galecron® only.

(1) The NOR-AM Medical Monitoring and Treatment Fund ("The NOR-AM MMT Fund"). If the Woodward Settlement is approved, NOR-AM will make an initial deposit of $3,500,000 into the NOR-AM MMT Fund, and will thereafter make additional deposits on an as-needed basis. There is no limit to the amount of money NOR-AM can be required to contribute over the life of the NOR-AM MMT Fund, which will last a minimum of 20 years.

NOR-AM Exposed Persons will be entitled to participate in the NOR-AM medical monitoring and treatment program; Ciba Exposed Persons may receive medical monitoring and treatment benefits only through the Price Settlement. The NOR-AM medical monitoring and treatment program and the medical monitoring and treatment program provided through the Price Settlement are identical. The NOR-AM MMT Fund will pay for a medical monitoring program designed to detect at an early stage the form of bladder cancer alleged to be associated with exposure to Fundal®: specifically, primary urothelial carcinoma of the urinary collecting system, i.e., renal pelvis, ureter, bladder and urethra. The NOR-AM MMT Fund also will pay for all medically necessary treatment for NOR-AM Exposed Persons.

(2) The NOR-AM Disease Compensation and Administration Fund ("The NOR-AM DCA Fund"). If the Woodward Settlement is approved, NOR-AM will also make an initial deposit of $21,000,000 into the NOR-AM DCA Fund, up to a required maximum of $30,000,000. The NOR-AM DCA Fund will make cash payments of up to $626,500 on behalf of a NOR-AM Exposed Person who, after exposure to Fundal® only, has developed or in the future develops the form of bladder cancer alleged to be associated with Fundal®. In addition, the NOR-AM DCA Fund will make cash supplements amounting to 40% of the amounts scheduled for and paid as compensatory payments pursuant to the Price settlement, up to $179,000, on behalf of a Ciba Exposed Person who, after exposure to Fundal® and Galecron® or to Galecron® only, has developed or in the future develops the form of bladder cancer alleged to be associated with Fundal® and Galecron®. The NOR-AM DCA Fund will also pay for administrative costs and class counsel's and administrative class counsel's attorney fees, costs and expenses as determined by the Court. The total attorney fee award to be requested will not exceed 20% of the benefit conferred upon the class. The benefits of the NOR-AM DCA Fund will continue as long as the NOR-AM MMT Fund continues, or until the NOR-AM DCA Fund is exhausted. If the NOR-AM DCA Fund is exhausted, NOR-AM may continue paying for compensable claims. If NOR-AM does not continue to pay for these compensable claims, Woodward Settlement Class Members will be able to opt-out of the NOR-AM DCA Fund and pursue any legal claims they may have, except for claims for medical monitoring, medical treatment, fear of illness or cancer, or increased risk of illness or cancer.

(3) Other Conditions. The Stipulation of Settlement presently provides for medical monitoring, treatment and compensation payments for certain medical conditions set forth in this Notice. In the event, however, that a Court-approved Epidemiology Panel determines to a reasonable medical certainty that any other medical condition is caused by Fundal® or Galecron® exposure, that condition will be deemed a compensable claim, and will be eligible for medical monitoring (if feasible), medical treatment, and cash payments.

(4) Release. Woodward Settlement Class Members who do not exclude themselves from the Woodward Settlement Class release all past, present and future claims (i) relating to the covered medical conditions listed above; and (ii) relating to a Woodward Settlement Class Member's exposure to Fundal® or Galecron®, including all claims alleging that any other cancers, personal injuries or risks are caused by exposure to Fundal® or Galecron®.

IV. CLASS REPRESENTATIVES AND CLASS COUNSEL

The Court has designated the following Woodward Settlement Class Members, Jack H. Woodward, Alta Woodward, Tom Lofton, Cindy Lofton and Rita Snow, as class representatives to represent all Woodward Settlement Class Members. The Court has also designated as Class Counsel the following individuals: Timothy E. Eble, S.C. Middlebrooks III, and David R. Donaldson.

V. RIGHTS AND OPTIONS OF WOODWARD SETTLEMENT CLASS MEMBERS

If you are a Woodward Settlement Class Member, you have the following options:

(1) You may do nothing and remain a Woodward Settlement Class Member. If you choose to take no action, your interests as a member of the Woodward Settlement Class will be represented by the Class Representatives and Class Counsel at no cost to you.

(2) You may remain a Woodward Settlement Class Member and either represent yourself or hire your own attorney to represent you at your own cost.

(3) You may remain a Woodward Settlement Class Member and object to the settlement.

(4) If you choose to remain a Woodward Settlement Class Member (under options 1, 2 or 3 above), you may receive the benefits afforded by this settlement within six months of the Court's Order directing this Notice.

(5) You may request exclusion from this settlement.

DEADLINES FOR ABOVE OPTIONS. The deadline for filing an Entry of Appearance if you choose to represent yourself or retain an attorney; for filing objections to this settlement; for filing a Notice of Intent to Appear at the fairness hearing; or for filing a request to be excluded from the Woodward Settlement Class is DECEMBER 1, 1995. TO LEARN MORE INFORMATION ABOUT HOW TO FILE ANY OF THE ABOVE ITEMS, PLEASE CALL 1-800-211-6913 or WRITE TO: Woodward Class Action, P.O. Box 974, Charleston, SC 29402.

VI. PROOF OF CLAIM PROCEDURE

In order for any Woodward Settlement Class Member to receive any of the benefits of this settlement, he or she must comply with the proof of claim procedure. To learn how you may receive benefits under this settlement or to obtain a Proof of Claim Form for medical monitoring, medical treatment or disease compensation, call 1-800-211-6913 or write to Woodward Class Action, Post Office Box 974, Charleston, SC 29402.

VII. FOR FURTHER INFORMATION

THIS NOTICE IS ONLY A SUMMARY. If you believe you are a Woodward Settlement Class Member you are urged to call 1-800-211-6913 or write to Woodward Class Action, Post Office Box 974, Charleston, SC 29402 to obtain further information regarding this settlement, how to exclude yourself from the class, and how to obtain benefits. DO NOT CALL THE CLERK OF COURT with questions about this Notice or this settlement.

Classified Directory

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

MUD play

Students bump, set, spike to raise money for statewide environmental organization

Kimberly Hefling
staff reporter

Getting dirty was just part of the fun Saturday at the Phi Kappa Theta Mud Bowl volleyball tournament.

The event, which raised about $200 for Kansas Wildscape, gave participants the opportunity to play competitive volleyball up to their knees in mud.

Wildscape is a statewide, non-profit foundation dedicated to environmental education, wildlife conservation and enhancement of outdoor recreational activities in Kansas.

"This is the first year we've done mud volleyball, and we've gotten a positive response," Brian Till, philanthropy chairman of Phi Kap, said.

"It takes a couple of years to get status as a strong philanthropy, but the weather cooperated, and all we have to do is work out the kinks for next year."

The event was scheduled for April, but because of cold weather, it was postponed until Saturday, Till said.

Four teams competed in the women's division, and six participated in the men's.

The winner of the women's division was Wass and Company, an independent team. Second place went to the Alpha Delta Pi sorority.

The winner of the men's division was Phi Gamma Delta fraternity. Second place went to the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity.

DeAnna Wassenberg, sophomore in speech pathology, played on the winning women's team.

"The best part of the day was at the beginning, when everyone first started getting muddy after being hesitant at first," she said.

Wassenberg said she wasn't sure all along if they'd win the tournament.

"With mud volleyball, it's hard to say. Everyone's sliding around and falling into holes," she said. "A lot of it is just luck."

Lori Bunce, junior in apparel and textile marketing, said the women from her sorority, Sigma Sigma Sigma, participated in the event because they knew it would be a fun day, and they wanted to support their homecoming partners, the Phi Kaps.

"Just diving in the mud is fun. I'm having a blast out here," Bunce said, "but, I think the best part of the day has been looking at the muddy men."

Eric Baker, sophomore is hospitality management, said that to stay clean between matches, he and other members from his fraternity, Sig Ep, bathed in the lake.

"We thought today sounded like a good time," Baker said.

"We had some beer left over from last night, so we decided to come on out."

Baker said he plans to participate in the philanthropy next year.

"Getting down and dirty in the mud kind of wakes you up," he said.

Peterson admitted to hospital

Cristina Janney
city-government editor

Suffering from the same illness that kept him away from campus for an extended period last fall, Student Body President Jeff Peterson was admitted to the hospital again Saturday.

Peterson is being treated with antibiotics at Wesley Medical Center for an infected pressure sore and is scheduled to undergo surgery sometime the beginning of next week.

Tricia Nolfi, coordinator of student activities, said Peterson had been feeling ill for about a week and had taken off a couple of days off work.

While Peterson is in the hospital, Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, will assume the day-to-day responsibilities of the president.

Finkeldei and Jenni Cheatham, chief of staff, will take over Peterson's various responsibilities on committees.

Finkeldei will be representing Peterson on the Student Advisory Council of the Kansas Board of Regents. Peterson serves as chairman of the council.

"Jeff will still have a good role in making major decisions," Cheatham said. "He will not be cutting all ties.

"He will still be supporting student government and trying to make it work for the good of students. We will still be trying to take on the issues that were the core of Brad and Jeff's campaign."

Victims experience difficulty securing insurance coverage

Sera L. Tank
features editor

Women who are or were victims of domestic violence might have problems getting insurance coverage or might be denied insurance.

Kansas Insurance Commissioner Kathleen Sebelius is looking into insurance companies' underwriting policies, which might discriminate against domestic-violence victims.

Sebelius serves on a national committee to study the same subject and said she wanted to find out what the situation is in Kansas.

"If the evidence indicates that there is discrimination of this kind happening, I intend to go to the state legislature and ask it to make it illegal," she said.

Sebelius said 14 states have proposed laws or regulations addressing unfair discrimination against victims of domestic violence, and five of those states have passed laws.

Sebelius' office sent out 126 letters to life, accident and health-insurance companies in Kansas with a questionnaire to find out if being a current or former victim of domestic violence made it

Habitat helps family's dream come true

Sarah Lunday

New ground was broken for the Siders family Saturday morning.

At 10 a.m., more than 50 people gathered on Fort Riley Lane to help Habitat for Humanity, Becky Siders and her two children begin the construction of their first house.

"See this smile — it's like a frown turned upside down," Siders said. But if it was an upside-down frown on her face — it was a big, broad frown.

Siders, who is a K-State custodian, hurried around the construction site happily, partially shy of the media attention and thrilled about the life-size project Habitat for Humanity was helping her take on.

"Thank you, thank you," Siders repeated throughout the morning.

Siders competed against seven other applicants for the Manhattan's first Habitat For Humanity project.

"I'm a single parent, and I'm going to be a homeowner," Siders said.

Applicants are selected on the basis of need, ability to pay the interest-free mortgage and willingness to be a partner, Marcia Schuley, chair of Habitat's development committee, said.

Earthquake hits Kansas, Oklahoma

Shane McCormick
staff reporter

At 7:32 last Thursday night, a mild earthquake struck near the center of the Kansas-Oklahoma border.

The quake was actually just above the Oklahoma line, about five miles northwest of Alva, Okla. The quake could be felt from the southern parts of Wichita to the northern parts of Oklahoma City.

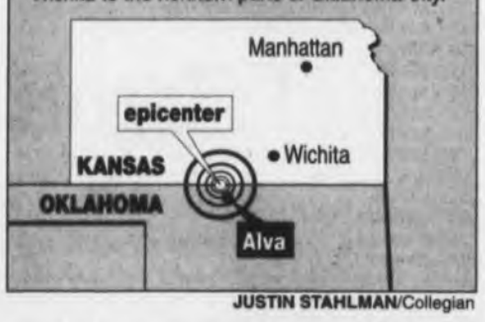
The magnitude of the quake was measured at 4.1, said Pat Jorgensen of the U.S. Geological Survey's National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo. A 4.1 magnitude is enough for people to be able to feel the quake.

"At 4.1, dishes will rattle, pictures will be skewed and one would be very aware of the quake if they were anywhere close to the point of release," Jim Underwood, professor in geology, said.

Most people don't think of Kansas as a state that would have earthquakes, but Underwood said earthquakes are not that uncommon for the state of Kansas.

"There's been about 40 quakes that have been felt, reported in Kansas, but there has been probably over a thousand quakes in Kansas. These quakes are micro quakes, ones that we don't feel. But this quake definitely rates above average to any other quakes that have centered around this area," Underwood said.

The quake was felt by residents of Barber, Comanche, Kingman, Sedgwick and Harper counties.



It would have taken a magnitude of at least 5.0 to cause heavy damage to nearby residents.

"With an earthquake of 5.1, you have 10

U.S. SENDS TROOPS TO BOSNIA, DRAWING FROM HAITI EXPERIENCE

LJUBLJANA, Slovenia (AP) — Pentagon planners are looking to the military's experience in Haiti for guidance as they prepare to send 15,000 or more U.S. troops into the Bosnian cauldron.

The lesson they draw from the fall 1994 occupation of Haiti is to send more than enough force and then withdraw soldiers gradually if they are not needed, Defense Secretary William Perry said Saturday.

The strategy contrasts with the gradual U.S. escalation in Vietnam, and the experience in Somalia in 1993 when, after it was too late, Pentagon officials asked themselves if they had given U.S. soldiers everything they needed.

"In the debate on the size of the force needed, there were two different schools of thought in NATO in the planning," Perry said, "one of which is, just put in the minimum forces needed for normal expectations or contingencies, and then if extreme contingencies develop, send in more as reinforcements."

The United States, which might contribute between 15,000 and 25,000 out of an allied force of more than 60,000, argued strenuously against that strategy within NATO councils.

GLOVES KEEP ASTRONAUTS WARM

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — They did their best to chill out in the freezing vacuum of space, staying in the shadow of the shuttle.

But to NASA's delight, Endeavour's two spacewalking astronauts kept warm Saturday thanks to new heated gloves, thermal socks, boot liners and toasty long underwear.

"Couldn't be more comfortable," Michael Gernhardt said. "These gloves are working great. I'm warm."

Gernhardt and James Voss spent nearly an hour each on the end of the robot arm, raised 30 feet above the cargo bay in the coldest possible position to mimic a space station construction site.

The temperature dipped down to minus 120 or minus 130 degrees Fahrenheit, said Gerald Miller, NASA's lead flight controller for spacewalks. A precise figure won't be available until temperature sensors are examined after the flight.

NASA wants as much practice as possible working in this cold environment before construction of an international space station begins in two years.

HIGHWAY ACCIDENTS KILL 4

(AP) Multi-vehicle accidents killed four people on Kansas highways during the weekend, the Kansas Highway Patrol said.

Gerald Smith, 49, and Ann Martz, 20, both of Wichita, died Saturday afternoon when their vehicles collided head-on on Kansas 96 west of Haven, the patrol said. Smith was eastbound when his vehicle crossed the center line and struck one car before hitting Martz' vehicle, which knocked into a fourth vehicle. Three other people were hurt, the patrol said.

In eastern Kansas, Dennis Rhyerson, 41, of La Cygne, died about 7:50 p.m. Friday in a head-on collision with a car driven by Jackie Rice, 27, of Pryor, Okla., on U.S. 69 near Louisburg.

BODIES FOUND IN MISSOURI RIVER

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. (AP) — The bodies of a St. Joseph father and son were found in the Missouri River not far from where the two disappeared while fishing four days earlier.

Officers from the Missouri State Water Patrol found the body of Jerry L. Wilson, 27, floating on the Missouri side of the river at 7:18 a.m. Sunday, the patrol said.

About three hours later, three fishermen notified the Buchanan County Sheriff's Department that they had found the body of John R. Wilson, 48, floating nearby.

Neither body had moved far from where the Wilsons' boat was found swamped Wednesday night, at the 445-mile marker of the river, the patrol said.

HELMS QUESTIONS SEMINAR

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A workshop on flirting techniques for lesbians, which took place during the women's conference in Beijing, caught Sen. Jesse Helms' attention.

"What, pray tell, does a workshop on flirting techniques for lesbians have to do with women's rights?" the North Carolina Republican wrote Sept. 8 to Brian Atwood, head of the U.S. Agency for International Development.

"I beg you. Please assure me that no U.S. money in the United Nations special trust fund helped pay for this outrageous program," Helms wrote.

The seminar wasn't part of the conference itself but was offered at a gathering of women from advocacy groups and non-governmental aid organizations.

Atwood responded that the agency had given the United Nations $300,000 for the conference but none was used for any workshops. Helms said the General Accounting Office told him the United States made voluntary contributions to a special U.N. fund for the unofficial gathering.

Students seek employment

■ Employers to visit Union in attempt to recruit students

Katie Thomas
staff reporter

Finding a job takes time and networking.

"It is not an event. It is a process. I would encourage students to spend a minimum of two hours at the Career Fair," said James Akin, assistant director of Career and Employment Services.

The second annual Kansas State University Career Fair is from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Tuesday at the K-State Student Union.

"It's a time-condensed event to get information from a lot of prospective employers," Akin said.

The fair is an information exchange, Karen Pence, assistant dean in the College of Human Ecology, said.

"I think students can expect to get information from companies that hire K-State students," Pence said.

There will be more than 160 employers represented at the fair, and students need to be prepared prior to the event, Akin said.

Preparing for the fair includes researching companies at Career and Employment Services in Holtz Hall.

Students should bring 20 to 30 copies of their résumé to the fair, said Scott Smith, senior in agricultural economics and a fair coordinator for the College of Agriculture.

Also, students should dress as they would for an interview, Akin said.

"It's a first impression," Akin said.

Professional dress includes a suit and tie for male students and a business suit for female students, Smith said.

"Students should go prepared to present themselves professionally in the best light," Pence said.

Students should plan their day strategically to be efficient.

This allows students to spend more time talking and less time hunting, said Stan Elsea, acting associate dean of the College of Business Administration.

"I would recommend to look at the map in the Collegian," Smith said.

Having an open mind about the possibilities that are there for students can serve as further leads, Pence said.

"Don't look just at companies that are interested in you. If you are interested in their company, go up, and make your interest known," Elsea said.

Students should go up to a company representative and strike up a conservation, ask questions and learn what they are looking for in future employees, Elsea said.

In general, employers are looking for students with interpersonal, problem-solving and technical skills.

They are also looking for someone who has a work ethic and can think critically, Elsea said.

"If a company is really busy, I'd recommend going to another and coming back," Smith said.

Students should know who they have talked to by asking for business cards if one is not offered.

"I would definitely encourage thank-you's," Smith said.

Send the thank you directly to the person you talked to, and thank them for coming to the fair, Smith said.

"It isn't necessary, and it isn't required, but it's nice," Akin said.

Students at any level in their degree program can participate in the program.

SPURS raises awareness, funds for shelter

Jeremy Crabtree
staff reporter

As the fog began to lift from the front of the K-State Student Union Friday morning, members of the SPURS sophomore honorary awoke to meet the morning sun.

But instead of waking up in their warm beds, the group of about 30 students woke up on cold concrete.

They spent the night in cardboard boxes, trying to simulate a night of homelessness.

"It's cold," Josh Ratliff, sophomore in business, said. "The temperature wasn't even very low out here, but I froze to death. I hardly slept because it was too cold."

Amy Martin, sophomore in biological engineering and vice president of SPURS, said the overnight sleepout helped raise awareness about homelessness.

The group also collected paper and canned goods for the Manhattan Emergency Shelter.

"It's still too early to figure out how much we raised," Martin said. "I think I heard one person say that we raised almost $400."

Although the event raised money and food for the homeless, one of the main reasons for the sleepout was to give students an opportunity to see how homeless people really live, said Lance Davidson, sophomore in math and engineering and SPURS member.

"It's not nearly the same experience being homeless," Davidson said. "We do hope that this did give everyone a feeling of how it really feels to live like this.

"I learned a lot. Spending the night like this made a lot of people realize that there is a problem," he said.

Martin said she now understands how hard it is for people to sleep outside every night.

"I feel for them. I really do," Martin said.

"I think that most people learned about the trials that these people deal with every day," she said.

"A lot of these people have never had an actual experience like this, and I think that they will remember this a long time," Martin said.

Ratliff said the sleepout made him think more about how a person ends up homeless.

"I learned that you can't take things for granted," he said. "The people that are homeless were just like us at one time. You really start to think about stuff like this when you're laying on the ground in a cardboard box."

Both Mayor Edith Stunkel and Junell Norris, executive director of the Manhattan Emergency Shelter, spoke to the students at the sleepout Thursday night.

Martin said their speeches were effective.

"I really think that both speakers made their points very well," Martin said. "They really did a good job making everyone understand how bad the situation really is here in town.

"I just hope that we made a difference. We hope that maybe someone will do this again next year."

Authorities suspect terrorist fled France

Associated Press

PARIS — French authorities trying to catch a terrorist bomber are coming to grips with an unpleasant thought — their No. 1 suspect may have given them the slip.

After beefing up security at border crossings and conducting an astounding 800,000 identity checks, some investigators are convinced that Khaled Kelkal, a 24-year-old Algerian, is no longer in France.

In fact, the intense manhunt for Kelkal — whose fingerprints were on a bomb that failed to explode on high-speed train tracks — may have had the perverse effect of distracting the overall probe, one investigator said.

Police plastered more than 170,000 posters of Kelkal all over France, hoping he would be recognized and captured.

After six bombings or attempted bombings, the government called out the army to help fortify borders, guard high-profile targets like Paris' famous monuments and try to find Kelkal.

These measures may prevent more bombings, but they also are hindering the investigation, said the investigator, an anti-terrorist official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

A police source also confirmed Sunday that two small bottles of camping gas and some nails were discovered during the weekend in a public toilet in the Porte de Clichy subway station in northwestern Paris.

Bombs made from gas canisters crammed with nails and hex nuts have been the hallmark of all six bombings or attempts.

Prime Minister Alain Juppe told the Sunday newspaper Le Journal du Dimanche that 800,000 people had been stopped and checked and investigators were making some headway in tracking down the terrorists.

But authorities admit they can neither find Kelkal, the Algerian suspect, nor crack the underground network of Islamic militants in France, enabling radicals to slip in and out of the country undetected. France is home to about 600,000 Algerians.

Officials said they believe the likely suspects in the bombings are Algerian Muslim extremists angered by France's support of the military-installed government in its former colony. The Armed Islamic Group has vowed to carry out terror attacks on French soil.

An insurgency to establish an Islamic state in Algeria has left more than 30,000 dead in the North African country since it began in early 1992.

Kelkal is a suspect in the attempted bombing of a busy high-speed train track linking Paris with Lyon. Police lifted Kelkal's prints from the bomb, which was discovered intact Aug. 26.

It was a gas canister filled with nails and bolts — virtually identical to the bombs used in the other attacks and attempts.

France's wave of terror began on July 25, when a bomb ripped through a Paris subway car during the evening rush hour, killing seven people and injuring 84 others.

Dozens of others were injured by blasts in Paris near the Arc de Triomphe and an outdoor market and outside a Jewish school near Lyon. Two other bombs, one found on the train track and another planted in a public toilet in Paris, failed to go off.

French police have rounded up dozens of people, seizing weapons, vehicles and false documents, but have yet to make significant progress in tracking down those responsible.

Trustees resign; relations delicate

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The unofficial body that manages U.S. ties with Taiwan faces a complete leadership change, adding a new complication to the delicate balancing act between Taiwan and its rival China.

Two of the three trustees of the American Institute in Taiwan resigned in the past week. One told the Associated Press he quit because the administration reportedly plans to give the chief trustee post to a political appointee.

The institute, a non-profit body under contract to the government, was created to deal unofficially with Taiwan after the United States switched official recognition to the Chinese government in Beijing in 1979.

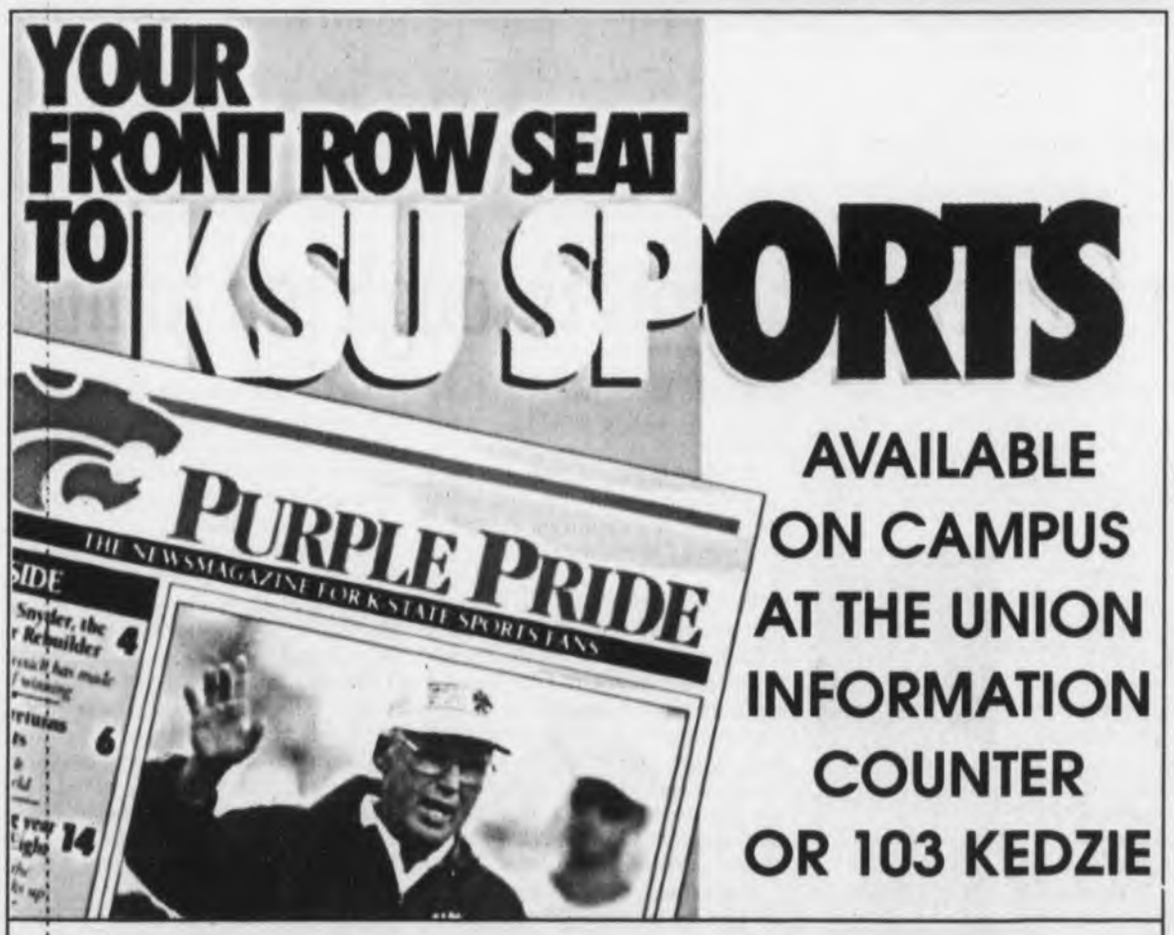
The State Department confirmed Friday that Trustees David Dean and Bruce Clark submitted their resignations to Secretary of State Warren Christopher but would not comment on the reasons they were leaving.

The department had no comment on the status of AIT's chief for the past five years, retired U.S. Ambassador Natale Bellocchi. The Washington Times and others have said Bellocchi is to be replaced by James Wood, a lawyer from Arkansas, President Clinton's home state.

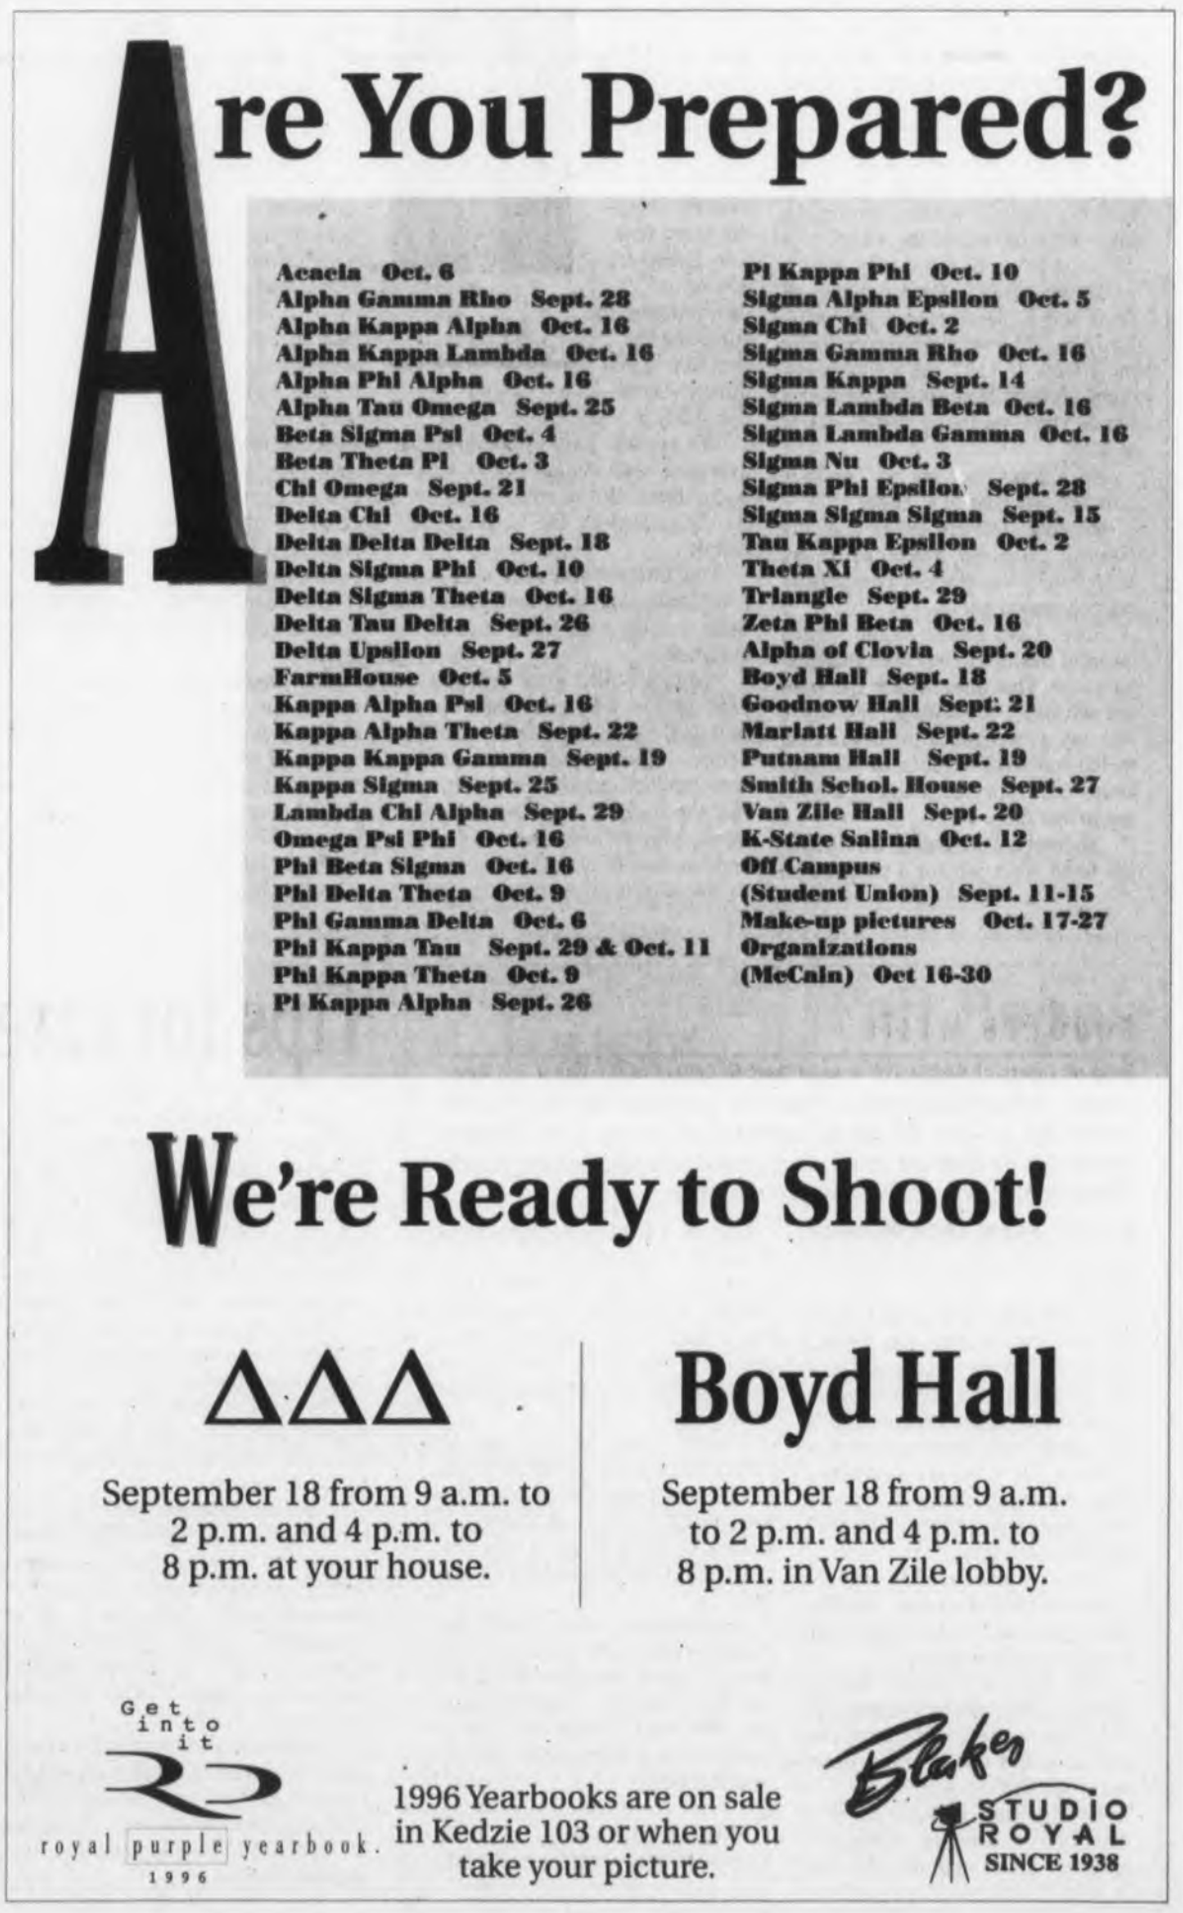
Dean said the reported new chief has no background in Chinese affairs.

"I expressed my concern to the State Department, but they went ahead with the appointment so I felt I had to resign," Dean said.

Dean, a 70-year-old retired foreign service officer and Chinese affairs expert, was AIT's first chief, later director of its Taiwan office and a trustee since 1990.



Dean said neither he nor other China specialists had heard of Wood, who could not be reached for comment.



He said he's not against all political appointments to diplomatic posts. But he said that in a small organization like the AIT, every member must be an expert, especially when the United States is in the crossfire of Beijing resisting Taiwan's efforts to break out of its diplomatic isolation.

Bellocchi, a veteran diplomat, said he has not been told he is due for replacement.

Insurance companies penalize victims of abuse

To the cold, sterile insurance company, the battered man, woman or child is nothing but a risk or a way to minimize cost and maximize profits.

A loophole in the Kansas legal system penalizes people for being beaten up.

By looking into a person's past, the state's loosely regulated insurance companies can either raise insurance rates or deny coverage to victims of domestic abuse.

The brutality of an abuser — past, present or future — thus becomes an instrument for determining "the risk" of certain individuals.

Proponents contend this helps the privately owned insurance companies to cut potential losses, thus remaining competitive in the cutthroat world of insurance sales.

To the cold, sterile insurance company, the battered man, woman or child is nothing but a risk or a way to minimize cost and maximize profits.

To the abused person, however, this is simply another fearful justification for not reporting domestic battery.

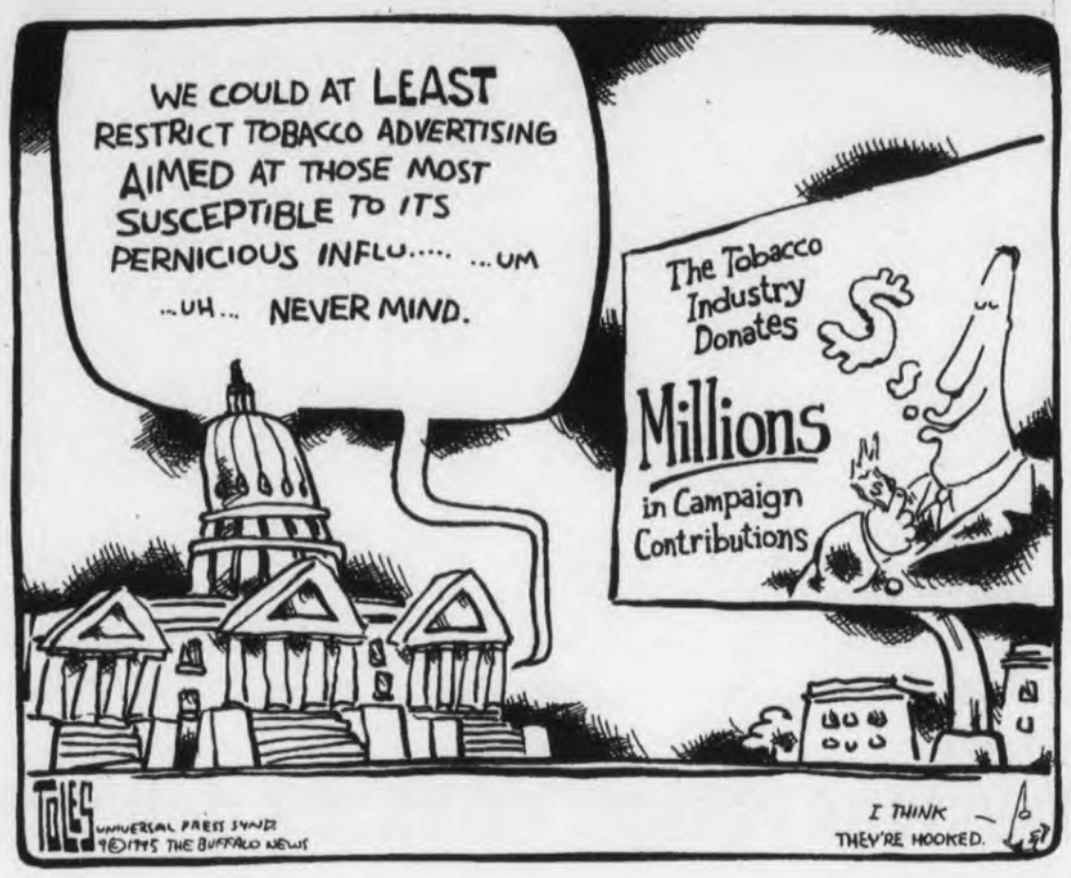
"It's my fault. I shouldn't have made him angry."

"She'll beat me harder if I tell somebody."

And now: "My insurance premiums will go up."

Such action on the part of insurance companies is a discrimination against the victims of a serious crime.

With this realization, five states have passed laws making it illegal for insurance companies to discriminate against prospective policy holders on this basis.



Kansas is not one of them.

Tell your elected government officials it should be. Urge them to make laws that will prevent insurance discrimination.

It is your business.

Senseless stigma

falls on marijuana users

I smoke pot.

I don't smoke in any great quantity or on any kind of regular basis. You certainly couldn't call me a chronic user or someone with a drug problem.

I almost never buy the stuff either, but if I am at a party and someone passes me a joint, you better believe I am going to inhale and I am going to enjoy it.

I am also responsible about my drug use. I don't smoke on school nights, never while operating machinery or behind the wheel of a car, and never in the dorms, which would be grounds for my dismissal from the K-State residence halls. And I would never go to work under the effects of THC, the active ingredient in marijuana, any more than I would show up under the effects of alcohol.

No, I don't "just say no." And no, I am not ashamed of it, either.

Because, frankly, other than my risking criminal prosecution by doing so, I can't see a compelling enough reason not to.

Sure, I am aware of the (mild) harmful health effects from marijuana usage. That doesn't stop me from occasionally indulging, any more than my awareness of the (more than mild) harmful effects of alcohol keeps me from occasionally imbibing in that drug.

And sure, I probably won't ever get hired for a job for a corporation that tests for marijuana usage. But so what? If they are giving their employees piss tests, then that's probably not a place I would want to work at anyway.

Used responsibly and in moderation, I really see nothing wrong with it.

COLUMN

KEVYN JACOBS

So why am I telling you this?

Quite simply because I enjoy getting stoned every once in a while and am tired of having to look over my shoulder every time I do. I think it is time to decriminalize the stuff, and the first step in that direction is to demystify it.

We need to stop pretending that everyone who smokes pot is a loser and a threat. We're not. That's just a lie cooked up by the "just say no" people.

I'm not ashamed of using my drug any more than someone who uses a drug like beer should be ashamed.

Now, I could give you reason after reason why marijuana should be legalized — medicine, taxation, crime, imports and trade deficits, new product markets for hemp, etc. But the truth is, I just want to kick back, smoke a doobie and enter another state of consciousness.

So why is it criminal, anyway? What does society have to gain by throwing me, a 4.0 student, who is a responsible, productive, tax-paying, voting citizen, in jail, just because I like to pollute my lungs every so often with a weed that grows wild in Kansas anyway? Where is the logic in spending millions of tax dollars hunting down occasional users like me, and then throwing us in jail?

The so-called war on drugs is a failure. And it was doomed from the start because of one simple fact.

PROHIBITION DOESN'T WORK.

The war on drugs should never have been declared in the first place. Didn't the 1920s teach us anything?

People wanted to drink anyway in the 1920s, and so they did. The 18th amendment to the Constitution didn't stop alcohol use in this country — it only drove it into the black market, putting money in the hands of organized crime.

The same thing is happening today — gangs and governments alike are feeding off of drug money. Any time you criminalize a drug that a large number of people want, you create a black market, subsidize organized crime and teach ordinary people disrespect for the law.

But then, our country is pretty good at teaching disrespect for the law.

We pass all sorts of absurd, puritanical laws that everyone breaks — sodomy laws, under-21 drinking ages and 65 mph speed limits on roads that can safely handle 95. To paraphrase a line from the recent movie, "French Kiss", we are "a nation of puritanical hypocrites." No wonder the people of this country have no faith in our government.

It's an old story in our country. A zealous minority passes morality laws to attempt to control the behavior of the majority, and the majority promptly goes out and breaks them anyway. Then they pretend they don't.

By writing this column, I am breaking that silence. I'm not going to pretend anymore that my occasional marijuana usage is something to be ashamed of because I am no longer going to be a part of the complicity of silence that surrounds marijuana usage.

One thing I have learned from long experience is that things don't change unless people of good conscience, like myself, step forward and proclaim the truth as we see it.

I realize there are people who are going to attempt to censure me because I have written this column — people who will argue that I should be fired from the Collegian, kicked out of my dorm, denied financial aid, expelled from the University and thrown in jail for my "crime."

That's a risk I am willing to take.

But be aware, I am not going down without a fight. And I will not be silent about it, either.

▶ LESS FEES, LESS SERVICE

Editor,

I have been a user of Lafene for two years. Lafene was already too busy before, but now since one doctor has left, it is even harder to get an appointment. $80 is not much to pay to see a doctor or a nurse for a whole semester. Also, Lafene has very low prices on prescriptions, X-rays, lab work and other services.

Cutting the health fee for Lafene would decrease quality, raise prices and make people wait even longer for service.

The idea for a user fee at Lafene is ridiculous. What if you only had to use Lafene once this semester, but six or seven times next semester?

Every time you go in, you would pay a user fee. Also, prescription prices and all other services at Lafene are likely to increase.

However, I can see where Trent LeDoux is standing. He may have never had to use Lafene before, and he is very lucky. However, in reality, most of us get sick at least once a year.

I don't use the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex or the Natatorium. I don't want to pay for something I don't use, either. If Lafene is going to get a user fee, every other student service should also.

Fee payment is how every student service gets its money to operate. Even though I don't use the Rec Complex, I pay so others can. We need to start thinking of ourselves as a community and not as individuals.

Tips for career fair lead students through job hunt

Late this afternoon and tomorrow morning, 160-plus companies and 350-plus representatives will be in arriving on campus for the All-University Career Fair, which is sponsored by Career and Employment Services, all the colleges on campus and K-State-Salina.

These companies are here to talk to you, the future graduate, about career opportunities.

This year's career fair will be the biggest and best that K-State has seen. Here are my 10 tips/suggestions for the Career Fair.

1. Plan a strategy. The map of the booth locations in the K-State Student Union and a list of companies that will be represented can be found in this issue of the Collegian. A list of companies and the specific major they are requesting can be found at each college's dean's office or possibly department office.

You should determine which companies you wish to speak with and the location in the Union. Making a list of the companies on each floor you are interested in could save you time and less walking.

2. Research. If you are really interested in a company and want to be a step ahead of your fellow student, research could be the key. Information on companies coming the career fair can be found at Career and Employment Services in Holtz Hall. If you have done your homework, you can have a more intelligent conversation about the company and its future.

COLUMN

SCOTT SMITH

3. Résumé. Have a well-written resume that has an objective statement that states what you are looking for, such as full-time employment or an internship. I recommend you bring at least 20 to 30 resumes to the career fair, depending on the number of companies you are interested in and time you have to spend at the career fair.

4. Dress for success. Dress for the career fair as you would for a job interview.

5. Allow plenty of time. If a company's interested in you, you might need to spend a significant amount of time with its representatives. Don't be in a hurry.

6. Ask questions. This is where your homework comes into play. Ask intelligent questions about the company. Use the career fair to learn as much as you can about the career opportunities with the specific company. Make sure to ask for as much information about the company as you can, such as annual reports and career brochures. Don't ask what the company can do for you.

7. Business cards. Make sure to ask for a business card from each representative who you speak with during the course of the fair. A business card will aid with sending thank-you and follow-up letters.

8. Make notes. Before leaving each booth, make notes of any conversation and possible opportunities that the company has available. If the representative calls you later, these notes can aid you in remembering who he or she is and what was discussed. Without notes, you might become confused if you visited with several company representatives in a short period of time.

9. Thank-you notes. Always send a follow-up letter to each representative with whom you have spoken during the career fair. You might enclose another copy of your resume.

10. Help. A great way to make contacts (i.e. network) is to help with the career fair. Student volunteers are needed to help with setup, parking, facilities and take down. If you would like to help, feel free to contact me (537-4548 or 532-6541) or one of the committee members of the All-University Career Fair.

Even if you are a freshman, the career fair should be on your agenda for Tuesday. The advantage of the career fair is that you can get information about career opportunities in a give-and-take fashion. I hope to see you in the Union on Tuesday.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Becky Siders, K-State custodian, stands with her two children, Jessica, 11, and Carl, 9, at the site of their new home on Fort Riley Lane. The house is being built with money from a sweat-equity loan and the aid of Habitat for Humanity. With the sweat-equity loan, the interest is waived in return for physical labor and arranging for help in building a house. A ground-breaking ceremony was at the site of the new home Saturday morning.

HOUSE

"I think the simplest thing to say is she showed the greatest want to partner," Ruth Miller, chair of the Family Selection Committee, said. "She would have helped out with the project even if she wasn't chosen."

Siders is required to pay the interest-free mortgage, which will be between $30,000 and 40,000, and provide sweat-equity hours, which includes volunteering to work on the house.

"When they said it was an interest-free loan, I couldn't believe it," Siders said.

The three-bedroom house will be mortgaged at cost, and a final price of the project will not be decided until the last board is nailed, Ray Davis, chair of the construction committee, said.

K-State's Habitat For Humanity chapter will be active in the construction project, working during the week and on weekends.

"It's a lot of fun, and I feel better helping somebody else," said Kevin Miller, fourth-year architecture student and president of K-State's Habitat chapter.

Siders said it is going to be fun to move into new house, but it will also be a lot of responsibility.

"I can't just call up the landlord if something goes wrong, but I don't have to ask if I can pound a nail in the wall," she said.

Owning a house is going to be a little overwhelming at first, Siders said.

But Siders has been learning about budgeting and house maintenance from Habitat.

"Habitat wants to help people help themselves," Davis said.

The Siders also had a chance to help design the house.

"We have this bar set up in the kitchen so that Mom can just turn around and help us with our homework," Vanessa, 11, said.

Dennis Story, fourth-year architecture student at K-State, worked with Siders on the project.

"I was able to develop a plan for Becky that she was happy with," Story said.

Vanessa's room will be directly across the hall from Becky's, and Carl, 9, will have a room just down the hallway.

The most exciting part of the project for Vanessa is the prospect of having her own room, she said.

"I'm going to have somebody put a lock on the door," she said.

Not that Vanessa doesn't love her family,. It's just that they can get annoying, and it would be nice to lock them out every so often, she said. Vanessa and Becky now share a cubbyhole sized room in a trailer house.

Vanessa said she plans to paint her room blue, which is her favorite color.

Carl just likes the idea of having more room for his toys.

"I get all this room so that I can set all my toys up," he said.

"And believe me, I've got a lot of toys."

Carl also said he plans to set up his personal library, which will include an extensive collection of Goosebumps.

"If I get bored, I just read books," Carl said.

The project should take about six months to complete, but workers are hoping to get most of the outside work completed before winter sets in, Davis said.

Series to debate farm bill effects

Tonya Bobbitt
staff reporter

The 1995 Farm Bill is the focus of a conference at K-State today.

"Family Farming in the 21st Century" will discuss the positive and negative aspects of the 1995 Farm Bill.

Bob Bergland, former United States Secretary of Agriculture, and Sarah Vogel, North Dakota Secretary of Agriculture, will speak at 2:45 and 4 p.m. respectively in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union. A panel discussion will be at 7:30 p.m. in McCain Auditorium with Lee Swenson, president of the National Farmers Union, and Ron Sampson, president of the Mid-America Commercialization Corp.

The one-day conference will focus on the 1995 Farm Bill because it will guide farming policies in the United States for five years, Gloria Rumsey, coordinator for the Lou Douglas Lecture series, said.

"The conference is expected to provide an understanding of how the farm bill will impact the small-farm communities economically," Rumsey said. "It will also affect small-family farming operations."

The 1995 Farm Bill will be debated in an atmosphere of intense budget cutting in Washington. It is also a social issue because farmers do not know how the government will help them economically, and existing programs could change, Rumsey said.

"If you're going to talk about agriculture, then K-State is the perfect place because it is a land-grant school," said Emil Mushrush, state secretary of the Kansas Farmers Union.

The conference is co-sponsored by the Kansas Farmers Union and the Lou Douglas Lecture series.

Lou Douglas was instrumental in bringing the rural communities together politically, Rumsey said.

All students are invited to attend the conference.

Festival selects top international films

Associated Press

TORONTO — "Antonia's Line," a British-Belgian-Dutch film directed by Marleen Gorris, was chosen by audiences at the Toronto Film Festival as their favorite movie, winning the Air Canada People's Choice award.

Organizers of the 10-day festival, which ended Sunday after screening 296 films from 50 countries, said Japanese director Shunji Iwai took second place with "Love Letter."

Diane Keaton's "Unstrung Heroes" tied with British director Peter Yates's "The Run of the Country" for third place.

The Toronto-City Award for best Canadian feature film went to Bruce Sweeney for "Live Bait." A special jury citation was given to John L'Ecuyer for "Curtis's Charm" and Clement Virgo for "Rude."

International film critics gave their top honors to Norwegian director Brent Hamer's "Eggs" and American Tim McCann's "Desolation Angels."

The Metro Media Award, chosen by the Canadian media, went to French director Claude Charbrol's "La Ceremonie." Tied for second place were American Todd Solondz with "Welcome to the Dollhouse," French director Mathieu Kassovitz with "La Haine" and Americans Rob Epstein and Jeffrey Friedman with "Celluloid Closet."

Third place went to Gus Van Sant of the United States for "To Die For" and "Fallen Angels" by Hong Kong director Wong Kar-wai.

The John Spotton Award for best Canadian short film, sponsored by the National Film Board of Canada, was awarded to Laurence Green for "Reconstruction."

Special citations were given to Guy Maddin for "Odilon Redon" and John L'Ecuyer for "Use Once and Destroy."

National Chiropractic Week

September 12th - 18th

This week is in commemoration of the first chiropractic adjustment evergiven by Daniel David Palmer on Sept. 15, 1895 in Davenport Iowa. Harvey Lillard, a deaf janitor, had informed Palmer that he had lost his hearing soon after he had developed a stiff neck. Palmer was allowed to examine the janitor's neck and upper back. What Palmer found was a restricted bony "bump" in his upper back. By adjusting this restricted area in Harvey Lillard's back, D.D. Palmer restored the deaf man's hearing.

Interestingly enough at the time, D.D. Palmer thought he had discovered the cure for deafness. He promoted his new discovery. Deaf people from around the country came to his office in Iowa. As he would later find out, these restricted areas were actually bones of the spine (vertebrae) that had been misaligned. He termed these misaligned vertebrae "subluxations." Palmer never restored anyone else's hearing. However, he and his son, B.J. Palmer, discovered that after adjusting vertebrae in areas throughout the spine, these patients reported experiencing improved performance in other aspects of their health.

The misaligning of the vertebrae can result from many common occurrences in life. Subluxations are produced by trauma to the body including slips, falls, lifting improperly, athletics, and car accidents. Job stress (sitting, standing and driving for too long) also can cause vertebrae movement.

Off weekends, weekends off and other thoughts

Some thoughts on what ended us as a weekend off for some and an off weekend for others:

■ The K-State football team has used the weekend off to prepare for the mighty Akron Zips. Akron went 1-10 last season, with that victory coming against Ohio University.

Akron loses seven starters from a team whose most prolific player was the mascot, a towering behemoth that looks like a cross between the Michelin Tire guy (after all, the Zips play in the Rubber Bowl) and the Stay-Puft Marshmallow Man of Ghostbusters fame.

COLUMN

DAN LEWERENZ

We had better score first this time.

■ It was an off weekend for the K-State volleyball team. Sure, they went 3-1 and knocked off a solid squad from Arkansas State. But they proceeded to lose to Stephen F. Austin, a team coach Jim Moore described as "not at all spectacular."

■ The Wildcat tennis team enjoyed their last weekend off. Next weekend, they will play host to Purdue, Oklahoma State and Oral Roberts in the Travelers Express Invitational.

After a conversation with God, Oral Roberts has announced if his team doesn't return with the title, God will call Roberts home.

■ It was an off weekend for the Jayhawk cross country team. Though both their men's and women's teams were nationally ranked, they pretty much completely lost their own meet. Cool.

■ It might as well have been a weekend off for the KSU/Fort Riley Rugby team. The Cats annihilated Lincoln 59-3 in Nebraska.

On the national scene…

■ The entire state of Alabama had an off weekend. No. 5 Auburn lost to Louisiana State, and No. 13 Alabama lost to Arkansas.

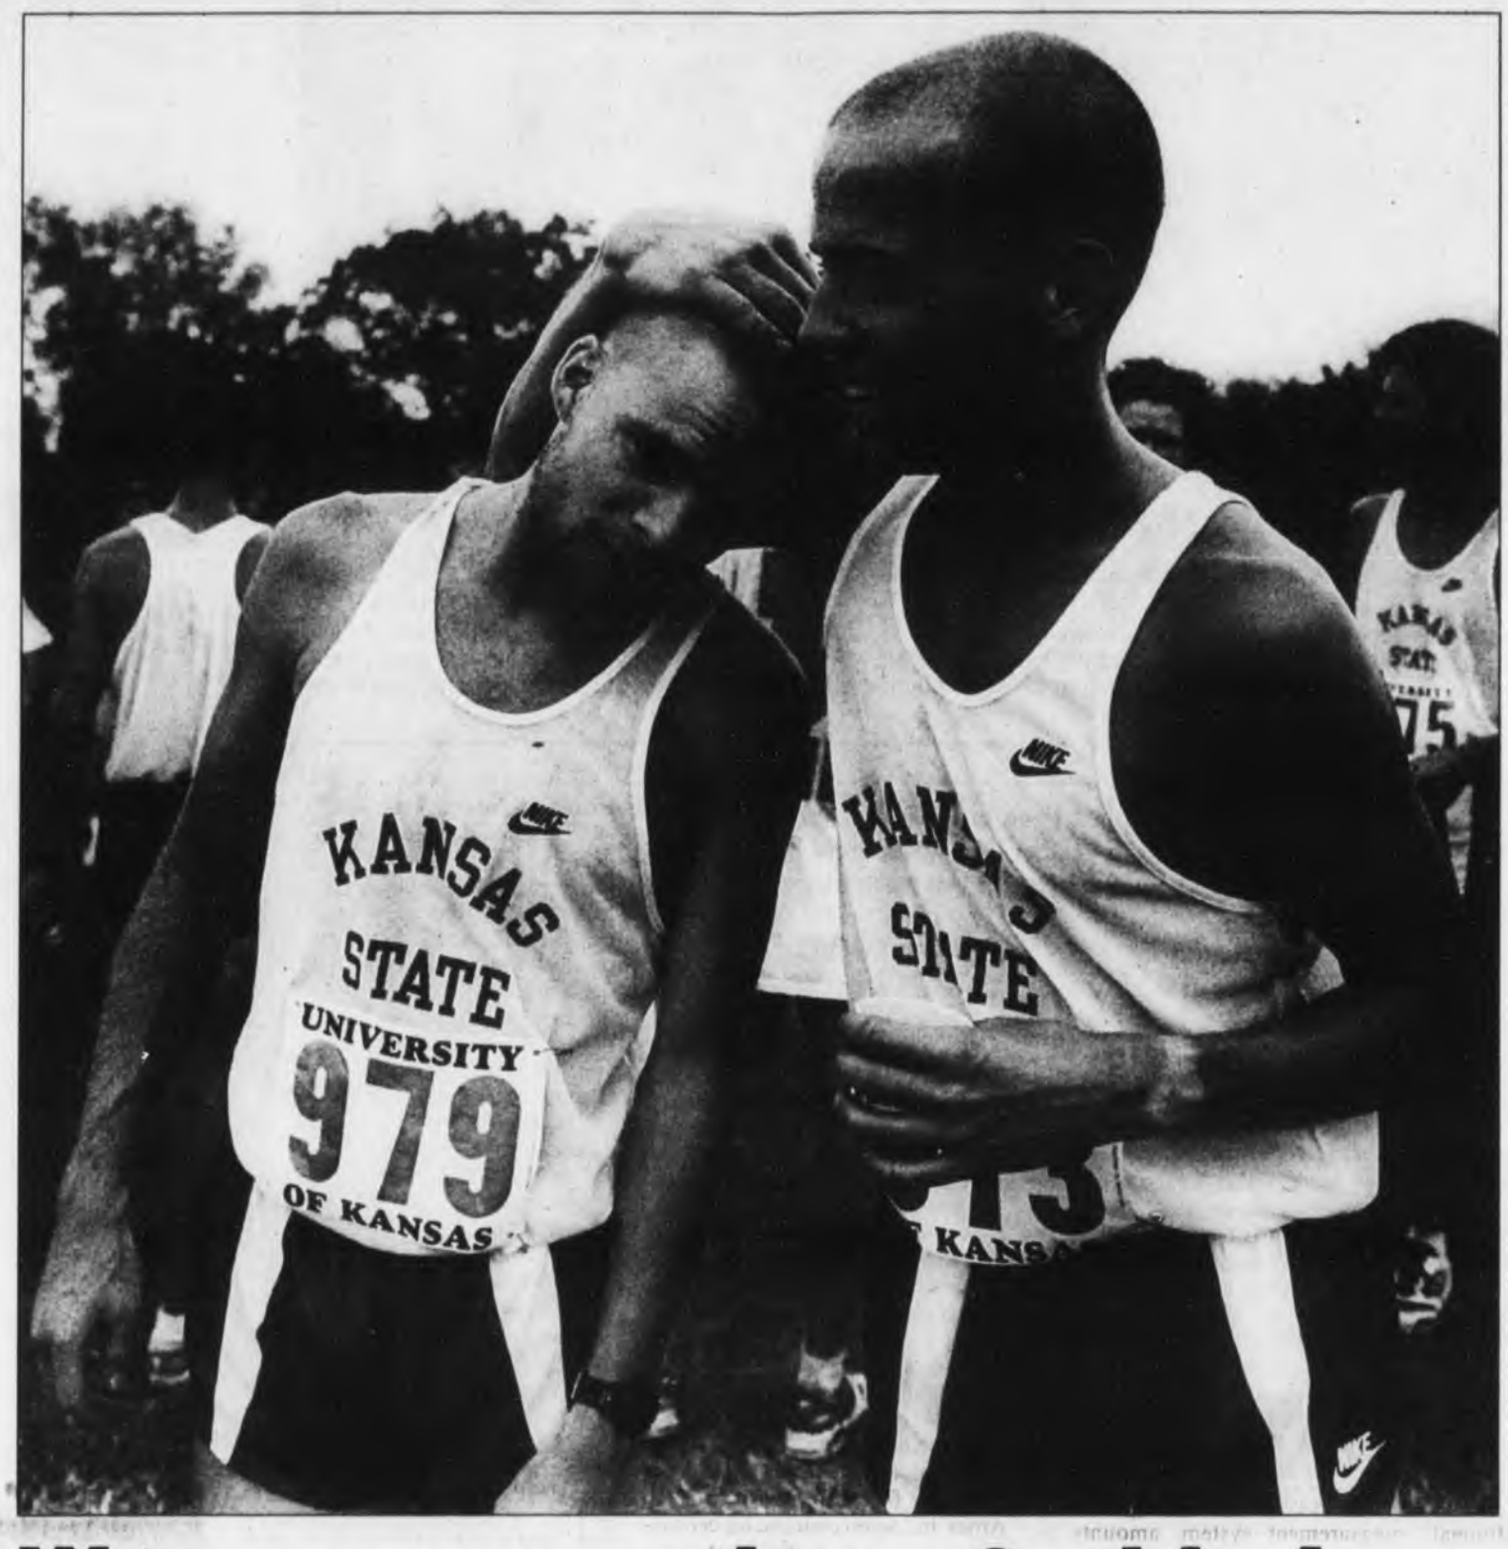
■ The voters in the college football polls took the weekend off. Here's one to ponder — 'Bama comes in ranked No. 13, loses on a blown call (everyone who watched the replay knows that final end zone pass hit the ground), and they still drop in the polls.

By all that's right and good, the Tide won that game. But I guess the fact that they were in a position to lose in the first place supports my claim that they didn't deserve to be ranked yet.

■ It was an off weekend for the Wildcats of Northwestern. After beating Notre Dame and cracking the Top 25, the Wildcats dropped to Miami. I guess that's to be expected.

■ Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz took the weekend off to recover from back surgery. But the Irish didn't need him to rout Vanderbilt 41-0.

■ Boy, it really was an off weekend for Northwestern. That was Miami of Ohio they lost to, not Miami of Florida. According to Athlon Sports, Miami (OH) is one of the top 95 teams in Division IA — out of 108. But, despite the recent success of the Wildcats, I guess that's to be expected.



■ Nebraska running back Lawrence Phillips took the weekend off, likely the first of many. And the Cornhuskers didn't miss him, scoring a school-record 63 points in the first half.

Hey Tom, how 'bout giving Phillips the next 20 or so weekends off?

■ What began as a weekend off for the Tennessee Volunteers turned into an off weekend against Florida in the Swamp. The Vols gave up 48 straight points en route to a 62-37 thumping, giving up control of the SEC East in the process.

■ Personally, it was a weekend off. I like it when all that Cats are playing away from home. Not that I got anything productive done, but I had the freedom to be productive.

And that is all that matters.

Congrats
After winning the men's 8K cross country race, John Thorpe is congratulated by teammate Zach Davies. Thorpe won the race with a time of 24:57.

Women, men place 2nd in Lawrence

Chris May
staff reporter

The K-State women's and men's cross country teams showed they can compete at the Jayhawk Invitational this past weekend.

K-State kicked off the 1995 varsity cross country season with a second-place finish for the men's and women's teams.

The top runner for the women was Irma Betancourt, a senior from Mexico City. Betancourt came in fourth place in the 5K race with a time of 18:09.4, a career best.

"The last hill was really hard for me," Betancourt said. "Before the hill, I was in third place, and after the hill, I was in fourth."

Betancourt said she wants to make it into the top five in the Big 8 by the end of the season and she also wants to go to nationals.

Other K-State women runners at the invitational included sophomore Ashlie Kinton, who finished No. 17 with a time of 19:15.0; senior Charity Swartz, who finished No. 23 with a time of 19:20.2; junior Samantha McNamara, who finished No. 25 with a time of 19:24.0; junior Kay Mannebach at No. 26 with a time of 19:30.3; freshman Lindsay Moser at No. 37 with a time of 19:49.0 and freshman Alison Canny at No. 44 with a time of 20:14.9.

"We came up here wanting to beat two ranked teams, and we did that, so we got one of our goals. The women ran real solid. I held them back a little bit, and they moved up as a team," Coach Terry Drake said.

"They did real well. I'm real happy with them."

The top five women's teams competing in the Jayhawk Invitational included Georgetown, which took first; Oklahoma State, third; KU, fourth and Loyola University, Chicago, fifth.

> KU CROSS COUNTRY COACH

Georgetown is ranked No. 6 nationally, and Kansas is ranked No. 19.

The men had a solid day as well, placing three runners in the the top 10.

Junior John Thorpe came in first with a time of 24:57:7.

Thorpe said he didn't have a goal set out for the race; he just wanted to run in front for awhile.

Mission accomplished.

"John Thorpe just really surprised me. He took control and ran a great race," Drake said.

Thorpe said he enjoyed the cloudy, cool weather.

"I don't think you could have asked for a better day," Thorpe said.

He wasn't the only Wildcat running a great race. Junior Ryan Clive-Smith came in No. 5 with a time of 25:26.3, and junior David Dominguez placed No. 7 with a time of 25:26.3.

"I couldn't be happier with the men. They've really meshed together, and they proved it today," Drake said.

Other runners for the Cats included sophomore Paul Birnbaum, who finished No. 19 with a time of 26:08; freshman Brent Stover at No. 26 with a time of 26:18.8; freshman Zach Davies at No. 30 with a time of 36:34.6; freshman David Barland at No. 43 with a time of 27:14.0; senior John Etzel at No. 44 with a time of 27:15.2; and freshman Rocco Morganti at No. 57 with a time of 27:49.8.

Central Missouri State finished first for the men, followed by K-State, Loyola, Drake and Northwest Missouri State. Kansas, though ranked No. 21 nationally, finished No. 6 out of seven teams competing, beating only Pittsburgh State.

The University of Kansas had a disappointing finish for the men and the women, Jayhawk Coach Gary Schwartz said.

"This is not a good day for the Jayhawks," Schwartz said. "I'm more upset that K-State beat us. It's never easy getting beat by the purple and the white."

Up next for the Wildcats is the KSU Invitational Saturday, Sept. 23, at Warner Park.

K-State golfers have disappointing showing

It was a rough weekend for the K-State men's and women's golf teams.

The men finished No. 16 in a 24-team field at the Falcon Cross Creek Invitational in Colorado Springs, Colo., and the women placed fifth out of 5 at the Hawkeye Invitational in Iowa City, Iowa.

Senior Scott Hovis led the way for the Wildcat men, shooting 75-74-75—224.

Senior Rachelle Bond led the women with an 80-78-82—240 finish.

Netters win, still need improvement

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

K-State's volleyball team moved to 6-2 on the season, winning their first three matches at the Stephen F. Austin Tournament in Nacagdoches, Texas, before falling to the host in the Wildcats' final match.

But coach Jim Moore said he was less than pleased with his team's performance.

"We didn't play great," Moore said.

"We played mediocre the first day, then got worse from there."

The Cats opened slowly Friday, dropping the first game to Arkansas State before rebounding to win 13-15, 15-7, 15-10, 15-8. The Lady Indians qualified for the NCAA tournament last season.

Freshman Kim Zschau led the attack, recording 17 kills in the match. Junior Kate DeClerk added 15, followed by junior Yolanda "Toie" Young's 12 and senior Jill Dugan's 10.

Sophomore setter Devon Ryning contributed 56 assists to the Wildcat cause.

Defensively, Dugan led all players with 17 digs. Zschau tallied 14, and DeClerk added 10. Dugan and Zschau each recorded a block.

DeClerk's all-around effort, including a .500 attack percentage, helped land her on the all-tournament team. Dugan was also named to the team.

"Kate played really well the first day," Moore said. "She was almost unstoppable against Arkansas State."

Friday night, the Cats racked up another win, felling Southeastern Louisiana 15-11, 11-15, 15-8, 15-9.

Dugan and DeClerk each registered 16 kills, with senior Debbie Miller adding 12 and Kim Zschau hitting 11. Ryning had 57 assists.

Dugan again led the team in digs with 15 and assisted on eight blocks. DeClerk had 13 digs and eight block assists. Sophomore Val Phillips added 11 digs, and Zschau finished with 10.

K-State's winning streak would continue Saturday with a quick strike against Southern Mississippi, 15-8, 15-12, 15-10.

But the winning form was no longer there, with the Cats hitting only .128. Dugan was the only Wildcat to record double-digit kills (10) and led the team in digs with eight.

"The only thing that saved us was that Southern Miss played even worse than we did," Moore said. The Golden Eagles hit only .043 in the match.

K-State's woes continued Saturday night, when Stephen F. Austin topped the Cats 15-10, 11-15, 16-14, 15-4.

Though Dugan and Young each recorded 16 kills and Zschau added 11, the Wildcats had 39 errors, hitting a dismal .108 in the match.

The defense didn't click either — no Wildcat had more than 11 digs, and the Cats had only five blocks.

"(Stephen F. Austin) just outplayed us," Moore said.

K-State returns home next weekend. K-State will be host to Creighton, Wichita State, Northeastern Illinois and Rice. In the meantime, Moore said, the Cats have some work to do.

"We need to work on everything, basically," Moore said. "Part of it could have been a lack of focus, but part of learning how to win is hating to lose.

"This week, we'll see if we hated losing."

Politicians debate Powell's platform

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Retired Gen. Colin Powell said his Republican mentors, Ronald Reagan and George Bush, were not sensitized to racism and failed to truly understand it.

"The problem with Reagan and Bush and (former Defense Secretary Caspar) Weinberger and their ilk is that they just never knew," Powell said in an interview with the New Yorker, released Sunday.

The first inklings of the black general's political philosophy have suggested considerable differences with the conservative direction of the Republican Party he might hope to lead.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, a conservative running for the White House, said Sunday Powell's ideas sound more Democratic than Republican.

"I would have to say that, in his initial statements about politics, about affirmative action, about gun control, about the pro-life issue, I think his views in some way reflect more the views of the Democratic Party than the Republican Party," Gramm said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Powell has just launched a national tour to promote his memoirs and test the waters for a possible presidential campaign, either as a Republican or an independent.

Powell has described himself as a fiscal conservative with more liberal views on such issues as affirmative action, gun control and abortion rights.

In the interview with the New Yorker, he said Bush and Reagan were two of the closest people in his life, but he said they were never sensitized to the issue of racism.

"This was an area where I found them wanting," Powell said.

Powell, who served as national security adviser and chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff during the Reagan and Bush administrations, said he was shocked when he read a Republican newsletter stating affirmative action was no longer needed to combat vague and ancient wrongs.

"I said, vague? Vague? Denny's wouldn't serve four black Secret Service agents guarding the president of the United States," Powell said.

He criticized another Republican candidate for president, California Gov. Pete Wilson, for his campaign against affirmative action.

"We've got Pete Wilson out there saying that affirmative action is bad because there are eight-tenths of 1 percent more black students in the University of California school system as a result of 15 years of affirmative action," he said.

Powell said he didn't want to be elected as the first black American president.

"I don't want to be the poster child for the brothers or for guilty white liberals. That would not be true to the image I have of myself."

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., the current front-runner for the 1996 GOP nomination, said Sunday Powell would be a great asset to the Republican Party whether he runs or not. But he said they're not going to change the party to make him comfortable.

World bank sets criteria for wealth

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In some ways, it's the world turned upside-down: Surinam richer in national wealth per person than Belgium, Gabon than New Zealand, Botswana than Saudi Arabia.

Developed by the World Bank, a new system of measuring wealth attempts to go beyond traditional gauges like gross national product. The appraisal includes four ways of assessing societies, only one of which measures the production of material wealth.

The new method, which bank officials said could take years to perfect, is intended to show how successful a country is in improving the present and future lives of its people.

The system has produced evidence that almost every country, from Afghanistan to Zimbabwe, rich or poor, has more wealth in its people's productive ability than in the goods it produces.

Ismail Serageldin, World Bank vice-president for environmentally sustainable development, said the system is far from perfected, just a start and very crude.

But he said it challenges conventional thinking by looking at wealth instead of just income. It also expands the concept of wealth beyond money and investments.

It is intended to help give a clearer picture of an economy's strengths and weaknesses.

The system weighs what a society earns against what it consumes in natural resources and other considerations that most people would consider intangibles.

The system, laid out in a World Bank publication released Sunday called "Monitoring Environmental Progress: A Report on Work in Progress," for the first time, folds a country's people and its natural resources into its overall balance sheet.

Using the traditional measure of wealth, GNP, Surinam's 1993 per-capita share was $2,800; Belgium's was $17,200.

Surinam's wealth, using the new measurement system, amounts to $389,000 a person; Belgium's, $384,000.

Saudi Arabia's gross national product was $194 billion, $11,000 per Saudi; Botswana's GNP was $6 billion, $4,500 per Botswanan.

By the new measure, Botswana's per-capita wealth is $188,000; Saudi Arabia's, $184,000.

The United States' per-capita wealth was $421,000 under the new scale — less than of Norway, Denmark, United Arab Emirates, Qatar, Iceland, Sweden, Japan, Switzerland, Luxembourg, Canada and Australia.

Pope visits South Africa

Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Pope John Paul II urged Africa and the world on Sunday to follow South Africa in rejecting violence and hatred to work for peace and reconciliation.

"A new dawn has risen," the pope said at an outdoor Mass attended by about 100,000 people, including Nelson Mandela, South Africa's first black president. "Become what you want to be — the rainbow people of God."

On his first official visit to South Africa, the pope continued his celebration of the end of apartheid last year.

"The whole church is comforted and people everywhere rejoice in the change that has come about in South Africa during the last few years," John Paul said in his homily on a sun-drenched southern African morning at a Johannesburg horse track.

"Seeing what is happening here, men and women of good will hope that in other parts of this continent too, and throughout the world, violence will give way to dialogue and agreement, and the lives of innocent men, women and children will no longer be in danger for reasons which, more often than not, they neither share nor understand," he said.

Repeating a central theme of his six-day trip that began in Cameroon and ends in Kenya, the pope called for the world to focus attention on easing the suffering of Africans.

For the first time on the trip, he singled out problems in specific countries like Rwanda, Burundi, Sudan, Algeria and until recently in the republic of South Africa, because of apartheid.

"The time of ideological contrasts is over," John Paul said, referring to Cold War proxy battles that ravaged the continent for decades.

Congress debates idle land

▶ The Conservation Reserve Program is being revised for new farm bill.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A struggle over acres and dollars has become more intense on Capitol Hill as farm-state lawmakers and environmentalists look more closely at conservation issues.

At stake is the expensive — but popular — Conservation Reserve Program. This program, which costs $1.8 billion a year, was created 10 years ago to prevent wind erosion and boost crop prices by idling land.

The program is set to expire, and its future must be determined in the farm bill now being drafted. Environmentalists and many farmers like the program, sometimes for different reasons and with different goals in mind.

Using the program, farm owners or operators can idle their environmentally sensitive land for 10 to 15 years in exchange for a government rental payment and half the cost of planting a protective cover.

Some 36.4 million acres, or 8 percent of U.S. cropland, is enrolled in the program. Most of this land is in the Plains states. A big chunk of good cropland that can be safely farmed — if done carefully — has been tied up.

Environmentalists want more land targeted to combating water erosion, a bigger problem east of the Mississippi, and to protecting land where wildlife live.

Farmers like the program, too, because it pays them to conserve. Many government rental payments are higher than the market rate.

Sen. Dick Lugar, chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, put it more bluntly last week at a news conference.

"Some farmers who have been in the CRP, they want to stay in the CRP," he said. "They don't want to farm. They want the money from the thing."

Lugar says that's just the aim of a proposal being drafted by Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., along with Sens. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, and Larry Craig, R-Idaho.

Their conservation bill, still being drafted, would let previously enrolled land be re-entered at 80 percent to 100 percent of the old rental rate. It would also let some non-erodible land in if the fields cannot be economically and efficiently divided, a staff working paper said.

Critics said that it will make it easier for the old CRP land to re-enter, and at inflated prices.

"That reduces the amount of money available for new enrollments," said Timothy Warman, director of federal policy for the American Farmland Trust.

No such thing, said a Senate staffer familiar with the proposal. All sign-ups, including re-enrollment of old lands, would have to meet new standards that focus more on problems like water pollution.

But the staffer, discussing the emerging bill only on grounds of anonymity, also said the formula would cushion the drop in payments to producers in states like Kansas, where rental rates were higher than average for lands that have been enrolled in the program for years.

At the same time, commodity groups have said if farm spending must be cut, they would rather the remaining dollars go to crop payments.

Environmental groups like the Farmland Trust support a bill introduced in May by Lugar, R-Ind., and Sen. Patrick J. Leahy. That bill would place emphasis on partial field enrollments, such as filter strips, hill tops and grassed waterways, saving more cropland for growing crops. His bill would pay a higher rate for those partially enrolled lands than the Dole-Grassley-Craig proposal would.

At least 4 million acres would be targeted to strips of land along lakes, rivers and streams to guard against water pollution.

Spending would drop from the $1.8 billion now to $1.2 billion at the turn of the century, consistent with what the Congressional Budget Office projects spending will be under the present program.

The spending would be made mandatory, protecting it from future cuts, which environmentalists like.

On the House side, the Agriculture Committee is holding out for revised numbers from the CBO based on an Agriculture Department decision late last year to continue the program.

That would boost the so-called baseline beyond the $1.2 billion used in the Lugar bill, allowing more acres in.

Environmentalists worry that holding off on a CRP decision will expose the money to budget cutting, a worry that the committee dismisses as it pushes to cut commodity spending and keep the CRP going.

Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan. and chairman of the committee, said he envisioned 32 million acres remaining in the program, with about 26 million allocated to the traditional uses that benefit the Plains.

Illinois no longer dominant ag school

Associated Press

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — The College of Agriculture at the University of Illinois once was dominant in state farming circles, but those days seem to be over.

The UI's new president, James Stukel, got an earful when he met recently with members of the Illinois Council on Food and Agricultural Research, an industry group.

Stukel said he asked the group where farmers turn when they need research results. They listed Iowa State, Purdue, K-State, Nebraska — not the UI, Stukel said.

"The farmers are not coming to us," Stukel said. "That is not personalities. That is intellectual horsepower. That, to me, was the most devastating."

Budget cuts, dwindling state research support, a college reorganization and ongoing troubles with the Cooperative Extension Service all share the blame, according to UI officials.

Trustee William Engelbrecht, who owns several agricultural enterprises, said the state's largest agricultural institutions have lost faith in UI's College of Agriculture.

"It's fairly substantive," he told trustees. "There's just been a change. We're not in the position we used to be."

Other trustees were skeptical and said the complaints seemed to arise suddenly. But Engelbrecht said they go beyond mere whining.

Engelbrecht said the UI ranks high in agriculture production but only 29th in funding for basic research in foods and nutrition.

"It logically flows that all the key organizations and agricultural groups can no longer look to the university when they need help," Englebrecht said.

Meanwhile, farmers are unhappy with the Cooperative Extension Service, whose reorganization several years ago appears to have satisfied no one.

"The changes in agriculture have been so dramatic over the last dozen years that I am concerned that the university — most specifically the Cooperative Extension Services — have not kept pace," Engelbrecht said.

Chancellor Michael Aiken said he could point to several promising young agricultural researchers who left the UI for better deals elsewhere because the UI has lost salary competitiveness.

To address the problems, the university will appoint a commission of agricultural leaders, farmers and other extension clients to study the future of the Cooperative Extension Service, said David Chicoine, interim dean of the College of Agriculture.

Funeral sets scene for reburial of czar

Associated Press

MOSCOW — An uncle of Russia's last czar was reburied Sunday in a dilapidated monastery, setting the scene for the long-awaited interment of the remains of Nicholas II and his family.

The remains of Grand Duke Sergei Alexandrovich Romanov, governor of Moscow for 15 years until his murder in 1905, were buried in the chapel of the Novospassky monastery next to other members of the Romanov royal family. His remains were found beneath a Kremlin parking lot.

Russian Orthodox Patriarch Alexy II led the somber ceremony, attended by Moscow Mayor Yuri Luzhkov, dozens of state officials and other notables. Romanov family members wept.

The funeral was a preview for the expected reburial of the grand duke's more famous nephew.

American and Russian experts confirmed earlier this month that bones unearthed in the Ural Mountains in 1991 were those of Nicholas II, his family and servants. The announcement set off widespread speculation that the family will be given an official, religious burial early in 1996.

That would be a huge event in Russia, where nationalist feelings are rising and the brutal Bolshevik killing of the czar, his wife Alexandra and their five children is a source of deep shame.

"We made an enormous step that will open a bright path both for Moscow and the entire Russia," Grand Duchess Maria Romanova, wearing a black dress, said after Sunday's ceremony. Her 15-year-old son, Georgy, is seen by most Russian monarchists as the rightful pretender to the throne.

It has not yet been decided where or when the imperial family's reburial could take place. The royal remains could be buried in Yekaterinburg, where they were executed in 1918, or in St. Petersburg's St. Peter and Paul Fortress, where other ruling members of the Romanov dynasty are buried.

The remains of the grand duke were moved at the request of President Boris Yeltsin and the Russian Orthodox Church to boost support for the reconstruction of the long-neglected Novospassky monastery.

After his assassination by a socialist revolutionary, Sergei Romanov was buried in a 14th-century Kremlin church that was later razed on Josef Stalin's orders.

The site was paved and used for decades to park black sedans used by Communist Party officials.

The church's crypt and the grand duke's remains were discovered under the parking lot during a renovation last July, according to the daily Moskovsky Komsomolets. Russia's Independent Television said the remains were first found in 1985, then quietly covered up with concrete again.

"You cannot walk over those who have lived before us, who have contributed to the well-being of our land and have helped its peoplem," the patriarch said speaking of such Soviet practices.

Cookie thief faces 25 to life

Associated Press

SANTA ANA, Calif. — Four uneaten chocolate chip cookies could put Kevin T. Weber behind bars for life.

Weber, 35, was convicted of burglary Thursday for breaking into a Santa Ana restaurant on Mother's Day and stealing the snacks.

It was his third felony conviction. According to a 1 1/2-year-old California law, that carries a sentence of 25 years to life in prison.

"People better think twice about what they do out there. It ain't funny and law-enforcement officials are serious about getting us," Weber told the Orange County Register in a jailhouse interview Friday.

The restaurant's manager said he was stunned by the potential sentence.

"I think he should pay for what he's done, probably clean up the freeways or something. But 25 years? I'm surprised. I'm shocked," said Mohammad Alkhuder, manager of Eric's Gazebo.

Prosecutors said Weber slipped into the restaurant through a rooftop vent on May 14 to steal the safe but tripped the burglar alarm and fled with just the cookies. Police arrested him outside. Weber didn't even get to eat the cookies because they were booked into evidence.

Weber said he was drunk at the time and does not remember the heist.

Weber's two previous felony charges stem from a 1989 burglary at an apartment where he pulled a gun on a tenant who surprised him. Weber pleaded guilty and was sentenced to two years in state prison.

Lawrence bands to rock campus in Opus contest

Paige Getz
contributing writer

Editor's note: This is the first in a five-part series profiling the bands competing in Opus 9.

Lawrence bands Jack Timberfish and 425 Main are among seven bands chosen to compete in the ninth-annual Opus competition Friday.

The members of 425 Main have bittersweet memories from last year's contest.

"Last year, we tried to win," J.C. Stos, guitarist, said. "This year, we don't really care — we just want to get our name out a little more."

The band emigrated from Great Bend to Lawrence last year in order to get into a more serious music scene and to focus on the band.

"We've written a lot of new material," Steve McAnulla, singer and guitarist, said. "It's more realistic, more honest."

He also said the band's recent work has meaning.

"We don't want anyone who watches us to think we're just doing party music," he said. "We're not a party band. We have something to say."

Although the music might be categorized as alternative, they consider themselves to be neither alternative nor rock.

"We haven't really found another band that sounds like us," Bill Lloyd, drummer, said.

With a little more experience and humility playing in the Lawrence and Kansas City area, 425 Main returns to Opus with a conscience.

"We just entered last year with the wrong idea, hoping for recognition to promote the band," McAnulla said. "This year, we've matured a lot, and we come back almost to redeem our name."

Jack Timberfish, also from Lawrence, recently played in Manhattan with Turquoise Sol at Club Berlin. Mike Runyon, vocalist and guitarist, said the band was apprehensive about the show.

"We're a little nervous about the Manhattan music scene," he said. "I think it's similar to the KU scene, except around here [Lawrence] people are more geared toward national acts. They're spoiled," he said.

Like Manhattan, there's a narrow market for local acts in Lawrence unless the band has been around long enough to acquire a large following, Runyon said.

At the risk of having a weak turnout, clubs and bars can't afford to go out on a limb to experiment with younger bands. As a result, Runyon said, clubs like the Bottleneck book national touring acts while leaving burgeoning bands out in the cold.

"It's not a real lucrative thing in Lawrence. They have to demand a following," Runyon said. "If you're not in a country band, you don't make money. But we won't sell out," he said.

Although Timberfish has mostly played regionally in the four-state area, the band is committed to its music above everything else.

"It's our primary focus," Runyon said. "We'd like for it to become a more full-time job."

Jack Timberfish is now in the process of recording a CD entitled "Remains," to be released this fall.

Clinton praises Dole's welfare bill

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton voiced support for a Senate welfare overhaul plan sponsored by Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole Saturday.

He said it puts the nation within striking distance of true welfare reform.

Although the measure contains some elements he has resisted in the past, Clinton pronounced it far preferable to a more restrictive welfare bill that passed the House last March.

Clinton used his weekly seven-minute radio address to praise the Senate for wisdom and courage in a series of votes last week that he said made the legislation more acceptable to him.

Meanwhile, Dole predicted passage of the measure with bipartisan support on Tuesday.

The GOP leader, teaming up with House Speaker Newt Gingrich for the GOP radio response, called the bill historic legislation to truly end welfare as a way of life and said it would dramatically overhaul 60 years of failed welfare policy.

"Once the Senate passes our plan, we will get together, and we'll resolve the few the differences there are, and I hope President Clinton will then sign the bill," Dole said.

Despite Dole's characterization of the differences between House and Senate versions as few, they were large enough to draw a threatened veto on the House version.

Deputy press secretary Mary Ellen Glynn said Saturday that the veto threat still stood.

The president's support for the Dole legislation came reluctantly and only in the context of the harsher provisions of the House legislation.

"We're on the verge of coming to grips with one of the most fundamental social problems of our time — moving people from welfare to work," Clinton said. "Now, we must finish the job, and we can't let ideological extremism and politics as usual get in the way. Make no mistake — if Congress walks away from this bipartisan progress, they will kill welfare reform."

Dole's bill sends federal welfare, job training and child-care programs to the states in block grants, curbs spending by $70 billion, and ends Aid to Families with Dependent Children and the federal guarantee of cash assistance.

Making it more palatable to the administration were votes in the Senate to set aside $8 billion for child care for single mothers on welfare, who would be required to work and to establish a $1 billion emergency grant fund for states.

The House-passed version would put a family cap on benefits, ban them entirely for mothers younger than 18 with children born out of wedlock and cut spending by $122 billion.

"After months of sometimes bitter debate, we are now within striking distance of transforming the welfare system," Clinton said.

But he suggested the House-passed version continued to reflect bipartisan extremism.

A House-Senate conference committee will work out a final version.

"We'll be working hard to build on the bipartisan progress we've made this week (in the Senate). We must not let it fall apart when the House and Senate meet to resolve their differences," Clinton said.

Despite Clinton's praise for the Senate plan, many influential Democrats are still criticizing it as too severe.

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, a New York Democrat and the Senate's leading welfare scholar, even threatened to withhold his support for Clinton in 1996 if he doesn't veto the bill.

Melissa Skolfield, a spokeswoman for the Department of Health and Human Services, said that despite differences with Moynihan and others, the Senate bill is moving in the right direction as far as the administration is concerned.

Gingrich, meanwhile, in his joint radio message with Dole, asserted that the agenda of Republicans who seized control of both houses of Congress last November is on track.

"Balancing the budget. Cutting taxes. Replacing our failed welfare system with one that works. Protecting, preserving and strengthening Medicare. Those are the Republican goals for the next 60 days," Gingrich said.

▶ HURRICANE MARILYN

Storm ravages U.S. territories, kills 6

Associated Press

CHARLOTTE AMALIE, U.S. Virgin Islands — The yachts that used to be in the marina are on the highway. The red roofs of houses are strewn on the ground. The duty-free shops where tourists used to look for bargains are filled with looters.

Hurricane Marilyn has moved on from St. Thomas, but the Caribbean island that it left behind was a changed place Sunday.

Electricity, water and phones were out. Air-traffic controllers, the windows of their tower blown out by 100-mph winds, used binoculars and radios to guide in relief flights. A quarter of the houses on the island were destroyed, and nearly all the others damaged.

In Charlotte Amalie, capital of the U.S. Virgin Islands, hundreds of people looted stores at a waterfront shopping center. No policemen were in sight.

"These are all odd shoes, man," said a young man at a Foot Locker store. "I can't find something that fits."

The hurricane, the fourth to hit the Caribbean in as many weeks, tore through the Virgin Islands and eastern Puerto Rico on Saturday, blowing apart homes, tossing parked airplanes into the air and killing as many as nine people.

Six people were killed on St. Thomas, home to 51,000 people. On St. Croix, the most populous of the Virgin Islands with 55,000 people, two people died. One person was killed in Puerto Rico.

President Clinton declared the U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico disaster areas, making them eligible for federal emergency aid.

Seven military transport planes landed Sunday on St. Thomas with the first relief supplies for island residents — plastic sheeting, water, telephone equipment, emergency medical supplies.

In St. Thomas, many buildings lost their facades, gaping open like dolls' houses. FEMA at first said half the island's houses were destroyed, but later said a quarter were destroyed and another 75 percent damaged.

Marilyn blew out the windows of St. Thomas' hospital and flooded it, making it virtually unusable. Doctors were trying to care for 49 patients, including nine critically injured in the storm and four on life-support units with erratic generator power, said Dr. Manuel Guzman.

Eight patients were evacuated Sunday, all by helicopter because debris blocked the road to the airport. Tin sheets from roofs, uprooted trees and utility poles lined the highway.

One stretch along the waterfront was blocked by two 30- to 40-foot yachts blown onto the road from the bay. The 82-foot U.S. Coast Guard cutter Point Ledge teetered on the edge of the pier, 30 feet from the roadway. Another two dozen yachts were beached on the far side of the bay.

The dead on St. Thomas included three people who reportedly were aboard boats battered by 12-foot-high waves and at least one man apparently crushed by debris, said David Sachs of the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Police in Puerto Rico on Sunday found the body of Jack Strickland, a diving instructor from New York City, in a sunken sailboat. Two more were killed by the storm in St. Croix, hospital officials said without elaborating. It was not clear if they were included in the St. Thomas count.

At least 50 more people were injured or missing in St. Thomas, although FEMA said an earlier report of up to 50 people trapped in a collapsed apartment complex in Charlotte Amalie was incorrect. The five-story buildings were in rubble, but FEMA officials in Washington said Sunday that nobody had been trapped.

Communications to St. Thomas were out, and FEMA set up two satellite telephones on Sunday. AT&T was sending a team to replace a microwave dish that Marilyn toppled from a building in Charlotte Amalie, knocking out long-distance phone service.

Virgin Islands Gov. Roy L. Schneider declared a 3 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew.

"Friends, I'm asking you to be calm and continue to be in your homes," Schneider said in a statement, which was broadcast by a Puerto Rican radio station because all of the Virgin Islands' stations were knocked out.

"I want all the young people that have been running around to go home and remain at home."

FEMA said FBI agents would accompany a shipment of satellite equipment Sunday from a military base in Martinsburg, W.Va., to St. Croix. The agents presumably would be intended to prevent looting.

When Hurricane Hugo hit in 1989, officials in St. Croix didn't ask for military help for days, and most businesses had been looted by the time troops arrived.

Associated Press

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — The newly crowned Miss America Shawntel Smith's real first name is LaCricia.

It took her four tries to get to the pageant, and she's the first redhead to wear the crown in 51 years.

One more thing — she won the title Saturday on her 24th birthday. Between now and her next one, she will earn about $250,000 in appearance fees and receive a $40,000 scholarship to go with $12,000 she already won competing in Miss Oklahoma.

No wonder she woke up Sunday wondering if it was just another dream like the one she had last week in which she was crowned Miss America 1996.

"I had to go over and look at my crown to make sure," Smith said.

The 5-foot-3-1/2, blue-eyed Smith is from Muldrow, a town of about 3,200 in eastern Oklahoma.

She works as a marketing director for Northeastern State University and plans to earn a master's degree in business administration from Oklahoma City University.

Or at least she did before the pageant. Now, Smith will travel up to 20,000 miles a month making speeches and other appearances as Miss America.

Her platform, "School to Work Education," involves teaching school children about careers early on as a means of preparing them for the job market.

She might consider stressing the importance of persistence.

After all, she knows a thing or two about it, having lost in three Miss Oklahoma pageants before she finally won.

The promise of scholarship aid kept her coming back, she said.

"The main thing that kept me going was the scholarship money. My father could have paid for my college, but I'm glad he didn't have to," said Smith, who put herself through Northeastern State with money won in pageants.

On Saturday, she wowed the judges with her rendition of "Woman In the Moon," from the Barbra Streisand remake of "A Star Is Born."

Smith is the fourth Miss Oklahoma to wear the Miss America crown.

The others were Norma Smallwood in 1926, Jane Jayroe in 1967 and Susan Powell in 1981.

Miss Oregon Emily John Orton was first runner-up, followed by Miss Arkansas Paula Gaye Montgomery, Miss California Tiffany Stoker and Miss Illinois Tracy Hayes.

Swimsuits were the other big winner Saturday.

Viewers voted overwhelmingly to keep swimsuit competition in the pageant.

In a live, unscientific call-in vote, 79 percent of the nearly 1 million callers who got through favored swimsuits, officials said.

"As far as I'm concerned, that puts an end to the swimsuit controversy, at least for a few years," Leonard Horn, president of the pageant, said Sunday.

Horn said most of the money generated by the calls, which cost 50 cents each, went to pay for the poll.

The remainder — as much as $50,000 — will be split between the Miss America Scholarship Foundation and a charity to be chosen by NBC.

The majority of contestants, including Smith, said they were pro-swimsuit. The 10 finalists wore identical red suits for their barefoot walk down the runway.

After she won, Smith blew kisses to the crowd, mouthed thanks to the judges and blinked back tears after her name was announced and outgoing Miss America Heather Whitestone, the first deaf winner, placed the crown on her head. She took her victory walk down the runway in a beaded white gown.

Smith said her victory would mean much to Oklahomans still recovering from the April 19 bombing of the federal building in Oklahoma City, 163 miles west of her hometown.

"I'd like to take the opportunity to tell everyone in the United States, thank you so much for coming together in a time of need in my state. We received so much support and so many prayers from other people around the nation," Smith said.

Can Computers Hurt My Eyes?

More and more, computers have become part of our daily lives. Work on computers can cause symptoms of eyestrain and fatigue such as burning tired eyes, trouble maintaining focus, and blurry distance vision for a while after working at the computer. Taking frequent breaks, adjusting the contrast and room lighting may help with these symptoms of eyestrain. If you wear glasses, having a current prescription and adding an anti-reflective coating to the lenses may decrease eyestrain.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

more difficult or expensive to get insurance.

"Of the letters we have received, 30 percent of the respondents have indicated that that is the case," she said.

Sebelius said discriminating against domestic-violence victims is not a crime, so insurance companies that indicate in the questionnaire they have discriminatory policies against domestic violence victims can't be fined or punished.

"Currently, it is legal. We do not have a prohibition against insurance [illegible] about [illegible]id.

[illegible]s this policy [illegible] wha[illegible]y against women. [illegible]ict[illegible]s who had the courage to report the abuse to the police and turn their abusers in end up having their insurance canceled after they leave and set up their own household," she said.

The insurance companies' policies discourage women from turning in or leaving their abusers, Sebelius said.

"Often, these women get the worst of all worlds by having their insurance companies cancel them," she said.

Joe Scranton, director of public information for Sebelius' office, said even after a woman has left her abuser, she might still find it difficult to get insurance.

"She might be seen as a higher risk," he said.

Sebelius said if legislation is introduced and passed to stop this practice, it would punish insurance companies who discriminate by fining them or taking away their licenses to sell insurance.

Sandy Burnett, executive director of the Crisis Center Inc. in Manhattan, said the center recently began asking questions regarding insurance policies.

"I wouldn't be surprised to know that those practices exist," she said.

"We're beginning to ask more women, but we won't know the results for a while."

Judy Davis, director of K-State's Women's Center, said she was unaware that the practice of discriminating against domestic violence victims was legal.

"I was aware that there was a problem with this in other states. I couldn't even conceive of it when I heard it," she said.

Davis said that although she knows this is a problem, no one has complained about it at the center.

"I've had no direct contact with the issue," she said.

Since Sebelius began her investigation, Davis said she has been following it.

"I applaud her efforts," she said.

that were the core of Brad and Jeff's campaign."

Cheatham said there will be some decisions that will have to be made without Peterson.

"There will be decisions that will have to be made when we cannot be in contact with Jeff like when he is in surgery, but we are not going to alter the issues. We are all still working on the same page," she said.

Cheatham said Peterson will keep in contact with his staff and K-State through phone, fax and e-mail. Last year when Peterson was ill, he was connected to campus e-mail through the Wichita State University computer system and a lap-top computer.

Nolfi said Peterson's staff was looking into using the same arrangement again.

"We all know Jeff, and he doesn't like to be out of the loop," Nolfi said.

Nolfi said Peterson stayed active in student government when he was hospitalized last year, but they have to wait and see what Peterson's energy level will be after his surgery.

times the ground motion of the one that took place here," Underwood said.

"At 6.1, you have 100 times more ground motion than a 4.1 magnitude, and that's where you can get some of your heavy damage."

An earthquake of a seven magnitude is a major quake capable of widespread heavy damage when centered in a heavily populated area.

Although the quake was felt from Wichita to Oklahoma City, there were no injuries or serious property damaged reported in any of the areas affected by the earthquake.

▶ INVESTIGATION

FBI blamed in Ruby Ridge

■ Prosecutor claims FBI responsible for acquittal

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The former federal prosecutor who brought murder charges against white separatist Randy Weaver said the FBI refused to cooperate with him and might have contributed to Weaver's acquittal.

The sharp criticism by Maurice Ellsworth, who was U.S. attorney for Idaho, came at a congressional hearing Friday into the 1992 shootout at Ruby Ridge, Idaho. Two deputy U.S. marshals also testified they believe Weaver accidentally shot and killed his own son, although he said he never fired his gun.

Also killed in the shootout was Deputy U.S. Marshal William Degan. Weaver's wife was killed by an FBI sniper the next day.

Ellsworth's office prosecuted Weaver and family friend Kevin Harris in 1993 on charges of murdering Degan. They were acquitted.

From the outset of the case, Ellsworth testified, "There was a total lack of cooperation from the FBI.

"We never had complete access to all the files in this case, he said to the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on terrorism.

Ellsworth said when he asked which FBI officials had authorized changes in the bureau's rules of engagement for the Ruby Ridge operation, he got no response and officials declined to meet with him.

That attitude only goes to enhance Weaver's attorneys' accusations of governmental cover-up and might have contributed to his acquittal, Ellsworth said.

FBI spokesman Carlos Fernandez said the agency would have no comment on Ellsworth's statements.

The Justice Department recently opened an investigation into allegations that high-level FBI officials engaged in a cover-up. Five FBI officials, including Deputy Director Larry Potts, have been suspended with pay.

When the hearings resume Tuesday, FBI agents who were familiar with the revised rules of engagement are expected to testify.

Meanwhile, FBI Director Louis J. Freeh told the New York Times the elite sniper team used at Ruby Ridge will not be dispatched to similar confrontations in the future without his personal permission.

Freeh was quoted in Sunday's editions of the Times as saying he should take a much more conservative approach to deployment of the Hostage Rescue Team. "In the non-emergency, non-reaction situation, it will not be a reflexive or an easy reaction," he said.

Ellsworth, now in private law practice, came under criticism at last Tuesday's hearing. Henry Hudson, the former head of the U.S. Marshals Service, testified the marshals had a plan to lure Weaver from his rural home without a confrontation, but Ellsworth rejected it.

The former prosecutor said he opposed the plan because, among other reasons, he believed Weaver wouldn't fall for it because he already had been arrested on a ruse by agents of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

The government concluded the shot that killed 14-year-old Sam Weaver came from a 9-millimeter weapon and either Deputy U.S. Marshal Larry Cooper or Randy Weaver could have fired the bullet.

"I did not fire at Samuel Weaver," Cooper told the Senate panel. "I very strongly believe that none of the rounds that I fired struck Samuel Weaver because I saw him running up the right fork after I fired my second, and last, three-round burst."

"If Samuel Weaver was struck by other gunfire, we did not have knowledge of that," Cooper said.

In response to questions, Cooper later said, "In my opinion, I believe Randall Weaver shot his son in the back accidentally."

Arthur Roderick, another deputy marshal at the scene, agreed with Cooper.

Weaver has said he believes Cooper deliberately shot his son, and he maintains he never fired shots during the gunfight near Weaver's mountainside homestead on Aug. 21, 1992.

He said Sam was running uphill toward him when he was shot in the back. Another wound, not fatal, came from a weapon that could only have been fired by Degan.

The following day, an FBI sniper shot and killed Weaver's wife, Vicki, 43, as she stood behind the door of the family's cabin holding her infant daughter.

Without admitting wrongdoing, the government recently agreed to pay Weaver and his surviving children $3.1 million for the killing of his wife and son.

▶ FLOOD OF 1993

Town struggles to rebuild

Associated Press

GRAFTON, Ill. — A brochure promoting the new community of Grafton Hills boasts of its woodland setting, new streets, sewers and water system and planned 27-hole golf course.

Just one problem — the southwestern Illinois town is missing what it was set up for — homeowners washed out in the Great Flood of 1993.

Since most of nearby Grafton was inundated by the Mississippi and Illinois rivers, the federal government has spent $15 million buying flood-ravaged homes and helping pay for a new town on the river bluffs.

But when Grafton had a lottery earlier this month to lure its former residents to Grafton Hills, only 11 of 169 residential lots were sold.

And none of the buyers were flooded-out homeowners.

Some Grafton residents say the project took too long. Others say Grafton Hills is too expensive.

All say the new town is a far cry from life in pre-flood Grafton, a blue-collar town with draft-beer bars, fried-fish restaurants and an antique row for tourists.

Players suspected in assault

■ Investigators looking at attack on students, dog

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

Several members of the K-State football team are being investigated in connection with an incident that occurred on the 1600 block of Leavenworth on Aug. 20.

The alleged assault was retaliation for a fight earlier that morning in which two K-State football players may have been involved. The victims both said they were sleeping when the first fight started.

One K-State student and one K-State graduate, who asked that their last names not be used, and the student's dog were assaulted in their home after several people broke down their door at about 9:30 a.m. that Sunday. One student needed stitches.

"(My husband and I) were sitting on the front porch having coffee that morning," Jan Walker, a neighbor who witnessed the break-in, said.

"We saw one car pull up. He pulled in that short driveway, and we thought 'What's going on?' Then comes at least four or five more cars, and they parked over here in the 'no parking.'

"They got out of their cars, and a bunch of guys headed for that house — and then we were scared. They kicked on the screen door. One guy tried to kick the inside door down, then another guy pulled him back and he just went through the door, shoulders-first."

"That's when my husband went in and called the police."

Ironically, the victims said, the door was unlocked.

Walker said she and her husband feared for the lives of their neighbors.

"There were more than 10 guys, and they were very large people. It was scary. It was like, are these people going to be alive?"

Once inside the house, the suspects went up the stairs, where they assaulted one of the residents, Steve.

"I heard the door breaking in, and I didn't know what was going on," Steve said. "I was getting ready to go to work, and about halfway down the stairs, there's a little landing. I saw about five guys coming up the stairs.

"I asked them what they were doing, and they asked if I knew what happened the night before. I'm like 'what are you talking about?' and they're like 'you know damn well what we're talking about,' and they started hitting me."

"I just kind of rolled over in the corner of that landing, and as they walked by they were kicking me and hitting me, and that's when they went into Matt's room."

Matt was sleeping when the break-in occurred, but was awakened by the noise.

"I was laying there in bed about 9:30 in the morning, and all of a sudden I hear a bunch of noise coming around the house," Matt said.

"I opened up the door, and I probably saw six or seven guys yelling at me about 'who's beating up on the football players?' My hands are up in the air, I'm like 'I had no idea there was a fight. I don't know what you guys are talking about.'

"Right then I got hit one time. And so I kind of cower off to my bed, and he came and hit me again. Then he turned around and gets this hammer — this big steel hammer that's on my desk. He picked that up and looked around the room. Then he set it down and

▶ FARM BILL

Agriculture affected by technology

Dana Harding
staff reporter

The social concerns of agriculture, economic development of rural communities and new uses of technology in family farming were discussed at a panel in K-State Student Union Forum Hall Monday.

The panel was the final event of the "Family Farming in the 21st Century" conference, which was co-sponsored by the Lou Douglas Lecture Series and Kansas Farmers Union.

Lee Swenson, president of the National Farmers Union, said Congress should look at the issues farmers are facing in rural America as they address the farm bill.

"When you take a look at Congress there is a perception when they look at the USDA statistics that farmers are doing well, but they forget to address that 88 percent of income comes from off-farm income. Spouses are forced to work for income benefits and other benefits, such as, health care," he said.

Inside
A former U.S. secretary of agriculture discussed the future of farming.
● Page 8

Technology is an up-and-coming issue, but it does not always benefit the family farmer, Swenson said.

For example, precision farming, which uses a satellite to tell farmers what additives a field needs, will improve farming technology, but will also require funding.

"This sounds fantastic, but we must also remember that these new technologies require funding. It is becoming more difficult for family farmers to keep up with technology." Swenson said.

The problem with writing a new farm bill for all commodities is agriculture needs are different across the nation. Also, the farm bill will be budget driven with $5-7 billion cut from commodity programs, within the next two years, to $13-14 billion cut in 7 years.

For this reason, Swenson said farmers and ranchers cannot agree on what they want in a farm bill.

Many bills have been introduced to try to solve the disagreement of various groups, but none of them can make all commodity groups happy, he said.

The National Farmers Union has created the Limited Marketing Loan Program that treats all commodities equally.

The bill does away with target deficiency payment by offering a support price of 115 percent for a five year market-average price with a limit of $175,000 per producer including all commodity varieties.

While the National Farmers Union is trying to reduce the complications of policy, Sarah Vogel, North Dakota Secretary of Agriculture, said she believes public policy has hurt the farmer.

Instead, Vogel has focused on economic development at the state level.

"We are working hard to diversify the state's economy. It makes me nervous that we might have to depend on the federal government. We are working hard to gain our independence," she said.

North Dakota's economic-development plan has set up diversity loan programs, ag mediation services and state-based small-business loans to help the family farmer.

Vogel has focused on informing farmers about agricultural policies, while Ron Sampson, president of Mid-America Commercialization Corp.,

Forum will address future of K-State

Abdulnaser Abdullah
staff reporter

Questions about the future of K-State, the Big 12 Conference and increases of tuition can be answered Wednesday at a forum organized by Mortar Board.

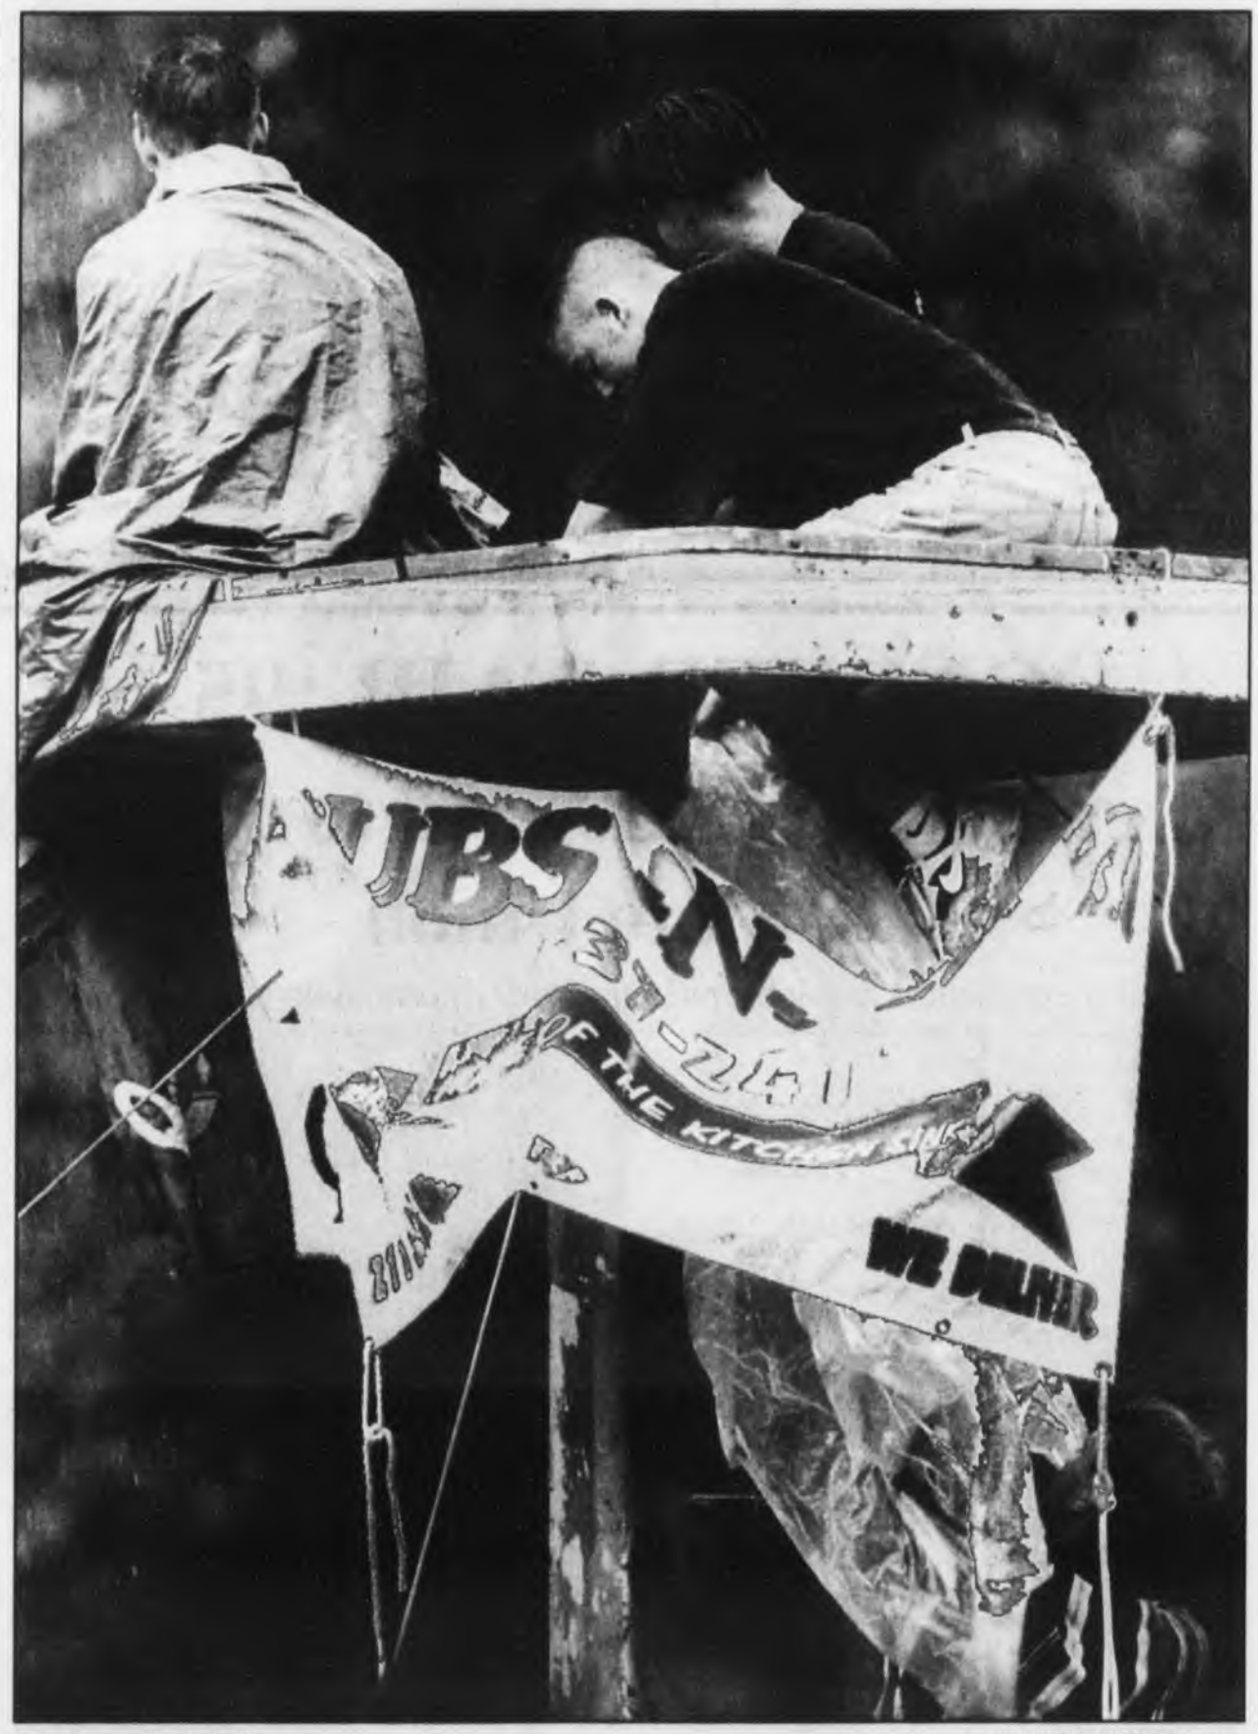
"There are going to be people there from President Wefald's office, the Department of Athletics, Farrell Library, Parking Services and Student Government to answer any questions students might have," said Mike Seyfert, leadership chair of Mortar Board.

Mortar Board, a senior honorary, organized the forum to address concerns of students, faculty, staff and the general public.

"It's basically for any student or faculty member to come out and ask those administrators any questions," said Shante Moore, chairman of the Mortar Board public relations committee.

Seyfert said the Big 12 could be a big issue to discuss Wednesday.

"A lot of students are going to have questions about how it's going to affect Kansas State competitively and our rank athletically," Seyfert said.



Students will also have a chance to question administrators about the increasing tuition fees and where the money is spent.

"The allocation of money can be discussed, since tuition keeps rising, and people want to ask where that money goes," Moore said.

Dwain Archer, director of Parking Services, said the forum provides an opportunity to answer questions face to face.

"Very often now, we are starting to experience other people telling our stories for us, so we want to get in front of that and start telling it the way that it is," he said.

Greer accepts job as city manager

Cori Cornelison
staff reporter

The sooner the new city manager's house is sold in Kearney, Neb., the sooner Gary Greer will move into city business.

Greer telephoned Mayor Edith Stunkel confirming he had signed the city's contract and mailed it Friday afternoon, Stunkel said. Peter Kotsiopulos, mayor of Kearney, said Greer announced his resignation to the city Friday.

He said Greer's contract requires him to give 90 days notice before quitting, but the city will honor an earlier date depending on when projects in Kearney are finished and Greer sells his house.

Greer's wife, Cosette Greer, said the market is fairly tight in Kearney, but she doesn't think it will take long before their house is sold. She said they have a team of realtors working with them.

Commissioner Bruce Snead said he is anxious to hear Gary Greer's creative ideas but understands it takes time for a new employee to get settled into city issues and procedures.

"I don't expect massive changes early, but I do expect positive changes, Snead said.

Commissioner Sydney Carlin said she feels strongly about Greer's economic development position and the successes he has had in Kearney.

Greer's contract includes an annual salary of $72,500 and a $300 monthly car allowance. The commission also agreed 6 percent of his salary would go toward a retirement account and give him six months severance pay.

Committee to give University Web home pages common look, links

Scott Allen Miller
contributing writer

Home pages on the University's World Wide Web server will soon have to conform to guidelines established by a new committee in order to be officially affiliated with the University.

The Webmaster Committee has been formed to create guidelines for colleges' and departments' Web pages, but committee members said they do not plan to regulate individuals' home pages at this time.

The committee, which is comprised of four University administrators and one student, had its first meeting Monday to discuss its goals and purpose.

"The purpose of this committee is to establish an official World Wide Web presence for the University," Beth Unger, vice provost for academic research and technology and chairwoman of the Webmaster Committee, said. "We hope to give a same look, same feel to all official K-State Web pages so people know they're at K-State."

The committee could face questions about commercial use of the network and copyright issues later in the year but is focusing on creating a new, official K-State home page to replace the unofficial home page developed by Computing and Network Services, Unger said.

Unger said the committee will be trying to help departments maximize the effectiveness of their home pages.

"We also will provide assistance and help to various colleges and administrators to get the same look, same feel," Unger said. "We want them to think about data structures and get them to think about how should a Web page be designed so that people can access information."

Official Web pages would carry the University's seal and an image map on the bottom of the Web page that would link it to other University network resources.

George Brandsberg, representative to the Webmaster Committee from the Computing Information Technical Advisory Committee, asked Unger what changes would be

▶ DRY SOIL CONDITIONS SLOW DOWN WHEAT SEEDING, CORN HARVEST

TOPEKA (AP) — Wheat seeding is progressing slowly because of dry soil conditions across the state, Kansas Agricultural Statistics reported Monday.

Presently, 6 percent of the state's acreage is seeded, compared to 23 percent this time last year and an average for the past five years of 16 percent. In many areas it is too dry for the wheat to germinate properly, so farmers are waiting for rain before seeding.

All corn is in the dough stage, which is comparable to last year and on par with the average. Corn denting is 88 percent complete, behind the 100 percent last year and the average of 93 percent.

The report said 32 percent of the corn is mature, compared to 78 percent last year and the average of 72 percent.

The corn harvest is progressing slowly, with only 4 percent of the acreage harvested, compared to 22 percent last year and the average of 23 percent.

Kansas Agricultural Statistics reported there is no surplus anywhere of either topsoil or subsoil moisture.

Statewide, 21 percent of the topsoil is very short of moisture, 53 percent is short and 26 percent has adequate moisture. By the same token, 12 percent of the subsoil is very short, 38 percent short and 50 percent adequate.

KAS is the state's official agriculture reporting agency.

▶ TOPEKA CITY COUNCILMAN APPOINTED TO STATE ADMINISTRATION

TOPEKA (AP) — A member of the Topeka City Council has been named director of facilities management at the state Department of Administration.

Lt. Gov. Sheila Frahm appointed Jim Reardon to the position on Monday. Reardon had been an attorney for the Kansas Association of Counties.

"Jim will be an outstanding addition to our management team," said Frahm, who also serves as secretary of administration.

"His expertise in law, real estate, budgeting and negotiations will be valuable skills for the division of facilities management," Frahm said. "His service on the Topeka City Council will be mutually beneficial to the city and the state of Kansas."

Reardon will be responsible for an $18 million budget and supervising 241 employees.

The division oversees real estate leasing, the state motor pool, maintenance of state buildings in Topeka.

▶ TICKET HOLDERS FOR OLYMPICS IN ATLANTA MIGHT BE DISAPPOINTED

ATLANTA (AP) — In the race for tickets to the 1996 Olympics, most people will have to settle for the silver or bronze medal.

Fewer than half of those who sent in mail orders for tickets to the Atlanta Games will get their first choice, organizers said Monday.

"Yes, there will be some people that are disappointed," said Scott Anderson, ticket chief for the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games. "Why is that? Because they ordered only very high-demand sports sessions with no alternatives."

Most of those who ordered tickets will get something. Organizers, who had urged people to list second and third preferences for each seat ordered, said about 87 percent of the ticket orders received so far were filled. But only about 47 percent received one or more of their first choices.

Committee officials said the hottest tickets were for the opening ceremony, gymnastics, diving and the men's basketball final, in which the Dream Team is expected to dominate once again.

But Anderson said there are still plenty of seats available for such marquee events as track and field and women's basketball.

The committee will mail packets Friday confirming the ticket orders.

Olympic tickets remain on sale via mail until Dec. 1. Telephone orders will be taken beginning in February. The Olympics open on July 19.

The cheapest tickets are for baseball and run as low as $7 per game. The most expensive seats are for the opening and closing ceremonies: $636. Basketball tickets range from $11 for an early-round game to $265 for a men's gold-medal game. Boxing begins at $27 and reaches $186 for a gold-medal bout.

About 7 million tickets were made available to the U.S. public after about 4 million were reserved for sponsors, politicians, sports officials and Olympic committees in other countries.

The organizing committee began taking orders May 1, and orders placed during the first 60 days were put into a lottery.

About 314,000 orders, with requests for 5.3 million tickets, were received during that initial period and orders were filled for 2.7 million tickets, Anderson said.

▶ MAGAZINE COMPETITION

Glamour showcases K-Stater

Camille Wood
staff reporter

Stepping out of the Little Apple and into the Big Apple, K-State student Michelle Munson traveled to New York as one of Glamour magazine's 1995 Top 10 College Competition winners.

Michelle Munson, senior in electrical engineering and physics, appeared in the October issue of Glamour magazine, with eight other women from the United States and one from Bosnia.

"Michelle was so mature and very poised. She is one of the most intelligent women I've met in a while," said Lisa Cohen, editorial coordinator for Glamour magazine. "She has achieved so much in a short time and looks towards other women as mentors."

Competitors are selected based on leadership experience, excellence in their field of study and their unique experiences and goals, Cohen said.

Munson, 22, has been involved in student government, engineering groups, has danced in the K-State dance program and has taken part in the student alumni board.

"In college, part of coming into your own person is learning how to stand on your own two feet," she said.

Munson's background includes a combination of research in electrical engineering and policy studies, which she acquired through internships and semester studies on campus.

Last summer Munson researched radiation damage in computer chips at the Sandia National Laboratory in Albuquerque, N.M.

Munson also helped develop a new silicon wafer material during an internship at Sematech.

"It has some beneficial electrical properties, such as low-power dissipation, to meet the demands for laptop computers," Munson said.

She also did a policy study on strategies for planning alternative energy that resulted in a paper, "Road Map for Energy" while at Sematech.

Munson's other research ventures have included a study on genetics and mental illness in Washington, D.C.

The American Institute of Chemical Engineers also chose her "NAFTA and the Environment" paper to be read to the U.S. Congress.

Munson, a native of Junction City, founded a Junction City project to install an Internet service provider in her hometown.

"K-State has a server, and there are some in Manhattan, but none in Junction City," Munson said. "This will be a great opportunity for economic development."

Munson is now an honors student and Barry M. Goldwater scholar. She is also a nominee for the Rhodes and Marshall Scholarships to study abroad in the United Kingdom.

In the future, Munson said she would like to pursue a political career.

"I'd like to get a Ph.D. in engineering," Munson said. "Way, way into the future, maybe when I'm 30 or 40, I'd like to run for office in Congress."

As a Glamour winner, Munson received a $1,000 scholarship prize and a four-day trip to New York.

There, she had a cut and style at Aveda Hair Salon, attended an off-Broadway show and two shows of improvising and dance, visited the Museum of Natural History and a trip to the United Nations.

Cohen said it was a great experience for the winners because some of the contestants had never been to New York before.

"They got to meet other women like themselves. They could all interact and bond," Cohen said. "They talked about common goals and experiences, from gamuts such as college life, women's issues and their own achievements."

During her visit, Munson also met with some of the former top-10 women from last year.

"I really marvel at some of the things the other girls are doing," she said. "What struck me was how confident and focused they were."

Women should always have strong self-esteem and make the most of themselves and their talents, instead of conforming to other people's ideas, standards and roles, she said.

"I've been privileged." Munson said. "One great thing about K-State, is it can reach out to so many kinds of people. There are traditional, non-traditional and run-of-the-mill Kansas high-school students here."

Student life can be difficult, even when a back bone of support exists, she said.

"There have been so many experiences at college which have been difficult, but anyone who has tried to stretch themselves has met with failure," Munson said. "I don't want to sound like my life has been pie-in-the-sky, because I've had my ups and downs, too."

Glamour's contest is open to all full-time college juniors. Applications for the 1996 Top 10 College Competition were sent out to college administrative offices Monday.

Students can pick them up in Student Affairs offices or in October's issue of Glamour, Cohen said.

Munson won a $1,000 scholarship by submitting an essay about her academic achievements in and out of the classroom. Munson has had four internships, including two in Washington D.C., Sandia Labs and Sematech, a joint venture of computer-chip manufacturers.

▶ BICYCLE REGISTRATION

Committee recommends putting off bike policy

Kimberly Hefling
staff reporter

The Parking and Campus Safety Committee decided Monday night to recommend the postponement of bicycle registration enforcement until next semester to the Parking Council Thursday.

"They've dropped the ball," Russell Fortmeyer, chairman of the committee, said, "and they need to give us more time."

But Student Governing Association does not have the final say in the matter.

"The problem is that Parking Council outvotes us," Fortmeyer said.

"The University failed to publicize the program," he said. "Why should they penalize the students?"

Beginning Nov. 1, bicycles on campus without a registration decal will be given a $5 ticket and possibly chainlocked.

"It would make much more sense for them to wait to begin enforcing this the second or third week in the second semester after students have had the opportunity to register during fee payment," Michelle Lemons, committee member, said.

Another issue discussed was the difficulty in finding bicycle serial numbers so bicycle registration is possible with all bicycles.

Lemons said students may have a serial placed on a bicycle at the Riley County Police Department.

"But has anyone told us that?" Jennifer Searfoss, Senate intern, said. "I hope if we do have the bike fair, that it is possible to get bikes engraved there."

Speaker foresees problems for Democrats in '96 elections

J. Scot
staff reporter

Sen. Jerry Karr, D-Emporia, outlined the challenges facing the Democratic Party in 1996 both nationally and in Kansas at K-State Monday night.

"In the '90s, there's been an unsettling which has occurred. More people are voting for independent candidates," Karr said.

Karr graduated in 1959 from K-State with a bachelor's degree in agricultural economics. He was elected to the Kansas Legislature in 1980. He is serving as the Senate Minority Leader, a position he has had since 1991.

Karr stated five factors the Democrats will be facing in the 1996 election.

"Bob Dole is definitely the big factor," he said.

Others factors he cited were the Independent vote, the evangelical question, how the elements from the past two elections will play out in '96 and Colin Powell as a third party.

Karr said students will have lots of opportunities with regards to the '96 election.

"Some of those opportunities are on the local level, yet to get the opportunity students must get involved with Young Democrats to start networking and participate in local campaigns," Karr said.

Jason Cole, president of Young Democrats, said Karr is right on target; Democrats are still licking their wounds.

"There were lots of things that were left uncertain in '94, and Democrats are trying to find the cause," he said.

Karr said he agreed Kansas Democrats went through a difficult loss in '94, but the party is looking forward to making a comeback in '96.

"We're going to go back to the roots of the party, look for quality candidates and make sure those candidates are people the public are proud of," he said.

Liz Ring, member of Young Democrats, said the party should start at the grass-roots level to get the Democratic Party united.

"For me, I see the challenge for myself and that is to make this a strong club before elections," she said.

Cole said American politics is at a critical moment. There are people and issues out there that might bring system-wide changes, he said.

Pulling false fire alarms endangers entire city

Now, how old do you have to be to start understanding that it's a hazard to other students and faculty when the fire department is tied up with false calls?

K-State has a safety problem.

It's not something we can't help. It's not something we don't have money for. It's not even something we need more volunteers for.

In fact, this safety problem is pretty stupid.

The problem in question is the increasing number of maliciously pulled fire alarms this semester.

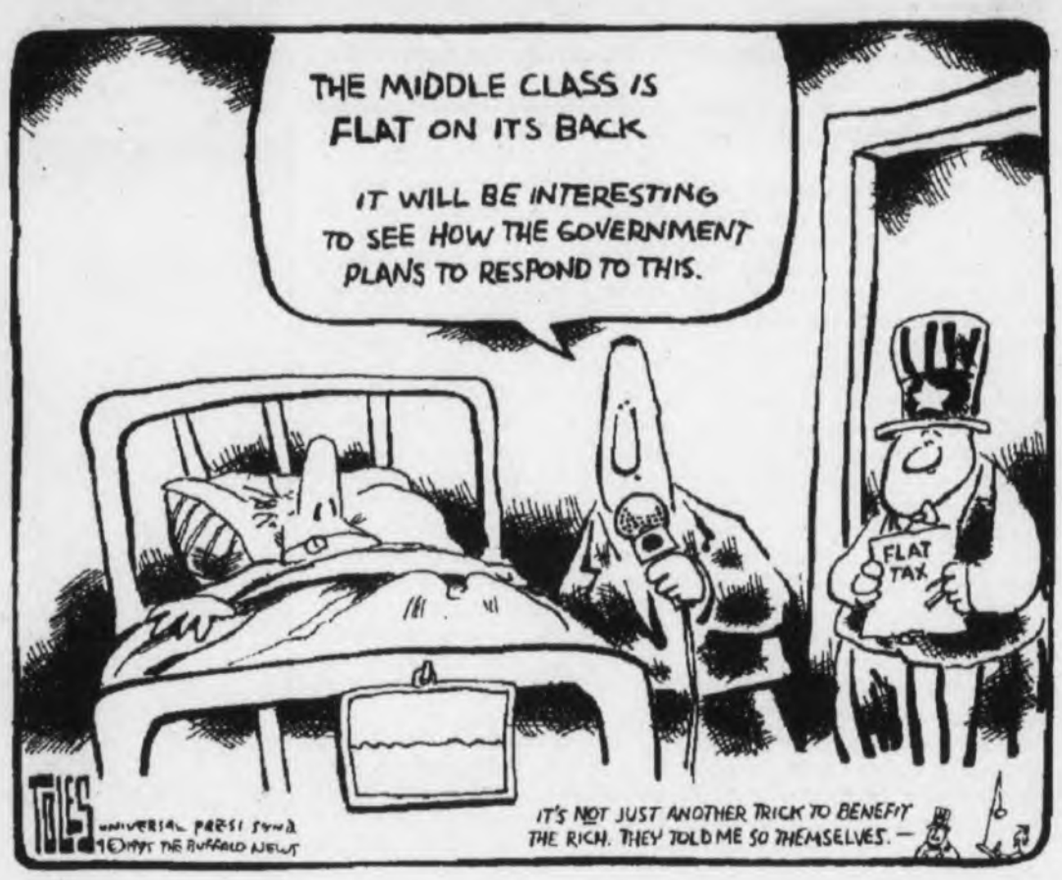
Yesterday alone, the Manhattan Fire Department responded to three pulled fire alarms. Two were on campus — one at McCain Auditorium, the other at Haymaker Hall.

Haymaker Hall is particularly infamous for this idiocy. It had two maliciously pulled alarms on Sept. 9 and 10.

The Haymaker Hall Governing Board issued a formal written statement to discourage the pranks, evidently to no avail.

It's time to knock it off.

We're all adults here; everybody knows it costs the fire department time and money to respond to false alarms.



Now, how old do you have to be to start understanding that it's a hazard to other students and faculty when the fire department is tied up with false calls?

Eventually, a false alarm and a real one will sound at the same time. The fire department then has to divide up its resources to respond to what actually could be an emergency.

It's time to grow up or get out. If you know who sounded the alarms at 1:41 a.m. Saturday at McCain or at 2:23 a.m. Saturday at Haymaker, please call the police and notify them. Hopefully, the police can end the safety problem for good.

Perhaps they can start with sending some K-Staters back to junior high.

BILL KRAAI

Long-term results
hampered by proposed policies

The other day I was talking to my good friend, Rushie. Rushie and I tend to disagree with each other on almost everything, but I'm the type of guy who likes to hear all the viewpoints.

COLUMN

LACH FRANQUEMONT

Rushie and I were talking about the future of education, particularly education at the university level. Rushie is in the know on a number of issues because so many people see his opinion as being of value. Unfortunately this is because Rushie is highly opinionated and vocal about it, not because he is right.

"So," Rushie began, "The predicament is this. We will soon have quite a bit less in both state and federal funding. Couple this with a recent faculty memo that projected a 13-percent increase in enrollment during the next 10 years, and the University is in quite a bind."

"It would seem so," I said.

"This means we will have to come up with creative solutions to deal with these problems," Rushie said. "One high-placed person has already said that throwing money at enhancing undergraduate education is out of the question. Therefore, we have to come up with ways of better deploying our faculty."

"I can see that." I said.

By now Rushie was really going. "I would therefore like to submit to you several of my own thoughts which I hope will not be liable to the least objection. Some moderate proposals, if you will, whose theses number far fewer than 95.

"First, let's have the professors tighten up the grading. Give C's for average work. This will flunk out many of the people who are now a burden on the university and keep class size constant. As the bottom portion of students continues to be siphoned off, we can turn the University into more of what it was always meant to be — a privilege of the elite.

"Second, let's take advantage of all the new technology out there. Many classes are so standard that all the students need is a few tapes and some study sheets. There is no need to have actual professors teaching these classes. If the students have questions give them an e-mail address to send queries to.

"Third, lets cut out all writing assignments in the lower-level and general-education courses. Grading these papers is a strain on professors who can use their time more wisely. In addition, these assignments are of little use anyway. You will notice that this proposal is being implemented in many departments already.

"You can see that all three of these proposals allow professors to use their time better and make possible a fourth proposal.

"Let's get rid of most of the professors. With an elite, multimedia-based university with little emphasis on writing, we won't need that many to teach.

"Of course we can keep all those in research getting government grants, but we need to start running this thing like any other corporation. The bottom line should be our primary concern.

"These reasonable proposals I do humbly submit and feel that no rational man could rationally argue against." Rushie said.

Well, let me tell you, Rushie's arguments sure sounded persuasive, but I guess I'm not a rational man.

Something tells me there are several points being missed here. For one, I think that trying to kick a lot more students out is wrong.

Many students come here with widely divergent experiences in high school, and some may take a semester or two to adjust.

Do we really want to send these students back out as failures before they mature?

I don't know about this whole high-tech bit, either.

Do we really want our university experiences to be more like a series of correspondence courses?

Decreasing the amount of writing cheapens our educational experience, too. I would argue that more writing needs to be done.

The trouble is that education is being treated like an industry, with things that don't produce immediate results falling by the wayside. This bottom-line method is very short-sighted.

But what do I know? I'm just a columnist, and Rushie has the ears of the big boys.

▶ LACK OF RECOGNITION

Editor,

I am writing you as a concerned student who is a regular reader of your newspaper.

On Sept. 14, an intramural swim meet took place. Four of my fellow brothers in Delta Upsilon, were not given proper acknowledgement for what they did.

Scott Marr, Stacy Moore, Cannon Clifton and Ted Rose are four swimmers who made up a 200-meter freestyle relay team.

On this night, they broke the record in this race that has stood for 15 years.

I am confused why this did not appear in the paper because it is an accomplishment that has taken so long to achieve.

Please look into this, and hopefully I will see something about this in an upcoming issue. Thank you for your efforts.

▶ LACK OF RECOGNITION 2

Editor,

I am writing to you concerning the omission of Delta Upsilon fraternity swim team on the sports page of the Sept. 15 edition.

The Delta Upsilon team won the all-fraternity swim meet for the second consecutive year, and the 200-freestyle relay team of Ted Rose, Scott Marr, Stacy Moore and Cannon Clifton broke the 15-year-old record.

I realize this may not be as fascinating as a half-page story about the Navajo Community College cross-country team (which I am sure gave many readers an adrenaline rush as they devoured this incredible saga), but my fraternity brothers and I feel it has some merit in your pages.

Perhaps you could print this letter and give them some shred of recognition for all of their hard work and success. Thank you.

▶ LACK OF RECOGNITION 3

Editor,

I am most disappointed by your total lack of coverage and reporting of the intramural swimming competition which took place Sept. 14.

Instead, you devoted an enormous portion of your sports section to a feature story about the Navajo Community College cross-country team.

While mildly interesting, this piece does not reserve much, if any, significance or curiosity in the minds of K-State students.

Conversely, an annual sporting event which features laudable performances by K-State students, including the shattering of a 15-year-old record, deserves at least a few drops of precious ink.

Please give credit where it is due, especially when it involves students of this University.

▶ LACK OF RECOGNITION 4

Editor,

This is a letter regarding a story that was not included in the Sept. 15 edition of the Collegian.

I am a member of the Delta Upsilon fraternity, this year's intramural swimming champions.

Because I know just how hard my fellow members of DU worked to reach their goal of becoming champions, I am upset their accomplishment has not been publicized in your paper.

It should be known that the members of the 200-meter relay broke an intramural record that has stood for 15 years.

Scott Leahy
freshman in engineering

▶ LACK OF RECOGNITION 5

Editor,

On Sept. 14, 1995, swimming history was made.

For the first time in 15 years, a talented group of swimmers from Delta Upsilon fraternity shattered the K-State record for the 200-meter freestyle relay.

Before a crowd comprised of independent people, fraternities, sororities and interested spectators at the Natatorium, swimmers Stacy Moore, Scott Marr, Ted Rose and Cannon Clifton broke the record on the final event of the evening and also set a swim team record for most points scored in a single night (104).

And not a word was said about it in the Collegian the following day.

It has been repeated situations such as the one noted above that has made my life as a fraternity member frustrating over the past few years.

When you witness firsthand an event that involves the whole University and has as significant an ending as this competition had, something should be written.

Instead, the newsworthy piece was snubbed by a half-page story on Navajo Community College (hot off the Associated Press wire, no less).

Please don't tell me a story concerning Shiprock, New Mexico, was of more importance to the university than an interesting tidbit on how Delta Upsilon has won the swimming competition for two consecutive years.

It is an insult.

On page 10 of the Sept. 15 issue of the Collegian, there is an article concerning a fraternity at the University of Kansas.

This is just another example of how all fraternities are looked upon in a negative view.

Forget for a minute that K-State was recognized as having the strongest fraternity system in the nation at an annual national convention.

I flipped back to the sports page, stared blankly at the page while scratching my head. I thought about my brothers who, for two years, worked their butts off and made swimming history on Sept. 14 and wondered, who are the real victims?

Be your own boss

With a gimmick and some good business sense, you can open a business and work for yourself

Echoing the claims of late-night infomercials, students prove putting a little elbow grease into a fresh idea is the easiest way to start a business.

Thad Williams, former K-State senior in graphic design, said he never saw himself as a businessman.

But in January, he moved from assistant manager to owner and sole employee of Wyrd Raven, formerly called Master Gamer, a comic book, game and hobby store on Moro in Aggieville.

"I learned very quickly that it's not that difficult to start your own business. Basically, you go to Topeka and get a sales tax number and a federal employee identification number. It takes about an hour and then the rest comes in the mail about three weeks later," Williams said.

When Royal Dowdy, the previous owner of the store, moved to Missouri, Williams said he felt confident he was qualified to take over the comic book store.

"It's not that hard. Basically, you've got to have a storefront and inventory, and that's about it," Williams said.

Williams, who has been gaming for about 16 years, said he believes knowing what customers want and what they will buy is one of the most-challenging parts of owning his own business.

> "Being your own boss, that's the best part. My hours are awful, but I set them. I guess if I didn't want to come in one day, I could just not open, but that's taking away sales and profit. Maybe it's more the thought of the freedom that's appealing, rather than the actual freedom."
> THAD WILLIAMS
> OWNER OF WYRD RAVEN

"The hardest thing about running this business is that nothing is returnable. When I buy a comic book or a game, they're mine. If those don't sell, I'm stuck with them. So far I've made some really good investments, but then again, I'm very frugal — a miser, really," Williams said.

Williams put his education at K-State on hold for a while in order to devote about 70 hours each week to Wyrd Raven.

"Actually, I have zero employees right now, which is a business decision so that I can pay off more of the business," Williams said.

"It helps to know what people like, which means I play the games and keep in touch with customers, talking to them and asking what they do and don't like and also following which stories sell."

As a small-business owner, Williams said some of the perks are unbeatable.

"I haven't rewarded myself yet because I'm rewarding myself by buying more of the business," Williams said. "Being your own boss, that's the best part. My hours are awful, but I set them. I guess if I didn't want to come in one day, I could just not open, but that's taking away sales and profit. Maybe it's more the thought of the freedom that's appealing, rather than the actual freedom."

Running a business with more than 300 comic book titles and walls stacked with new and used games and hobby supplies is not as simple as it looks, Williams said.

"There was another comic book store that shut down just last week," Williams said. "We fill a niche here and if you've got a good idea and think you can market it, I'd say to go for it, especially if the initial investment is so low. Good deals are waiting out there, you've just got to find them."

Some new small business owners need help beginning because they aren't sure of some of the legal specifics.

The volunteer group SCORE, a service corps of retired executives, works with the Small Business Administration teaching start-up and survival workshops for small business owners.

Bill Edwards, SCORE representative for the Small Business Administration in Wichita, said he believes students need the proper tools so they can understand how to make their business competitive and successful.

"We try to cover the things people really need to know," Edwards said.

Once a student has developed a business plan and have determined the necessary cash flow, SCORE teaches about bank relations, defining the legal organization of the business, and marketing and advertisement.

SCORE also teaches about applicable tax codes, maintaining business records, insurance regulations and OSHA requirements.

"Mostly we think of small business as any organization having less than 25 employees, which would naturally include most student efforts," Edwards said. "However, the U.S. government, in all their wisdom, continues to try and define these rules and guidelines so when people are starting out, it's always best to ask about the specifics."

Shari Thomas, Manhattan resident, teaches a course through UFM about how to start a home-based business.

Thomas said she talks to her students about start-up costs, finding a location and discovering the type of business that will best fit their needs.

"While you're young and have no family to support and responsibilities, you have this great opportunity to pursue your ideas," Thomas said. "If a person isn't working toward their own ideas, they are working and putting their energy behind someone else's ideas."

Thomas said she has owned several small businesses. She opened a small health food store at 18 years old. Some of the businesses she has owned were in the jewelry and antique businesses for the past 26 years.

"If you love what you are doing, then you are successful. That's the biggest asset of being self-employed — that you are doing what you love," Thomas said.

"It's important to develop a business plan and be able to finance the business and get organized. You should also learn marketing tips to get your ideas out there," she said.

Thomas said she believes people starting a new business need coaches to keep them motivated and to help them learn how to run the business.

"When you're starting out, the most important thing is not to quit. Most people, in the beginning, are putting a lot of time into work without much profit," she said.

"Time is the biggest investment you can make when you're starting out," Thomas said.

She said the problem with many new small business owners is that they give up too early.

"I've found that most people can do the mechanics of starting up a business, they just quit too early," Thomas said.

"It's like a person is driving along in their own car and when a bug hits the windshield, they just pull over and stop the car," Thomas said.

K-State sports opportunities abound this weekend

COLUMN

SHANE McCORMICK

I know everyone is ready to tailgate and go wild when our K-State Wildcats play collegiate powerhouse Akron Saturday night.

All of us have had to wait fór more than a week, listening to critics question our Cat team after a 23-21 defeat over Cincinnati.

But if you can't wait until Saturday night to get a dose of K-State athletics, then I've got the answer for you.

This coming weekend will provide Cat fans with a plethora of sporting activities.

First, you can start your day with some tennis action at 8:30 a.m. The K-State women's tennis team will be host to the Travelers Express Invitational. There will be three other teams competing against the Cats at L.P. Washburn Tennis Complex — Purdue, Oklahoma State and Oral Roberts.

Purdue returns two women who were qualifiers on the clay court in the NCAA Midwest Region last year. Oklahoma State, which finished third in the Big 8 last season, will be returning their top singles player Kim Hazzard. Oral Roberts will be taking the place of the Kansas Jayhawks, who withdrew from the tournament.

On the other side of the net, the Cats return their top singles player as well, with Karina Kuregian. Kuregian compiled a 28-7, 8-1 conference record last year, earning Kuregian all-Big 8 honors. But the Wildcat squad will be without the services of Martine Shrubsole and Brook Brundige, who graduated last year. The Cats will be bringing four new members onto the court this season, and are anxious for their first competition of the season.

If tennis isn't your cup of tea, then we've got some cross country for you. The women's team will start around 9:30 a.m. and the men's team will start at about 10 to 10:30 a.m. Teams competing against the Cats include Butler Community College, Fort Hays State, Cloud County Community College, and Kansas.

Returning at No. 1 for the women is Charity Swartz. Swartz missed out on being an all-American by three seconds last year. Behind her, is returning senior Irma Betancourt. Betancourt may lead the Cats after placing No. 4 last week at the Jayhawk Invitational in Lawrence.

Returning to the men's squad this year are last year's No. 1 runner Ryan Clive-Smith. Running at the No. 2 spot this year is junior John Thorpe, a transfer from County Community College. Thorpe, having won last week's Jayhawk Invitational, may take the No. 1 spot.

And if tennis and cross country aren't enough for you, then we have some volleyball action. Saturday, the K-State volleyball team will be hosts at the KSU Invitational. The women's squad will be playing Northeastern Illinois at noon and then Rice at 7 p.m.

Last season the Cats finished the season at a 14-13 overall record, and 3-9 in the Big 8. The two years before last year, the Cats lost 47 games. Last year's rookie coach, Jim Moore, has brought a winning attitude to this team. The Cats have already posted big victories this year over two powerful Big 10 teams, in Wisconsin and Purdue universities.

The Cats return all but one starter from last year's squad. The Cats will be lead defensively by senior Jill Dugan. Last season, Dugan led the Big 8 with 1.37 blocks per game. Also leading the Cats will be sophomore Devon Ryning and junior Yolanda Young. Ryning had 778 assists last year as the Cats' setter. Young earned a second-team Big 8 selection a year ago.

So Cat fans, if you're hungry for some K-State athletics, then this is the weekend for you. And I haven't even told you the best part about this weekend's activities. You can get the volleyball action, the cross-country, and the tennis all for a low price of — nothing. That's right folks, its absolutely free. So, go on out and support your Cats, you will feel a whole lot better after you do.

Wanted: redemption for kick

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Besides the Oakland Raiders, there might have been only one other person in Arrowhead Stadium hoping cornerback James Hasty would step out of bounds.

Lin Elliott was aching to redeem himself in the eyes of coaches, teammates and roughly 78,000 Kansas City Chiefs fans — he had missed a game-winning, short-yardage field goal with 1:42 left in regulation.

"All I wanted was to get the ball back," said Elliott.

"Let Hasty run out of bounds on the one. Give me a chance to kick it."

Hasty did not oblige, returning the interception of Jeff Hostetler's pass 64 yards to give Kansas City a 23-17 overtime victory Sunday, keeping the Chiefs unbeaten in three games — and pulling Elliott out of the dog house.

Winning the game takes most of the heat off a kicker who failed at a critical time.

Osborne apologizes for score

■ Arizona State coach accuses Osborne of poll watching

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — The postgame meeting at midfield between Nebraska coach Tom Osborne and Arizona State coach Bruce Snyder was brief and it did not include a handshake.

Snyder was unhappy following Saturday's 77-28 rout of his team by the No. 2 Cornhuskers. The final margin came with less than a minute to play on a 39-yard pass from Matt Turman to Lance Brown on a third down and 13.

The score came on the same day top-ranked Florida State beat North Carolina State 77-17, No. 3 Texas A&M routed Tulsa 52-9 and No. 7 Penn State beat Temple 66-14.

> "The last touchdown was bad. It was my mistake. I apologized to Bruce, and it was something that never should have happened. I feel bad and I should have just run a draw play."

Snyder hinted Nebraska might be poll watching.

"I don't know what's going on over on their sideline — and within their program — but if they felt that they've got to run it up to match what Penn State did today or what Florida State did today or what those other schools did today, I'm saddened for college football ... if that's the reason," he said.

Osborne said he apologizes for the final score and the Turman-Brown pass.

"The last touchdown was bad," he said. "It was my mistake. I apologized to Bruce, and it was something that never should have happened. I feel bad and I should've just run a draw play."

Cowboys' Nike, Pepsi deals bring NFL suit

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The NFL escalated its war with Jerry Jones and the Dallas Cowboys on Monday, suing the team for more than $300 million because of agreements with Nike and Pepsi the league described as ambush marketing deals.

The suit was filed in federal court in New York following a unanimous vote of the five club executives who make up the executive committee of NFL Properties, the league's marketing arm.

The NFL wants the court to order Jones and the Cowboys to stop violating their agreements with NFL Properties regarding club marks and logos, and prevent them from signing additional deals that undermine existing NFL sponsorship or licensing contracts.

"The Cowboys have made it clear through their recent actions and statements that they want to change the basic manner in which NFL Properties does business," said Roger Headrick, executive committee chairman of NFL Properties.

Cowboys' spokesman Rich Dalrymple said Jones was en route to Atlanta for an NFL owners meeting.

He also said while the team is aware of the suit, it would not immediately comment.

This season, the Cowboys have clashed with the league by selling Pepsi rather than the league-sanctioned Coca-Cola at Texas Stadium. In signing with Nike, the team ignored Players Inc., the licensing arm of the NFL Players Association.

Estimates have put the value of each deal around $2.5 million a year, Pepsi for 10 years and Nike for seven years.

Both cases are aimed at the league's revenue sharing policy, in which revenue from television, properties and even gate receipts are shared.

NFL officials and owners have long said they have avoided the troubles besetting other sports by equalizing revenues between small and large markets — New York and Chicago, for example, get the same from television as Green Bay.

This suit, however, deals only with properties — Jones, who said the Cowboys' gear amounted for 24 percent of revenue, has suggested teams market their apparel individually.

But the suit takes aim at that.

"The effect of the recent ambush marketing deals signed by Jones has been to undermine existing NFL Properties' sponsorships and contracts that were made on behalf of all 30 clubs and to inhibit NFL Properties' future arrangements," Headrick said.

"Our sponsors and licensees keep asking us whether we are representing all 30 NFL clubs, or just 29 in competition with the Cowboys. We asked the court to make it clear that the Cowboys should not take any further action that damages the relationship between NFL Properties and its current and future licensees and sponsors."

The executive committee of NFL Properties is made of Headrick (Vikings), Steve Gutman (Jets), Dan Rooney (Steelers), Taylor Smith (Falcons) and Wayne Weaver (Jaguars).

Jones announced and promoted the deal with Nike during the team's opener Sept. 4 against the New York Giants.

"It was a meaningful thing to our fans and NFL fans join with Nike," Jones said that night. "I thought it very appropriate to announce it around our opening game. Anyone criticizing is trying to deflect positives of it."

Jones' NFL colleagues assailed him immediately.

"He enjoys the maverick image," said Carmen Policy, president of the San Francisco 49ers.

"But the man's gone too far, he's out of control. There is money and there is class and the two aren't synonymous."

Policy's interest in the Nike deal was significant because it may have helped Jones sign Deion Sanders, a major Nike client. The Cowboys and 49ers battled for Sanders, the baseball player-cornerback who helped San Francisco win the Super Bowl last season.

During the Monday night game after Jones announced the Nike deal, the Dallas coaches and staff members wore no logos on their plain white shirts, not even anything that said "Cowboys."

Giants owner Wellington Mara, the league's senior owner, has said Dallas, after two straight Super Bowl victories, had 24 percent of the properties' revenue last year. But he also said that five years ago, after a 1-15 season, it was 3 percent.

"Jerry doesn't have the concept of what it means to be a team and what it means to work in concert with your associates," Mara said recently.

"I see where he said that he thinks we should continue revenue sharing in television and gate receipts. To me that translates that he would like to share in other people's revenues without them sharing his."

Big Eight coaches reflect on weekend

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — As bad as Howard Schnellenberger said his offense played in a 24-10 victory over Southern Methodist, does it seem odd to the Oklahoma coach that his team is ranked No. 10 in The Associated Press poll this week?

"No, not at all," Schnellenberger said Monday. "Oklahoma certainly deserves the right to be considered high based on what they've done over the past 50 years."

But the past week, Schnellenberger's offense failed to penetrate the end zone until the second half against a supposedly weak Mustang squad. The Sooners aren't in for much sympathy from their coach.

"It's a team problem when you have this kind of disjointed offense that hurts itself more than it helps itself," Schnellenberger said. "You have to lay blame across the board. You have 11 offensive penalties, that's a great concern. And 16 broken assignments that disallowed us to continue to drive. Five dropped balls.

"It wasn't a very stellar performance. The best thing about all that is it's all correctable. We're going to start that today."

> "It wasn't a very stellar performance. The best thing about all that is it's all correctable."
> HOWARD SCHNELLENBERGER
> OKLAHOMA FOOTBALL COACH

As it turned out, Oklahoma was one of the few highly ranked teams last weekend that didn't blow the opposition off the field. One-sided batterings included No. 1 Florida State 77, North Carolina State 17; No. 2 Nebraska 77, Arizona State 28; No. 4 Florida 62, Tennessee 37. and No. 7 Colorado 66, Northeast Louisiana 14.

Are teams running up scores just to impress poll voters?

"There are probably some cases where people are trying to pile up some points to impress voters and get back into the good graces with those who are making the decisions as to who's in the top three or four in the nation," Colorado Coach Rick Neuheisel said.

There are also occasions, Neuheisel added, when offenses simply overwhelm defenders stretched thin by injuries and the NCAA limit of 85 scholarships.

"While I think you have to be careful not to run it up, it's important that you send a message to your players that when we get a chance, you're going to get a chance to get in there and do exactly what you're practicing," Neuheisel said.

He said he believes limiting scholarships has had more effect than many realize.

"It means everybody in the country has freshmen in their depth chart who have never played," he said. "You get two or three injuries, and you get freshmen playing who have been going to class for only about two weeks. The numbers have changed the game."

Thanks in part to Oklahoma and Colorado, the Big 8 has some of the nation's top-rated teams and players this week. It has three of the nation's top-10 teams for the first time in six years. Nebraska is No. 2 in this week's Associated Press poll, Colorado No. 7 and Oklahoma No. 10. In addition, Kansas State is No. 19.

The last time the Big 8 had three of the top 10 was Sept. 11, 1989, when Nebraska was No. 4, Oklahoma No. 6, and Colorado No. 8.

The Big 8 also boasts the No. 1 player in four of the NCAA's main categories.

Iowa State's Troy Davis leads the nation in rushing with 203.33 yards per game. Colorado's Koy Detmer leads in pass efficiency with 205.2 rating points. Oklahoma's Jeremy Alexander, who's 4-for-4, is rated the nation's top field goal kicker. And University of Kansas punter Darrin Simmons, with an average of 49.56 yards, is tops in his speciality.

Manhattan bands try to overcome musical stereotypes

Page Getz
contributing writer

Editor's note: This is the second story in a five-part series profiling the bands competing in the Opus 9 Band Competition.

Two contenders in the Opus 9 Band Competition are Manhattan bands struggling to be absorbed into the stream of local talent, despite being hindered by reputations based on their backgrounds.

Smudge, a collaboration of Wichita and Manhattan musicians, was originally introduced into live music as a Christian band.

Previously known as Teflon Brain, band members said they have felt both the stigma of the Christian society and the reproach of fellow musicians.

"We're considered too Christian to be an alternative band, and too alternative to be a Christian band," said Hollis Berry, guitarist, vocalist and freshman in music composition. "We're not into boldly claiming we are Christians," he said.

"We're not going to put Christ on the cover of our tapes. God shouldn't be out selling our tapes for us."

Smudge said it hopes to use Opus as an opportunity to gain acceptance from other groups and possibly a chance to open for other bands.

"We've really got stuck doing the Christian coffee house thing," Berry said. "Our relationships with God are important and the lyrics may reflect that, but the music is all encompassing."

One of the band's songs, "Aliens," is just one of many commentaries lacking a religious angle. It addresses the volunteer mental slavery of television consumption.

Like Smudge, Coolerspoon has found a challenge in attempting to dodge labels and stereotypes. Coolerspoon has been often identified as a "frat band."

"We're greek, but when we're on stage, we're just a band," said Travis Worden, guitarist and sophomore in business. "A majority of the crowd is greek, but we hope people don't come just because we are."

"We don't want to rest on the reputation of the house," he said.

While members of Coolerspoon are more dedicated to the band than they had been last year, school remains the priority.

"We're just trying to ease into it," said drummer Kris Seymour, sophomore undecided. "We are pretty serious, but we don't want to rush into it."

Last year the band played at Bombers, Lucky BrewGrille, Snookie's Bar and Champions Pub & Grill. They said they are disappointed in the lack of student support of the local music scene.

"We went to see Pamper the Madman, Urge, and Outhouse recently, and there were only about 10 to 20 people there," Seymour said. "It's a shame."

Jenny Smith, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management, was at Champions Pub & Grill, watching Coolerspoon. She was impressed.

"My boyfriend has their demo and I really like them," she said. "I listen to it all the time, and I don't even like this kind of music."

Opus 9 will begin at 5:30 p.m. Friday, in the Free Speech Zone north of the K-State Student Union.

Holding up a photo replica of an ancient Mongol warrior, K-State President Jon Wefald lectures to history students on Genghis Kahn and the Mongolian Horde Monday morning in Durland Hall. Wefald, who received a doctorate in American history from the University of Michigan, cited many reasons why Kahn should be rated as the world leading conqueror.

Professor Wefald?

K-State president takes time out to guest lecture history class

Russell Fortmeyer
contributing writer

President Jon Wefald gave a lecture about world domination, pillaging cities and leadership through terror to a student audience Monday.

No, it wasn't the State of the University Address, but instead a history lesson.

Wefald, who received his doctorate in American history from the University of Michigan, was filling in for Professor John C.K. Daly's Russian history class.

The lecture, titled "Genghis Khan and the Mongolian Horde," encompassed the rise and fall of Khan's massive, terrifying army and its subsequent domination of Asia and Eastern Europe in the 12th and 13th centuries.

This isn't the first time an administrator has stepped into the classroom. Wefald said he taught an American history class in fall 1991.

Daly said Wefald has done a lot of study on that period, so he thought he would let his students see an administrative scholar in action.

The class was relocated to Durland Hall for the occasion, but even a large classroom couldn't handle the over-capacity crowd eager to hear the lecture.

Wefald's lecture of Mongolian rule was dotted with accounts of mass slaughterings of women and children, comparisons to other great conquerors and connections to present history.

Khan was and is the greatest military conqueror to ever live, when one considers the barbaric conditions through which he led his army to success after success in the middle ages, Wefald said.

Wefald said many of Russia's problems today are to be blamed on the Mongolian rule that excluded Russia from experiencing the Western Renaissance and the Enlightenment.

Speaker emphasizes need for innovative farming solutions

Joni Pruitt
staff reporter

The increasing need for a flexible farm bill that addresses the changing needs of rural America was discussed by a former U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Monday at the K-State Student Union Forum Hall.

"I get tired of hearing policy analysts looking for the perfect farm bill," said Bob Bergland, Secretary of Agriculture during the Carter Administration.

"It's nonsense," he said.

Bergland was the first of four speakers in the "Family Farming In the 21st Century" Conference that was co-sponsored by the Lou Douglas Lecture Series and the Kansas Farmers Union.

"I'm in favor of a farm bill, but the problem with any of the plans I've seen so far is that they all assume perfect crops and weather. I've farmed for years and have only seen two perfect crops," Bergland said.

"Congress will have to be more creative to deal with the changing needs of farming," he said.

Since World War II, farming has undergone massive changes.

In 1945, there were more than 6 million subsistent farms in the United States.

In contrast, there are only 2 million farms today, and the concept of subsistent farming has virtually vanished, he said.

Nearly 80 percent of all the food sold in the United States is produced by fewer than 200,000 farmers.

The remaining 1.5 million farmers work on a much smaller scale, he said.

"Most farmers live in rural areas because they find it delightful, but they have another job," he said. "To them, farming is just a hobby."

To deal with the changing demographics of the farming community, the new farm bill must meet three criteria, he said.

First, the farm bill must allow public policy to be flexible enough so people can plant specialized crops.

Then the "once a wheat farmer, always a wheat farmer" stereotype is false, he said.

"We must recognize new ways of filling market demands," Bergland said.

"Niche farming should be encouraged," he said.

The bill must also pay attention to the risks of unstable international markets.

"Grain growers are terribly worried about these foreign relations because they're terribly volatile. There must be some protection for grain growers," Bergland said.

The United States exports more than half of its grain to other countries.

Without this trade, a surplus would result, and the price of grain would drop.

"Farmers have no control over many of the factors that cause the price of grain to drop," he said.

Finally, the new farm bill must pay attention to the budget, he said.

In the 1980s, President Ronald Reagan plugged $24 billion into farm subsidies, which developed a high dependency on treasury payments.

Since the money was not budgeted, it added to the national debt, Bergland said.

"We're in a very tight budget crunch," he said.

"There's no way in the world we can reduce the national debt without cutting the deficit. I think we can cut it without undermining the integrity of the farm program," Bergland said.

Bergland said he is very optimistic about the future of farming, and the farm bill will play a crucial part, but improvements must start at home.

"These improvements start at home or they don't start at all," he said.

"There's not a single thing the federal government can do without local participation," Bergland said.

The best way to develop the economies of rural America is to expand the industries that already exist, not seek to attract new industries, Bergland said.

"I'm against getting into bidding wars with other communities to attract industries," he said. "I've seen communities hung out to dry by such tactics. You must work with what you have."

One thing Kansas does have is agriculture, he said.

"You must consider agriculture as an employment industry and figure out how to use it to invent more jobs," he said.

Many people in the audience expressed concern about Bergland's comment that future farmers will hold two or three other jobs in addition to farming.

"I would say his idea of the future of farming is short sighted," Dan Morgan, senior in agronomy, said.

"To suggest that a farmer must hold down another job and farm is not the way it will be," he said.

"To survive without farm programs, he'll have to farm on an economy of scale that's roughly twice as big as his father's was," Morgan said.

Bergland said his statement was misinterpreted. The farmers will run other business while they're farming because they enjoy it, Bergland said.

Justin Edwards, junior in agribusiness, said he didn't think the audience was following what Bergland said.

"I really do believe that what he's saying is true. The average farmer is going to have to hold down another job."

Ag secretary stresses importance of farming co-ops

Tonya Bobbitt
staff reporter

America's return to economic prosperity must begin with farmers, the North Dakota secretary of agriculture said.

Sarah Vogel, North Dakota Secretary of Agriculture, spoke about the 1995 Farm Bill and grassroots movement for agriculture during the Lou Douglas Lecture series Monday.

"First, we need to believe that we help influence our futures," Vogel said. "Then we must demand that something positive will happen with the Farm Bill because we need to develop grass roots initiatives."

The growth of farmers cooperatives in North Dakota has been beneficial to the state's agriculture, she said.

"Cooperatives are good because many of them help farmers with getting electrical power, farming necessities and marketing products," Vogel said.

Many different cooperatives exist in North Dakota, but co-ops will not work unless farmers are involved, Vogel said.

Co-ops are important because farmers deserve a bigger share of the profits, she said.

"Farmers should get more of their fair share. Why should someone else reap their harvest?" Vogel said.

More than 47,000 co-ops exist in the United States. Many farmers and ranchers are waking up and discovering that if they want to be successful then they must work together and co-ops are a good place to start, she said.

"I believe that North Dakota is a leader in co-ops because a lot of ranchers and farmers are pulling together to help each other," Vogel said.

Kansas is also very agricultural and has many co-ops, which will help people start new co-ops, she said.

"Co-ops are an ongoing story," Vogel said. "I hope to see many more chapters in this book," Vogel said.

Vogel's speech was informative about North Dakota's co-ops, said William Cox, sophomore in construction science and management.

"I thought the beginning was a little rough because the jokes were personal and directed at certain people," Cox said. "Overall, the speech was very informative about how North Dakota is developing their farming economics through co-op."

Jenny Mavrovich, senior in dance, said she attended the lecture because she wanted a better understanding of farming.

"I was interested in hearing about family farming because my boyfriend is a farmer," Mavrovich said. "I thought this would be a good way for me to understand farming better and to be able to relate to my boyfriend's problem."

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Potential parking projects

These are potential projects for the Parking and Campus Safety Committee:

1. Canned safety seminars would be prepared so that any committee members could deliver it in a moment's notice concerning campus safety and street-wise precautions. The seminar would focus on safety for women, living groups and international students — the prime targets.

2. Alternative transportation awareness would include a promotional campaign for car-pooling, walking and bicycling. This program would include a car-pool sign-up to match potential ride-sharers and visits to living groups to get ideas and feelings.

3. A SafeHouse Program would be somewhat of a continuation of the escort program off campus. Greek houses would be used to provide a safe shelter for anyone who is walking home and feels in danger. Signs would be hung on the window of houses involved with the program.

4. An update on safety devices on campus would entail recording lighting problems around campus, emergency phone reliability and campus police reliability.

5. The creation of a bicycle program subcommittee responsible for creating a feasible bicycle master plan for K-State that could be phased in five years. This committee would be a voice to the administration regarding bicycle issues.

6. Executive branch program liaison regarding issues such as the development of a Saferide program.

7. Parking services accountability check to ensure Parking Services is spending every dollar in the best possible way. This committee would also work toward creating a better relationship between the Student Governing Association and Parking Services.

8. Student input form letter available to students to mail to Parking Services or give to SGA concerning parking or related problems and the establishment of an e-mail address for students to share concerns. This would help measure public reaction to new programs and rules.

A bicycle fair had been scheduled by the Union Program Council last Wednesday but was postponed.

Fortmeyer said a new date for the fair will be set this week.

"Basically, UPC just didn't do it," he said.

Fortmeyer said the committee will be more active in planning the fair this time.

Fortmeyer said he believes bike registration is something students are concerned about.

"I can tell bicycle registration is a hot issue," Fortmeyer said. "It's this year's parking garage."

At the bike fair, students will have the opportunity to register their bicycles with the University, meet with bicycle vendors and learn about bicycle rules and safety.

Searfoss said she believes bicycle registration will be helpful in finding stolen bicycles.

"A serial number is entered into the computer at Parking Services," Searfoss said. "If someone finds a bike that they think is theirs and the numbers match, they get it back."

Fortmeyer said he thinks the committee should do a careful examination of Parking Services.

"We need to go and find out," he said. "Then we can say whether it's a bad or not a bad office."

Fortmeyer said Parking Services is set up in a different manner than other places on campus. For example, he said if the engineering department runs out of money, the state will cover salaries.

"When Parking Services runs out of money, they're out of money," he said.

Budget planning can be difficult for Parking Services, Fortmeyer said.

He said some winters Parking Services could spend $150,000 for snow removal. Yet, other winters only a minimal amount is spent.

In addition, Parking Services still has to have a $350,000 deposit each October or November for the paying off of parking that was built on campus in the late 1980s.

"They're under a lot of pressure," Fortmeyer said. "I'm not going to say they run an efficient office, but they do have to please Anderson Hall and the students."

The committee also discussed ways to promote campus safety and ways to ease the parking problem on campus.

FARMING

has been working towards new uses of technology in agriculture.

Family farms are a lot like small businesses in a community, Sampson said.

The small business creates technology and markets products that are a part of big business. Sampson is working towards making family farms compete in similar ways to small business.

"Challenges and changes that will be forced in family farms in the next century will be bigger than the challenges faced by family farms in the past," Sampson said.

He said he is very optimistic farmers will succeed if they welcome change and are eager to adapt to the challenges of new technologies available to them.

Bob Bergland, former United State Secretary of Agriculture, said enormous social problems have developed since World War II due to economic policy.

"We cannot develop ag policy in a vacuum, we must also consider social and economic problems," Bergland said.

The group in agriculture that is threatened by future policy decisions are the young educated farmers with low debt and high yields. One bad year can set this type of farmer back and possibly send them out of business, he said.

FORUM

Imad Dashti, graduate student in economics, said he thinks the forum is an opportunity for everybody to get answers from the officials.

"It is not every day that we get to ask our questions and expect to be answered right away," he said.

The forum will also have student senators in attendance.

"I will be attending and hope that everyone who possibly can gets out there and attends to ask questions," Jason Cole, arts and sciences senator, said.

Cole said stimulating some discussion on campus can be good.

"I'll certainly try to get other senators to attend the forum and participate in answering student questions before, during or after the forum," he said.

The forum is from noon to 1 p.m. in the Union Courtyard.

Charles Reagan, executive assistant to the President; Pat Bosco, dean of student life; Veryl Switzer, associate director of intercollegiate athletics; Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean of Farrell Library and Archer will be present for questioning at the forum.

walked out."

Matt needed stitches for his injuries.

"Later on, I figured I needed to go get stitches in my mouth, so I went and got I don't even know how many stitches," Matt said.

After his assailant left, Matt said he began looking for an escape.

"I got up, closed the door and kind of looked for my dog. But she ran out, she was gone. So I locked my bedroom door, and I had blood all over me — had blood all down my chest. So I ripped the screen out and jumped off the roof, went to the neighbors' house to call the police.

"That's when the cops came over."

The victims said the suspects may have decided to leave after recognizing Steve.

"I got up after I thought the last one walked by," Steve said. "I went downstairs, and I recognized two of them, and I know at least one of them recognized me. After that, they started to leave."

But before they left, one of the suspects assaulted Matt's dog.

"When the last guy was running out the door, Koby was there barking at him. So he ran outside, picked up a chunk of concrete off the sidewalk — it was probably nearly a 2-pound chunk of concrete — came back inside the door and threw the rock down on her from probably three or four feet away," Matt said.

"She had run off and hid in a corner, so when I found her, she had blood all over her. I took her to the vet center on campus, and she needed stitches, but they couldn't give her stitches because it was too close to her eye.

"What they told me that day was that she very possibly would have sight damage, if not lose her eye, her skull could be fractured and her brain could be messed up."

Fortunately, Matt said, Koby will probably be all right.

"It's turned out that we're pretty sure she's going to be OK, minus her temperament is pretty bad toward strangers. So I've got all those veterinary bills, and they could have killed her," Matt said.

"I got several stitches in my mouth that day, so I've got my medical bills, too. And we need a new front door."

In all, the victims estimated their total financial damages at more than $1,000. But Matt said he's more concerned about Koby.

"I can take getting hit, and I can take the property damage. But they should be punished for what they did to Koby. That's not right," Matt said.

Riley County Police Captain Steve French, commander of the investigations division, said the investigation now centers around positively identifying all of the suspects before sending it to the county attorney.

"Basically, where the investigation is is we're still trying to identify all of the perpetrators," French said. "We don't like to send on partial cases, so we'd like to get the case ready for prosecution before it goes up."

French said he expected his detectives to complete the investigation and forward their conclusions in the coming days.

"We hope to have it all wrapped up in the next week," French said.

made to the University's web server.

He said he had become aware of concerns that the Webmaster Committee would dictate the design and content of the home pages of individuals.

"We may have to deal with that later on down the line, but right now, we're focusing on the same look, same feel and ignoring students' pages," Unger said.

She said she doubts the University will clamp down on individual home pages.

"As long as it doesn't have a K-State seal, we wouldn't want to get into that," she said. "The first thing you'd do is step on someone's toes and their First Amendment rights, and we don't have time to deal with that."

Unger said the University's attorneys are considering a disclaimer she wrote for the University's official Web pages that is based on a disclaimer she read on another university's home page.

The disclaimer, as she submitted it, would inform Web users that they are in an official University environment, would state no one can use the University's seal on a Web page without permission, would ask users to be considerate of the needs of other Web users and that abuse could lead to disciplinary action.

She said such a disclaimer has yet to be approved by the University's attorneys and could be modified further.

Pat Bosco, vice president for institutional advancement and member of the committee, said he sees the Web as a medium to promote the University to prospective students.

"I am very interested in using technology to attract students," he said.

"I think it's a good idea to use the World Wide Web to advertise the heck out of the University."

Bosco said he sees the Web as a way to keep the University on the cutting edge of technology in promotion.

"It's imperative we stay ahead of the curve on this," he said.

Bosco said he wants departments to have Web pages that represent the University properly.

"I'll be insisting on the same look, same feel on official pages in terms of which departments are going to be using this technology," Bosco said.

"It's important that departments have control over the home pages within their departments as well."

One of the concerns the Webmaster Committee has about the proposed official K-State home page is that it is graphic-intensive, which could make downloading it from outside the University's network a lengthy task.

The members of the committee expressed concern that the lengthy downloading time would discourage prospective students from downloading the home page and diminish the page's promotional effectiveness.

The new home page is about 70,000 kilobytes, mostly due to the graphic at the top of the Web page that features a color image of Anderson Hall.

Downloading the page from Web browsers, such as Prodigy's, could take about 2-1/2 minutes, said Neil Erdwein, associate applications-support specialist for CNS and committee member.

Erdwein said he believes the designers of all official Web pages should be aware that Web users outside the University don't necessarily have the access to more advanced Web browsers like Netscape that University users have.

"We need to balance the graphic elements with the need to download quickly," Erdwein said. "High school-aged users often use Mosaic-based browsers on Compuserve and Prodigy so Netscape optimization could actually impede the page's downloading time."

Unger suggested to Erdwein, who is designing the new home page, he create a pre-home page that would allow Web users to choose a text-only version of the official Web pages if they can't load in-line images quickly.

Erdwein plans to revise the new home page's design within the next two weeks.

K-State senior goes back to high school as student teacher

Heather Stephany
staff reporter

This is the first in an occasional series following a K-State senior as she student teaches at Manhattan High.

The buzzing of an alarm clock woke up Kena Tague, senior in English and secondary education, at 6:30 Friday morning. She dressed in a long skirt and brown sweater and headed out the door to begin her first day of school.

"I was nervous about not getting up on time. I hadn't met the teacher or the students. I didn't know what to wear. I didn't know anything about the teacher. I didn't know if she would like me and if I would like her. I had asked people that had gone to Manhattan High about her, and no one really knew much about her. I was really nervous," Tague said.

Her nervousness began to subside upon meeting Delores Berland, the freshman and sophomore English teacher Tague will be student teaching with the rest of the semester.

"She was really nice. She showed me around and gave me the teacher and student handbooks to look over and a copy of her rules. She gave me the lowdown on policies, tardies and absences. She also showed me how to take attendance," Tague said.

"She was really positive about all her classes. She likes her classes and thought that I would like them also. It helps to hear those positive things as a teacher entering a classroom. It made me feel better."

Tague is beginning the third and final block of the K-State education program and will receive her degree in December. After

Retiree recruitment plan fails

Cori Cornelison
staff reporter

The Manhattan Chamber of Commerce's proposal to attract retirees to Manhattan by using money from the Economic Development Fund was rejected 2-2 by city commissioners Tuesday night.

Commissioners Steve Hall and Sydney Carlin, who voted against the proposal, said they were concerned about the conflict of interest within the Chamber of Commerce and the Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund Advisory Board.

Five members for MEDOFAB, which recommends projects that could be funded with money from the fund, are also members of the Chamber of Commerce.

There is about $ 1.2 million in the fund created by the tax that began Jan. 1 and will be terminated Dec. 31, 1998. The half-cent city sales tax was approved by voters in the November election. It was to be used for economic development.

The Chamber of Commerce applied for $118,300 in direct grants and special projects.

The program would have received $31,500 for initial start-up and market research this year. In 1996, the program would have received $86,800 for administrative and marketing costs.

The 1996 money would have stayed in reserve pending review of the program by MEDOFAB and city commissioners.

Hall said he strongly supported the efforts of retiree recruitment but was against funding the program because there was a conflict of interest. The program only created one part-time job, which did not fit into the original intent of the fund, and he said he did not want to set a precedent.

"I don't believe the half-cent sales tax was sold to the city to do studies," Hall said. "I believe it was for job creations."

Commissioner Bruce Snead said the plan was not as thorough as he would have liked.

"I'm willing to go the short distance with this, but the long distance, I'm not so sure of it," he said.

▶ CONSTRUCTION

Airport renovates, adds terminal

Brent Johnson
staff reporter

Construction of a new Manhattan Municipal Airport terminal should make travel more efficient and could result in another airline providing services to the airport.

Construction on the new terminal is scheduled to start next month.

Ron Fehr, acting city manager, said the idea of a new terminal has been in the works for the last three years. The terminal was part of the airport master plan for development.

"The need for new facilities has been recognized," Bruce McCallum, director of city public works, said. "We are operating out of a facility that was built in the late '40s."

Ken Black, airport manager, said the old terminal was intended to be a temporary terminal. During the years, it has been modified and expanded to its present state.

McCallum said the new terminal will cost $1.5 million and is expected to take 12 to 18 months to complete. This price-tag includes the costs for design, construction and inspection.

"We're ready for this new terminal," Fehr said. "Not only do we have the new airplane parking pad in place, we've already got the turning lanes and a new entrance in place from highway K-18."

The new airplane parking pad, or apron, has been in place since 1992.

"The new apron is considerably larger than the old apron," Black said. "The old apron cannot handle large commercial jets because of their weight, but the new apron will be able to handle them."

McCallum said the new terminal is going to be funded from a couple of different sources. About 44 percent of the funding will come from grants from the Federal Aviation Administration, and the rest will come from a percentage of the local transient guest tax.

The local transient guest tax is paid by people visiting Manhattan. For example, when a family comes to town and stays in a hotel, they pay a tax that is included in the price of their room.

"A large portion of the money will come from FAA grants because the Manhattan airport is an entitlement airport," Fehr said.

An entitlement airport is a primary commercial service airport. It must have annual boardings exceeding 10,000 per year. For 1994, Manhattan Municipal Airport had 22,122 boardings.

"Our airport is the third largest in the state of Kansas," Black said. "We are behind Wichita and Forbes but only behind Forbes by a slim margin."

There is only one airline, U.S. Air Express, providing services at Manhattan Municipal Airport.

U.S. Air Express has been waiting for the the terminal for the last two or three years, said Diane Bergren, customer service manager for U.S. Air Express.

"We can't wait for the new terminal," Bergren said. "This building has so many problems, even the air conditioner hardly ever works."

Bergren said U.S. Air Express

Airport begins expansion

Construction will begin at the Manhattan Municipal Airport in October to replace the old terminal built in the 1940s. Here are the four main additions:

1. New terminal.
- Will be able to manage up to three airlines.
- Construction to begin in October.
- Cost: $1.5 million – funded by a grant from the FAA and a transient guest tax.

2. New airplane parking apron.
- Completed.
- Able to accomodate commercial jets.

3. New parking lot.

4. Turning lanes and new entrance.
- Partially completed.

Dial up Pizza Shuttle — via the Web

Karrin Thomas
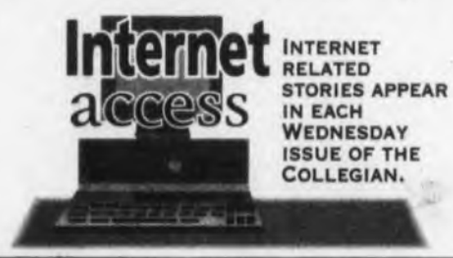
staff reporter

When you get hungry, you have a new option for ordering food. You can order food over the World Wide Web.

Not just food is available on-line. Shopping for anything from flowers to houses has taken on a new dimension as area businesses are finding their place on the Web.



Aggieville Pizza, Pizza Shuttle and Pyramid Pizza all offer the option of ordering that late-night snack through a computer.

"We usually get three to four orders a week from businesses downtown or late at night from people using the computers on campus," Todd Meyers, manager of Aggieville Pizza, said.

To order a pizza, a customer can find the Manhattan home page, click on the business of choice, find a menu page and use a form to order.

Once the customer sends the order, a computer at MegaMedia, the company providing the on-line service for many businesses in Manhattan, converts the order into a fax, which is automatically

Hackers discover flaws; Netscape responds

Karrin Thomas
staff reporter

Netscape Communications Corp., provider of the most popular software program for navigating the Internet, is fixing a security flaw that could give hackers access to sensitive information, including customers' credit-card numbers.

Two University of California at Berkeley graduate students, Ian Goldberg, 22, and David Wagner, 21, found that a knowledgeable computer user could break the program's coding system in less than a minute.

The students' findings were published on a computer mailing list on the Internet's World Wide Web on Sunday evening, said Mike Homer, vice president of Netscape marketing.

"We regularly monitor these news groups, and when we saw it, we had our engineers work on it immediately," Homer said late Monday.

The company said it would release a repaired version of the software within a week that can be downloaded from its web site (http://home.netscape.com).

Homer said the company was not aware of any security breaches.

An estimated 8 million users, including thousands of companies, use Netscape software for advertising and sales. Some use the programs to check bank balances and for catalog shopping.

Customers give their credit-card numbers to companies that provide on-line services so they can be billed automatically each month.

There was always a presumption of danger with Internet credit-card transactions, but the chance of someone's information being stolen is actually very low, John Bunch, assistant professor in the department of management at K-State, said.

K-State does not use Netscape server software, nor does the University conduct business over the Internet.

"It was only a matter of time before someone broke the security code," Vanessa Ault McCoy, marketing and promotions director at MegaMedia, said. "Just about any code will be breakable."

McCoy said she is not worried about security on the Web. MegaMedia's customers get most of their orders through fax and e-mail. For those that do accept credit-card orders, the information is stored in a non-networked system for safety.

McCoy said she doesn't think stealing credit information by waiting for it to be transmitted from one party to another is a big problem at this time.

MICHIGAN COMPANY CONSIDERS BUILDING NEW PLANT IN MANHATTAN

A company that will build electric car parts might be building a new plant in Manhattan.

Officials from the city of Manhattan, K-State and TDM Co. will have the first of many meetings today concerning the building of a new plant in the city. The groups will have a media conference at 8 a.m. today in the K-State Student Union director's conference room.

TDM, which is out of Redford, Mich., has announced plans to build a plant in Manhattan to produce electric drive trains for Ford Ranger XL pickup trucks.

Jim Hague, associate professor of architectural engineering and construction, and the College of Engineering are reasons TDM is coming to Manhattan, Don Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, said.

"Jim was the No. 1 catalyst that really got us started with working with TDM," Rathbone said.

Hague has been involved with all types of research and development of alternative ways to fuel automobiles.

"In the University's effort to bring TDM to Manhattan, it has been a huge team effort from the president's office on down," Rathbone said.

Dale Stinson, director of economic development for Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, said K-State created the energy to bring TDM to Manhattan.

"The Chamber of Commerce has been pleased to be able to work with K-State on this project," he said.

Stinson said talks concerning this project reached a serious stage around mid-August.

He said the 40,000-square-foot plant would go into the current industrial park and would take up about 10-1/2 acres.

The meetings today will be part of an effort to bring TDM and Manhattan together.

POPCORN ICON ORVILLE REDENBACHER FOUND DEAD IN HOT TUB

CORONADO, Calif. (AP) — Orville Redenbacher, whose devotion to creating and promoting a fluffier, tastier snack turned him into a bow-tied popcorn icon, has died. He was 88.

Redenbacher was found Tuesday morning in a whirlpool spa in his condominium, said Robert Engel, a medical examiner's investigator. The cause and exact time of death were under investigation.

Instantly recognizable by his natty bow tie, suspenders and neatly parted white hair, Redenbacher made himself famous through cheerful, folksy commercials for the popcorn named after him.

"Many people thought he was a media creation, but what people saw on television, that was him," said William E. Smith, executive director of the Popcorn Institute in Chicago and a friend of Redenbacher's for 43 years.

"In all of our industry, he was one of the great gentlemen and great personalities."

Redenbacher's image, so wholesome and middle-American it almost seemed a caricature, overshadowed his agricultural savvy, which he used to create his gourmet popping corn with his friend Charles Bowman.

Born into an Indiana farming family, Redenbacher became a county agriculture agent after graduating from Purdue University with a degree in agronomy.

In the early 1940s, while managing a 12,000-acre farm where he was growing popcorn, Redenbacher and Bowman used the fields to experiment with corn hybrids.

After selling his popcorn enterprise, Redenbacher and his wife, Nina, moved to California. Nina Redenbacher died in 1991. His first wife, Corinne, died in 1971.

Redenbacher is survived by two daughters, Gail Tuminello, of Valparaiso, and Billie Ann Atwood, of San Jose, Calif.; and 12 grandchildren.

PEACE CORPS RECRUITS K-STATE GRADUATE TO SERVE IN TANZANIA

A K-State graduate is leaving for Tanzania today on a two-year assignment with the Peace Corps.

Marc Vinson, who received a degree in secondary education and parks and resource management, will work with Tanzanian secondary schools to improve teaching methods in the field of science.

Previously, he worked for the Bureau of Land Management and taught at St. Marys High School.

"I was attracted to the Peace Corps service by a desire to serve and help people and a desire to travel," Vinson said. "I also feel the Peace Corps will help me achieve self-actualization."

Kenneth Vinson, Marc's father, said he thinks Marc's disposition makes him perfect for the Peace Corps.

"He makes a good teacher," he said.

Marc's mother, Sharon, said she hates to see her son go so far away but it will be the experience of a lifetime.

Career fair offers students a chance to search for jobs and make contacts with employers

by Sara Edwards

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Maytag spokesman and K-State alumnus Gordon Jump appears cut out for the career fair Tuesday as Rex Miller of Newton, Iowa, speaks with Salvador Osorio, senior in marketing, in the K-State Student Union. Miller, who came to K-State to represent Maytag, said he and the other Maytag representative were not aware that Jump was alumnus of K-State until after several students told them.

Hundreds of students attended the second annual Kansas State University State Career Fair at the K-State Student Union Tuesday.

Karen Pence, assistant dean of the College of Human Ecology, said the fair was busy most of the day.

Students were able to search for jobs and internships at more than 160 booths throughout the day.

"Having a career fair like this encourages students to get involved early," said Pence. Pence was also a member of the steering committee that organized the fair.

The fair is a good place for younger students to build contacts with the companies, Pence said.

"I'm looking for an internship to see if it is something I really want to do," Eric Waters, sophomore in graphic design, said.

Students said they appreciated the career opportunities the fair offered.

"It's great that the University puts on something like this so the students can have an opportunity to see some of the firms that are offering jobs. The literature helps in an interview. It shows that you know the firm," John Conley, senior in accounting, said.

> "A few of the businesses that were going to be here didn't show up. It's really disappointing on my part because a couple of the ones were the ones I was interested in."
> TRAVIS MASTERSON
> SENIOR IN HOTEL AND RESTAURANT MANAGEMENT

Other students said the career fair could have been improved with better representation in their area of study.

"There weren't as many employers here as I thought there were going to be. A few of the businesses that were going to be here didn't show up. It was really disappointing on my part because a couple of the ones were the ones I was interested in," Travis Masterson, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said.

Employers also said the career fair was worthwhile because companies had an opportunity to get out and let students know about them.

"Potential people have an idea of who you are and what you do," said Thomas Link of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation.

Dale Pracht, senior in agriculture education, helped students sign in for the fair. Pracht learned about his internship at MGM Studios in Las Vegas last summer by attending the fair.

"Employers like coming. Its unique because it's an all-University career fair," Pracht said.

Proposed bike deadline helps K-State students

Now, the Parking and Campus Safety Committee has recomended they move the registration deadline back several weeks into the spring semester.

Have you registered your bike?

Did you know you have to register your bike?

The Parking Council, the body that sets the parking policies for all of us to follow, announced that all bikes have to be registered by November 1. However, they have shown no organized plan for getting the bicycles registered.

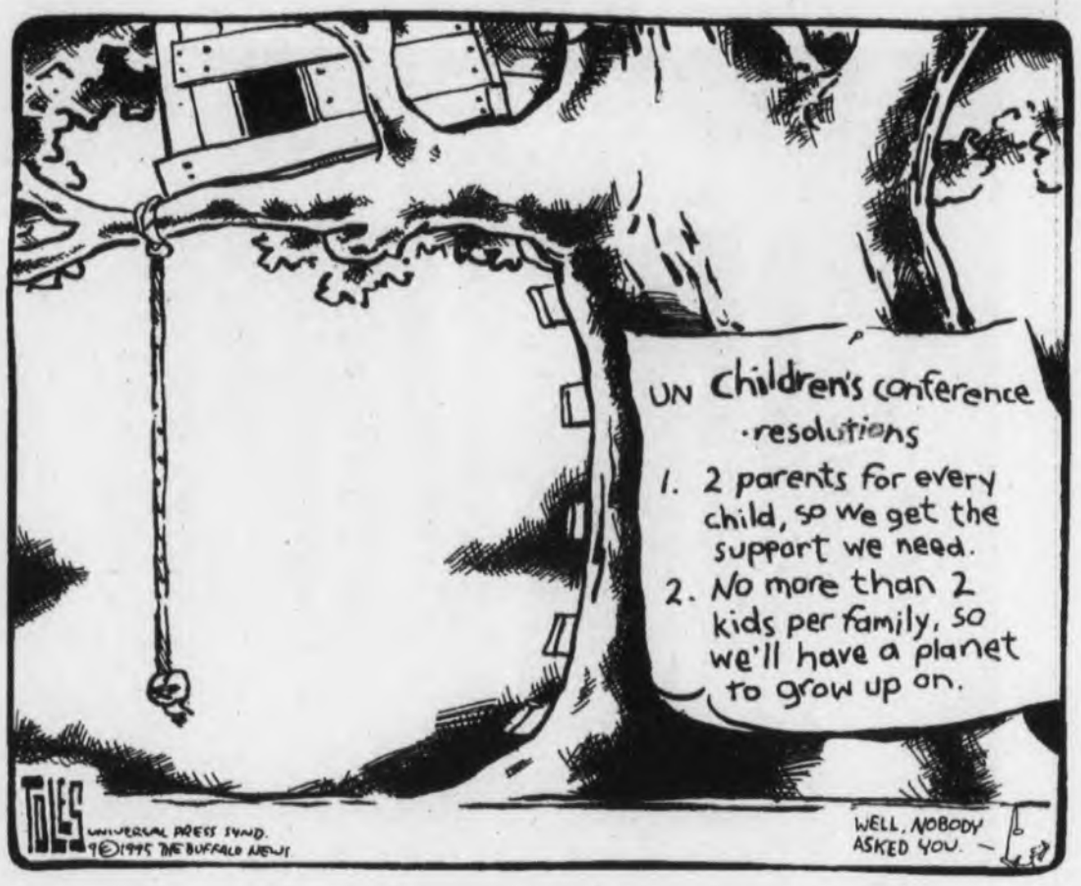
They also have shown no organized plan for letting students know about this change, other than a few leaflets stuck on announcement boards.

However, they planned to have their tickets and chain locks ready.

Bike registration is simple as filling out the forms and knowing your bike's serial number. It does require knowing that bike registration is becoming mandatory.

Union Program Council had tentatively planned a bike fair to provide information and also register bikes. Unfortunately, this never materialized. It was planned, and a date was set — then nothing happened.

Thanks for nothing.



Now, the Parking and Campus Safety Committee has recommended they move the registration deadline back several weeks into the spring semester.

Moving the deadline back until spring would only be fair to the bicyclists of K-State. Not only would it give students time to register their bikes, it would give the Parking Council time to advertise the fact that registration is going to be mandatory.

Moving the deadline also opens the window of opportunity for bike registration during spring fee payment.

Bike registration will benefit students if and only if the students know about the bike registration.

Syndicated talk shows rely on # mindless topics, whiney guests

COLUMN

KADY GUYTON

Instead of doing my homework one afternoon, I went home and watched television. Normally, I don't watch television this time of day because I'm busy doing other stuff, but I didn't feel like doing other stuff. I wanted to veg in front of the tube. Big mistake — big, big mistake.

I didn't realize that at three o'clock on any given day, there at least five different talk shows on. Through the miracles of technology, I managed to channel surf through four of them. "Donahue" was supposed to be on, but I couldn't find it.

About 25 minutes into "Ricki Lake", I was wishing I'd found something else to do. But I was hooked.

Her topic was "You have naked pictures/videos of me and I want them back."

None of her guests were anyone I would want to see naked, and everyone seemed to have been drunk at the time. Toward the end of the show, Ricki had two centerfold models judge the pictures and give their words of wisdom.

The title of Jerry Springer's show was "Stop The Wedding." He featured people opposed to other people's marriages. I didn't see the whole thing, but I did get to see some guy named Andre try to knock out his sister's fiancée. Lots of words were censored.

Jerry kindly provided a justice of the peace to marry the sister and her fiancée on the air. No one looked real happy, including Jerry, and if I was betting money, I'd have to say their marriage will be on the rocks in about six weeks.

Jerry also had a woman who left her male fiancée to get engaged to another woman. The couple plan to get married in Hawaii.

One man had been engaged to two women at the same time, one broke up with him and the other decided to go ahead and marry the bum. "He's different. Our relationship isn't the same as it was with her." Get a life.

None of the other shows were much better. Geraldo had pregnant party girls, and Montel Williams featured heroin addicts and their families.

I noticed a few themes that came up again and again. Speaking with a drawl and looking like you just crawled out from under a mobile home seem to the the best way to get on these shows.

The majority of the women had the big hairsprayed bangs from 1984 and makeup applied with a spray gun.

Most of the guys wore sleeveless T-shirts with some sort of metal band on the front.

Now I ask, do they not realize these shows are syndicated nationally? I do, and I'm not even a college graduate. Do they really want their dirty laundry spilled for the world to see?

The funny thing is if you ask people if they watch these shows, the majority will say no, not at all. They have much more important things do with their lives. But then they will go on to tell you which shows they find least offensive and why.

So, obviously, somebody is watching somewhere, and most of us are closet viewers. We've become a nation of peeping Toms.

As far as I know, in the history of talk shows, no one has ever resolved their problems. Have you ever seen an episode where any of the guests left happy? It would seem that being on "Ricki Lake" doesn't really help anything.

I don't think I could have my own talk show. I don't like listening to people whine, and I'd be correcting their grammar through the whole episode.

Someone would probably throw a chair at me.

Now that I know what's on television during the day, I probably won't watch again.

If I want to see people fight with each other, I'll go start my own. Who knows, maybe I'll videotape it.

▶ OK TO BE DRUG-FREE

Editor,

I must thank you for finally giving the final push to write this letter. I have been waiting far too long.

I thoroughly enjoyed Kevyn Jacob's column in Monday's Collegian, "Senseless stigma falls on marijuana users." It made me once again realize how stupid people can be.

I'm not pretending when I believe you are a loser and a threat. Your column, your actions and your example to the rest of the impressionable world makes you a loser and a threat.

I will not deny there would be less crime and less tax money spent if drugs were legalized, and I appreciate the fact you didn't hide behind that "we-could-make-paper-if-hemp-were-legal" bullshit excuse. But what really kills me is that people like you would even want to take a drug such as marijuana or alcohol in the first place.

I hear all sorts of lies from drug users about the self-introspection and self-realization that drugs bring. How can you really know yourself if you are perceiving yourself with blinders on? Drugs will only close your eyes and shut the doors to the real truth before you.

Many people will tell me they use drugs and alcohol to forget their problems. I see it on television, and it's in the movies and the books I read. What a pathetic existence one must have when they turn to drugs and alcohol as a crutch to hold their lives up. I will never use a chemical to hold me up, outside of a doctor's prescription.

And as a journalist, you should know that one should never speak in absolute terms. You said, "We pass all sorts of absurd, puritanical laws that everyone breaks — sodomy laws, underage drinking and 65 mph speed limits on roads that can safely handle 95."

Don't say "laws that everyone breaks." 1.) I have never committed sodomy. 2.) I don't drink, and when I turn 21, I still won't — ever. 3.) Are you a transportation engineer? What do you know about road construction? Stick to art and journalism, please.

By writing this letter, I am no longer going to be part of the complicity of silence that allows this world to drown itself in alcohol and drugs. You can step forward with your conscience clear and proclaim your outright lies, and I hope that everyone who reads the Collegian sees what a bunch of bullshit it is.

Allow me to paraphrase a quote I read in my K-State programmer. "Think of how hard it is to change yourself, and then think of what little chance you have to change others." — Arnold Glasgow.

I hope this goes for the both of us. I can't convince you not to do your drug, and you will never pull me off the X (symbol for being drug-free) I'm crucified to.

In the interest of fairness and equality, I wanted to state my two cents to the world.

I want to tell everyone that it's OK not to drink. Drinking won't make you cool, and covering your problems with chemicals will only make them worse.

Homeless problem deserves consistent attention

The element of an "us vs. them" factor in America is blatantly evident throughout the national consciousness.

This ranges from unabashed political campaigns to neighborhoods where people don't want to walk at night.

However, as the class struggle in American society quietly marches on, one group of people are made invisible by their poverty.

When I first read about SPURS, the sophomore honorary group, camping outside the K-State Student Union to promote awareness of the homeless problem in America, I felt it was a gesture without symbolism or purpose.

I don't think people of one class can truly experience the ordeals of a people with whom they have no real contact with in everyday life.

I don't need to see people simulating being homeless when I can see the real thing in my own hometown. However, as I read some of the quotes from different members of SPURS, I came to realize they understood the same aforementioned theories I held.

The subject of welfare and the homeless masses on the street is once again surfacing in Congress, as a sweeping reform bill (pushed by Senator Bob Dole, R-Kan.) seeks approval.

But the issue I'm concerned with is not the money being cut or the reforms which are inherent; I actually think some of the cutbacks within the bill are needed.

The truly daunting aspect about America's homeless situation is the fact that they are invisible to everyday people.

It's easy to walk by someone and ignore them, replacing them in the mind and eye by thinking and looking at something else.

The homeless have no place to go — most churches have closed doors, operating occasional shelters but mostly resigning to canned food drives and hot meals at Christmas and Thanksgiving.

Despite available money from the government, many continue to go without, marching under the banner of pride.

Bums on the street, standing by a burning trash can, have sadly moved out of the TV sets and the silver screen and into alleys and vacant lots.

We hold a place in our hearts but not our homes for the down-trodden and forgotten; I am no exception. It is very human to stand at one moment and defend someone or something and then forget about it as time goes by.

We don't like to look at dirty things or acknowledge our shortcomings.

I don't see a solution to this problem in our children, nor for any time after them, because of one reason: we're human.

I'm sure that after a night of camping out in boxes the members of SPURS went home or into the Union to eat breakfast; anyone would.

I'm also sure that the next time I pass a homeless person or peddler in the streets, I'll be afraid to look at them for fear of catching whatever supposed disease has been laden on them by public opinion.

Additionally, I'm sure there are a few people who would love to blast me as a hypocrite, but I know next time they see someone who is wearing rags, looking into space, they'll do what most of us will.

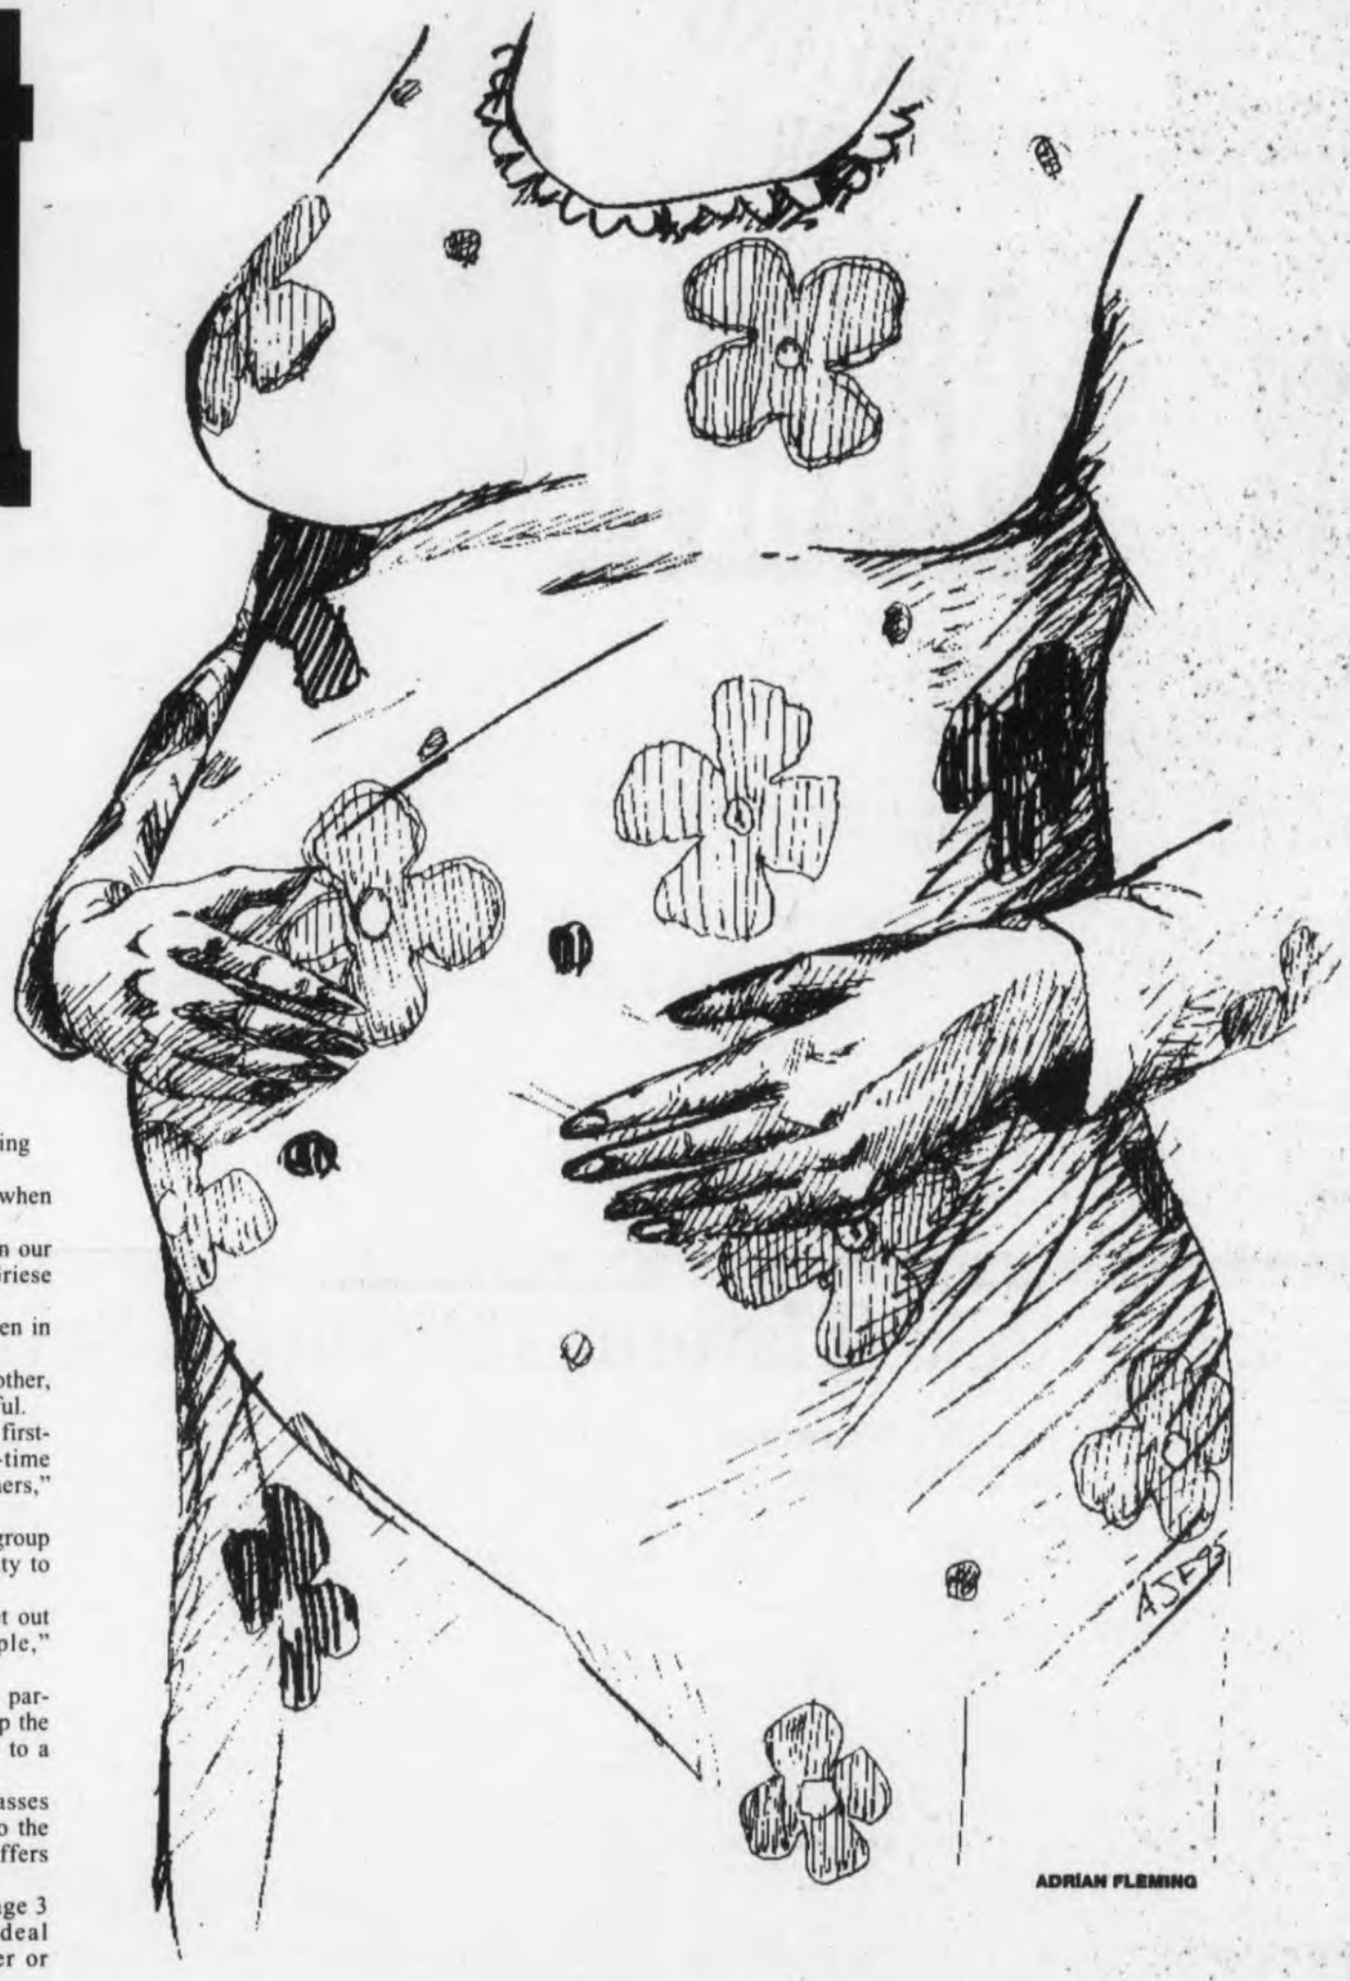
What's important to remember is this: those people, at some point and time, did have a name and a roof.

Very little compassion exists anymore in the makeup of our national soul.



If all we have left of our humanity are little acts, then I'll be happy to sleep in a box for one night or serve a meal to a dissolute person.

New Parent Support Group helps first-time mothers cope with the stresses of parenthood

by Sarah Kallenbach

A woman's outlook on life changes the minute she become an expectant mother.

Memorial Hospital is working to support pregnant women.

Two new programs and many classes at the hospital make it easier for women to get the help they need through this life-changing time.

"For some women they are no longer just a wife anymore, but a mother," Educational Coordinator Maureen Griese, said. "We're seeing that for some people, it still takes a little adjustment."

The adjustments can be tough for some women.

"Women have great support in the hospital. Then they get home, and the people they have chosen for their support system aren't informed," Griese said.

Part of being informed is being educated.

"It is important that new parents prepare themselves for parenting, and it is important to be educated and have a good support system," Griese said.

One of the new programs is a New Parents Support Group. The group began Aug. 30 and meets once a week to discuss the challenges facing mothers.

"We have questions about normal infant behavior. They need reinforcements based on the information they got from the hospital," Griese said.

The group's discussions have centered around infant feeding and childcare issues.

Breast feeding is one of the issues facing Robyn Sisco, whose first son, Timothy, is 11 weeks old.

"We shared information about little things like breast feeding. I was able to share answers to problems," Sisco said.

Griese said child care is one of the biggest problems for the mothers.

"Finding quality and affordable child care is a very significant issue for the women of this group," Griese said.

The mothers benefit from each other and from the leaders of the group. Griese and Terri Johnson, RNC, who lead the group, are also mothers who can identify with the problems of the members.

Griese and Johnson can also sympathize with the other mothers.

"We have the experience of trying to find child care," Griese said.

The support group was started when the leaders saw there was a need.

"We realized there was a need in our community for parent support," Griese said.

She said 95 percent of the women in the group were first-time mothers.

Because Sisco is a first-time mother, she said she felt the group was helpful.

"It put me in contact with other first-time mothers. I am an older first-time mother, and I was looking for others," Sisco said.

Both Sisco and Griese said the group provided the mothers an opportunity to get out into the world once again.

"It gives mothers a reason to get out of the house and meet new people," Griese said.

The hospital also provides new parents with a variety of classes to help the whole family make the adjustment to a new baby.

Breast feeding and birthing classes offer support and encouragement to the mothers, and the lifestyle class offers emotional help with motherhood.

In the siblings class, children age 3 years and older learn how to deal with the arrival of a new brother or sister.

The pressures, both emotional and physical, facing new mothers can be too much for some women.

"For women, not only are they going through physical changes, but they are healing. They are learning a lot of new things. Lump all of those things together, and it has the potential for problems," Griese said.

Through the classes and the support group, the hospital offers women the chance to deal with the problems.

Exercise classes are also offered to prenatal and postpartum women.

The Memorial Hospital Health and Fitness Center took over the class originally run by the Nutrition Clinic.

"It has been around, but it has been sporadic. Now, the class is a definite," Kari Bowhay, exercise physiologist, said.

Twelve women are signed up for the three-day-a-week class, which uses light-impact aerobics that are designed for all stages of pregnancy.

"Exercise is very important during pregnancy. It also helps through the birthing process," Bowhay said.

Every patient must have doctor's referral to participate in the class to limit the chance of injury.

The women can also take advantage of the hospital's fitness center, which includes free weights and machines.

Through the exercise program, support groups and classes, Memorial Hospital is providing services to help women stay healthy both mentally and physically while pregnant.

Welcome to life as an NCAA college football powerhouse

COLUMN

TODD STEWART

Call it denial, but stuff like this doesn't happen at K-State — no, not here.

Or so we like to think.

Victims of an Aug. 20 assault which was a retaliation of a fight earlier in the morning in which two Wildcat football players may have been involved, said more than 10 very large people broke into their house and assaulted them.

Stuff like this happens at Nebraska, or Alabama, or Miami, or Oklahoma, but not here. Those are the dirty programs, and K-State has been nationally recognized for running one of the cleanest programs in the country, so this must be a mistake. There must be a mistake.

"Winning isn't everything, it's the only thing."

Bill Snyder is one of the premier coaches in the nation — this ship is definitely clean. Snyder wouldn't field a team of players that would be a part of anything like this. There must be a mistake.

> "Stuff like this happens at Nebraska, or Alabama, or Miami, or Oklahoma, but not here."

"Win at any cost."

K-State recruits are only the top kids in the country. No one would ever be brought in who would make mistakes like this. The Cats players are part of the classiest act in the country. There must be a mistake.

"Losing is not an option."

And this is Manhattan. Forget that football players might have been involved, incidents like this don't happen in Manhattan. Maybe New York, or Chicago, or Detroit, but not here, not in Manhattan. There must be a mistake.

"Losing is unacceptable."

This could be a big year for the Cat team, and stuff like this just doesn't happen in years like this. Nothing should stand between the Cats and possibly their best season in history. There must be a mistake.

But it wouldn't surprise me if they're weren't

Even if nothing more at all comes out of this incident, K-State can now say it has entered the ranks of a college football powerhouse in every aspect.

Scary as it sounds, scandals and victories go hand in hand.

So maybe this is good for the Cats on the field because as frightening as it may sound, it has become hard to take a team to the top without a scandal or two scattered throughout a season.

I wish I didn't have to say it, but in college football today, a title is more often than not a tainted title. But what is so disturbing about this is how accepted this has become.

Maybe this incident will be the fuel in the engine that can jump-start the Cats to the ranks of the nation's elites. Programs that are 100-percent clean no longer win the championships. Or, for that matter, 80-percent clean.

Ask Nebraska.

Ask Miami.

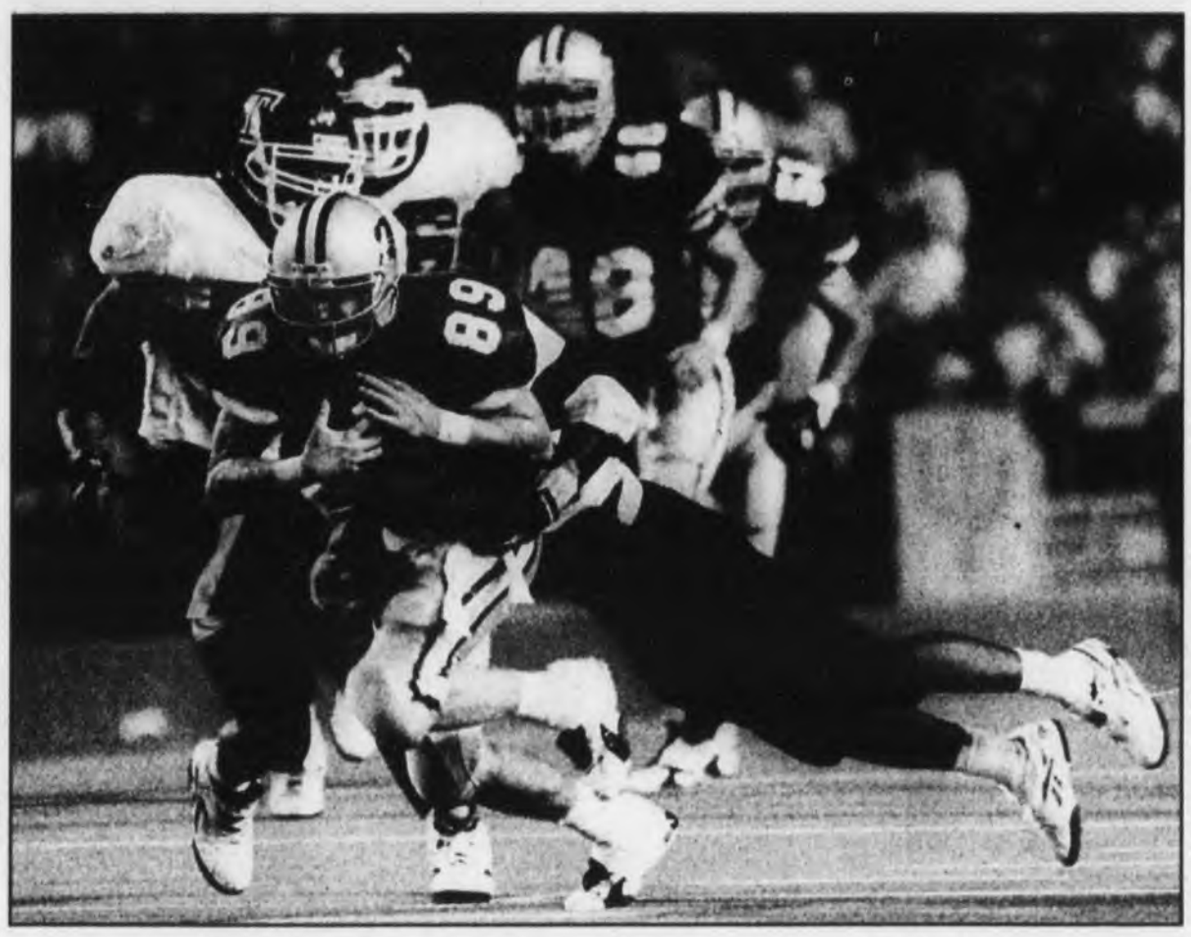
Ask Alabama.

Ask Oklahoma.

Let's hope the Cats are not next on the list.

K-State is home of one of the greatest turn arounds in college football history, so let's not ruin that. If there is more to this incident than the public knows, I would trade this team for any of the 80s.

A clean loser beats a dirty winner every day. Off the field anyway.



So if winning is everything, which it has become in the world of sports, this K-State team could be taking one more step toward gridiron greatness.

But at what a price.

WAITING FOR A CHANCE

Wide receiver Mitch Running makes a catch during the season-opening victory over Temple. Because of veterans like Running, sophomore Andre Anderson and junior Jimmy Dean have seen little action.

CARY CONOVER

Ryan O'Halloran

Coaches have been telling K-State wide receivers Andre Anderson and Jimmy Dean their time will come.

But their time might not come until September 1996, when fellow wide receivers Tyson Schweiger and Mitch Running have graduated.

This, coupled with the fact that Coach Bill Snyder is using more of a two-back offense, means the playing time for Anderson and Dean has been slim this season, to say the very least.

Going into Saturday's game against Akron, Anderson, a sophomore from West Palm Beach, Fla., and Dean, a junior from Coconut Creek, Fla., have yet to catch a pass this season.

"In a way, it's kind of frustrating to the point that I know I can make the same plays they (Schweiger, Running and Kevin Lockett) can," Anderson said.

"But I just got to be patient because I know my time is coming, and when it comes, I have to make the most of it."

For now, anyway, Anderson and Dean are left to returning kicks and strutting their stuff in practice.

And because K-State has yet to blow out an opponent, the garbage time, meant to develop younger players, hasn't occurred.

"In practice, I can make the big catches and the big runs, but I just haven't had the chance to do it in the games yet," Anderson said. "But I think the coaches are pretty confident I can do it — it's just that they have other guys who can play right now."

Snyder said the lack of playing time for Anderson and Dean has nothing to do with their performance on the practice field.

"Jimmy and Andre are both performing well, and they deserve to be on the field," Snyder said.

Despite not seeing a whole lot of action, Snyder said the two wide receivers have remained positive during the season.

"They're fine," Snyder said. "You never really know what's inside a young man, but I trust what I hear from them. They're very positive and anxious for another ballgame to roll around and hope they get their chance."

Anderson said he and Dean wonder when they will get the chance.

"Under our breaths and in our free time, we're like, 'I know I can do it. I just need a chance,'" Anderson said. "But he and I are in the same boat."

The positive attitude of the coaching staff has helped the situation, Anderson said.

"They've been saying, 'Andre, keep your head up. Your time is coming,' but sometimes you tired of hearing that, but on the other hand, you know they're telling the truth," Anderson said.

If K-State gets anywhere close to covering the spread, Anderson and Dean will most likely see their first significant action of the season.

"We're going to give them playing time and, hopefully, it's ample playing time. And that's our intent," Snyder said.

Anderson said all he wants is a quick K-State lead on Saturday night.

"If we go out and play like we're capable of playing and get out to a good start, I know I should be in there playing a lot more than I have in the first couple of game," Anderson said. "And that's what I'm banking on."

Role of favorite still worries Snyder

■ Coach won't overlook the 0-2 Akron Zips

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

How can being a 39-point favorite hurt a team? Coach Bill Snyder said there is a risk.

"There's always a risk that if you don't play well, then you stand a chance to lose and that's true in every ballgame and certainly in this ballgame," Snyder said.

Snyder said Tuesday at his weekly press conference that being such a heavy favorite can put undue pressure on the team and coaching staff to play to a certain level.

"It puts a little pressure on players and coaches to perform well just because of the expectations that exist," Snyder said.

The Akron Zips are 0-2 on the season and have been beaten by an average margin of 29 points a game. Akron's offense is led by quarterbacks Brian Magrell and Mike Junko, who have combined for 477 yards passing and three touchdowns while wide receiver Eddie Alford leads the Mid-American Conference with 12 catches for 158 yards.

"Offensively, they have found a way to function fairly well with the quarterback situation they have," Snyder said.

"They'll throw it downfield eight to 10 times during the course of the ballgame. If you're not where you need to be or the ball takes a bad bounce, it could put you in some trouble."

While the Zips were losing to Bowling Green 50-12 last Saturday, the Wildcats had their only open week of the season.

With the open week, the Cats worked heavily on improving their special teams play — specifically, their kickoff return and coverage teams.

K-State ranks seventh in the Big 8 and No. 74 in the country in kickoff returns with an 18.2-yard average.

The opposition is averaging 17 yards a return.

"I hadn't been overly impressed with our kickoff return unit," Synder said. "We've made a little bit in the way of strides."

Other than the special teams, Snyder said the open week was beneficial for the improvement in other facets of K-State's game.

"We have worked the last week on trying to improve on some of the areas where we haven't been up to where we expect to be," Snyder said.

▶ KC CHIEFS

Chiefs bidding for first 4-0 start in team's history

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — If the unbeaten Kansas City Chiefs defeat Cleveland this week, they will overcome two historical trends.

Never, in 35 years of competition, have the Chiefs (3-0) been 4-0. Sixteen times going back to the birth of the American Football League, they have started 3-1, including last year leading up to an upset loss at home to the Los Angeles Rams in week No. 4.

But perhaps most daunting for the Chiefs this week is the team they played last week.

The Oakland Raiders, who have lost nine of their last 10 regular-season meetings against the Chiefs, have a funny way of getting even.

They seem to cause their emotionally exhausted arch-rivals to perform far below top form the next week.

Since 1985, the Chiefs are 6-14 following their always-hyped, passion-charged games against the Raiders.

Some of their flattest performances and most painful losses have followed what coaches and players call "Raiders week."

To Coach Marty Schottenheimer, following last Sunday's pulsating 23-17 overtime victory against the Raiders, now falls the task of lifting his players over this psychological hurdle.

His strategy? Get them to ignore it.

"If you go back the following week and go to work and do things in a businesslike, professional manner, it should not have an effect," Schottenheimer said Tuesday. "I can't even remember who we played after we played them."

> "Emotionally and physically, it's impossible to continue to perform at a very high peak."
> MARTY SCHOTTENHEIMER
> KANSAS CITY CHIEFS HEAD COACH

Well, there was that 14-13 loss last year to San Diego, in which the Chiefs jumped to a quick 13-0 lead but hardly got a first down the rest of the day.

And there was the setback at home in 1993 to underdog Chicago.

The Chiefs, who had beaten the Raiders 31-20 the week before, were favored by almost two touchdowns over the Bears.

But a 19-17 loss cost them home field advantage in the playoffs.

While denying there is anything different about the Raiders, Schottenheimer admits highly emotional games can take a toll.

"There may in fact be something to that," he said.

"I know that every week, you don't always perform at the same level. Emotionally and physically, it's impossible to continue to perform at a very high peak."

If ever the Chiefs seemed prime for a post-Raiders letdown, it's now. In addition to the usual hype, last week's 23-17 victory over Oakland came on a dramatic interception return in overtime.

Plus, former Raider star Marcus Allen hit a career milestone against his old team, and coaches Art Shell and Gunther Cunningham faced their old team as Chiefs' assistants for the first time.

"I don't think there's any question there's a tremendous amount of energy in that type of a game. And it's probably more emotional than physical," Schottenheimer said.

"But I also think that if you have an ability intellectually to go back the next week and just focus on the things you know are important to continued success, it doesn't have to have a negative effect."

Phillips pleads no contest

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska tailback Lawrence Phillips pleaded no contest to misdemeanor assault and trespassing charges Tuesday while prosecutors decided against filing separate charges against backup Damon Benning.

The decision not to prosecute Benning was the first good off-field news for the second-ranked Cornhuskers in more than a week. However, backup tailback James Sims faces a Nov. 7 court appearance on misdemeanor charges of disturbing the peace and vandalism after a July 3 incident involving his ex-girlfriend.

In all, three Husker running backs have been accused of roughing up their ex-girlfriends this year.

Benning was cleared Tuesday. Sims maintained his innocence and Phillips, in addition to his no contest pleas, sent a letter of apology to his victim.

"Please accept my deepest apologies for my actions toward you on Sept. 10," he wrote. "I never intended to hurt you and I am sorry for any grief, pain or suffering I may have caused you. What I did was wrong and I accept full responsibility for it."

Under Nebraska law, a no contest plea is the same as a guilty plea for sentencing purposes. Phillips' assault and trespassing charges each carry a maximum penalty of six months in jail and a $500 fine.

Lancaster County attorney Gary Lacey said he would recommend probation, counseling and completion of an anger-control program for the running back. Sentencing is scheduled for Dec. 1.

The development does not mean Phillips will return immediately for the Cornhuskers, coach Tom Osborne said. Phillips still must satisfy doctors that he has taken steps to control his anger, Osborne said, and an NCAA investigation into Phillips' past must be settled.

Osborne has said Phillips could return in about a month.

Phillips, a junior who was considered a Heisman Trophy contender after rushing for 359 yards and seven touchdowns in two games, was suspended Sept. 10 for allegedly hitting an ex-girlfriend, Nebraska sophomore Kate McEwen, at the apartment of transfer quarterback Scott Frost.

Benning, a junior from Omaha, was arrested Sept. 9 after allegedly grabbing his ex-girlfriend at his Lincoln apartment. He said he restrained the woman from entering his apartment.

"I knew the first day the stories were aired that there were a lot of inaccuracies out there ... everybody seemed to swarm to that," he said. "We weathered the storm."

Benning's father, Don, said in a written statement he and other family members were angered at the way their son has been portrayed.

"I hope that the news media will take a proactive role in making sure that fairness is served in this issue, and that the story of my son's vindication will be received and disseminated with the same vigor and thoroughness that the story of his arrest was," he said.

Damon Benning said he was concerned the publicity surrounding his arrest would hurt the team's image.

"I feel bad for Coach Osborne because he takes the blame for what goes on around here," he said. "He's just one man in control of 150 players at one time. There's not a lot he can do a lot of the time ... he can only tell us what he believes in and let us know what he expects of us. Sometimes we fail at that."

Osborne, who said a week ago he thought the case against Benning wouldn't go anywhere, said he believed Sims also was innocent. There are no plans to discipline the sophomore.

Sims said the July incident came after his former girlfriend brought some of his belongings to him at a friend's home. He said she was not careful with the belongings, and as he tried to protect the belongings, the car door was slammed shut, breaking the window.

Sims said they both blamed each other for the broken window and that the woman began hitting him. Sims said she fell as he tried to restrain her, cutting her leg on glass on the street.

Once a year, for avid bluegrass fans, the center of the universe becomes a small Kansas town called

WINFIELD

story - Nolan Schramm
photos - J. Kyle Wyatt

Smoke from burning wood carried a bouquet of grilled onions and sweet barbecue sauce across the plains of Winfield. People in makeshift camps cooked chicken in crescent pits dug into the ground near olive-drab army tents.

The sun was setting over the Winfield Fairgrounds, site of the 24th annual Winfield Bluegrass Festival. People walked through the parking lot, which was filled mostly with domestic cars and trucks.

In the distance, a large grain elevator jutted into the Saturday afternoon sky. This was Winfield.

A grueling three-hour drive from Manhattan, nestled between Wichita and a few suburbs, the fairly quiet town of 10,000 was having a party. Around 30,000 people showed up for the four-day grassroots music extravaganza.

Every year for the past 24 years, Winfield has been Bluegrass Central for thousands of music fans from all across the United States. The license plates tell the story: Oklahoma, North Dakota and even New York.

A sea of tents jammed into what were empty lots but a few weeks ago. Across U.S. Highway 160, people camped in pastel tents and makeshift tepees. There had been no room for them in the main campgrounds.

The sounds of fast pickin' and strumming of steel and nickel strings came from a rickety stone and aluminum grandstand. A smattering of applause echoed through the parking lot.

People flocked toward the stands, drawn to the music like bees to honey. An old man in dark blue overalls stood on top of a camper, looking for the musicians with a huge pair of binoculars. His wife yelled at him to get down before he hurt himself, for God's sake.

At the southwest end of the park, two kids flew down dirt roads on ratty dirtbikes, one kicking gravel as he used his feet to stop, Flintstones style.

A hint of incense floated lightly on the afternoon air from a tent sporting tie-dyed blankets. People stood outside tents, playing acoustic guitars, mandolins, banjos and any eclectic instrument conceived by the human mind.

Meanwhile, the stage shows continued into the late evening. stage 2 was set in a small valley at the bottom of a hill. People sat on blankets, holding children and drinking out of legal containers. Kids rolled down the grassy hill, laughing and jumping around, throwing balls and streamers into the air, free of any deadlines.

The man on the stage was a jack of all instruments. He played the maracas, guitar and the mouth harp, just to name a few. A few twangs on the mouth harp brought giggles from some nearby children. A group of high-school kids, all wearing tie-dyed shirts, laughed too.

The songs, for those unfamiliar with bluegrass, express the wonders of a simpler life that much of modern society has ridiculed or left behind as being "old-fashioned": apple pie cooling on the window sill, going fishing in a non-polluted lake and catching edible fish after a hard day of wrestling with the ground to cultivate crops and coming home to the loving arms of a wife who understood it all.

On the main stage, a performer was singing an audience-participation song called "Y'all Come." A folding wooden landscape was behind him, painted like a Kansas sunset, complete with trees and green Astroturf for grass.

Throughout the evening, every hour on the hour, the sponsors raffled off a Cripple Creek-brand Dulcimer, a stringed instrument that looks like a small guitar with no neck. They also raffled off Swiss Army knives.

Night slowly descended upon the fairgrounds as No Strings Attached completed its sound checks and embarked on an Irish melody, using banjos, guitars and some kind of flute.

At the same time, the Soo railroad line had scheduled a train to run through the nearby railroad tracks. It tooted its horn, causing a discord with the note the band was playing, disrupting harmony.

Aside from the music, the food was interesting as well. Vendors in trailers sold fried potato chips covered with cheese, corn on the cob, biscuits and gravy, funnel cakes and ice-cream sodas.

By the time the sun had crept below the horizon, some people migrated to stage 3. This side-building stage featured a band with an acoustic bass guitar, banjo and regular acoustic guitar. More than 250 people sat on aluminum bleachers, and young ones frolicked through the dirt aisles that had been worn into the grass.

"The Bluegrass Patriots are next," asserted a beer-bellied man to the man next to him. "They're good."

Stage 4 was in an aluminum shed. The band playing there was a local group from Winfield. One guy in a yellow shirt got up and got into the music, gyrating his pelvis rapidly. The audience pointed and stared, as must have been the initial reaction to Elvis at his first gig. He howled when the band finished its set.

The line was long for funnel cakes.

Back at stage 2, three-time national flat-pickin' champion Steve Kaufman and internationally recognized Beppe Gambetta began playing a guitar cover of the Beatles' "All You Need Is Love." Lovers snuggled a little closer, and lonely folks sighed. Kids threw glowing sticks and streamers through the cool night air.

Although the grandstand attracted the greatest number of people, the little stages had acts that appealed to a much more diverse audience. Stage 5 was a prime example.

Nestled into the southern campsite area known as Pecan Grove, stage 5 evolved slowly over the festival's 24-year history. It began as a little stage, hastily erected by a group of zealous fans to " ... promote acoustic music, provide an outlet for 'wanna-bes' and 'ought-to-bes' and, above all else, to have fun."

It began as an open stage, meaning anyone could get up there and do their thing. Later, this became so popular, booking was started to keep things in order.

And when Barry "Bones" Patton took the stage, the small but dedicated audience loved it. He played tiny pieces of wood, held between the fingers of each hand.

They would make a sound like a deep, hollow click. Mixed with the a fiddle and banjo, it was a beautiful acoustic alchemy.

One woman, who had obviously imbibed alcohol beyond legal limits, kept hooting and hollering and heckling band members throughout the entire show. Luckily, the band never spotted her.

People lounged on lawn chairs, blankets or hunter's stools, enjoying the dueling banjos and fiddle players, well past 3 in the morning, long past the time the other stages had packed up for the night.

If this small window of the Bluegrass festival is attractive to you, try camping out for the full experience next year, when the festival will celebrate its 25th anniversary.

Five-year-old Kevin Pearson of Denver soars above the tents of Pecan Grove with the help of Megan Josephson, 11, Hutchinson, center, and Brandi Kissick, 12, Mount Hope. Pecan Grove is one of two campgrounds that house thousands of campers during the four days of the festival.

North Carolina artist Mike Cross adds emotion to his music Saturday on stage 1 at the Walnut Valley Festival in Winfield. Cross, a headlining musician, is a crowd favorite as he mixes humor into his fusion of bluegrass, blues and folk music, which he calls "Appalachian Boogie."

The now defunct Lawrence band White Trash Express got together for a session on stage 5 in Pecan Grove. Stage 5 became an official festival stage in 1989 and provides an outlet for performers of all skill levels.

Tents begin to come down and festival-goers break camp as the final day of Winfield arrives on Sunday. Between hugs and goodbyes, many people begin making plans for the 25th Walnut Valley Festival, Sept. 19-22, 1996.

Call him COACH

by Holly McConkey

"We want to make it more of an event for the crowd. Fans are looking for overall entertainment when they come to the games," Sam Bushey, newly appointed cheer squad coach and K-State alumnus, said.

There is a familiar face with a new job on the cheerleading squad.

Sam Bushey, recently appointed coach, is returning to the squad after being a member for the past five years.

"It wasn't that long ago that I was on the squad. Now I'm realizing the coach's side," he said.

Bushey, who is from Wichita, graduated from K-State in biology last May and then moved to Chicago to look for work in sales.

Bushey said taking the coaching job was not an easy decision because he already had a place to live in Chicago.

"I was coming through a few weeks ago and was asked if I'd like to do it. It was a difficult decision, but I officially said yes a few days before the first game," he said.

A few loose strings have made the season hectic since Bushey took the job this season.

"A lot of things a coach does during the summer weren't done," he said.

Two captains on the team structured and organized the squad's practices during the summer.

"Our captains did a great job putting in structure. They did a great job of keeping things organized," Matt Craig, sophomore in advertising, said.

Squad members said being without a coach didn't hurt the squad.

"It didn't hurt the squad, but it was hard on the captains. They had to do a lot of administrative things and run practices," Amy Parish, senior in nutrition science, said.

Bushey said he has been busy getting the squad ready for the football season. One of his goals this year is to try new techniques to keep the crowds interested in the game.

"We want to make it more of an event for the crowd. Fans are looking for overall entertainment when they come to the games," he said.

With record season-ticket sales, the cheer squad is implementing new ideas to help the fans have a good time at the games, he said.

Bushey said he has learned a lot from his experience as a member of the cheer squad.

"I went through three different coaches while I was cheering. I picked up all of the good points from all of those coaches and will try to apply it this year."

Parish said this season will be a transition year for the cheer squad, and they will be working on rebuilding and having fun.

"We have a lot of new people. It is a young squad. We only have a few seniors," she said.

The squad will be preparing for national championships this year, Bushey said.

"Last year we placed seventh. We want to do better than last year."

CHANGING TAX PROVISIONS AIM OF GOP

WASHINGTON — In spite of strident Democratic objections, House Republicans are moving on a grab-bag bill reducing a tax credit for the working poor and tinkering with scores of other tax provisions.

Ways and Means Committee Chairman Bill Archer, R-Texas, said the proposed changes in the earned income tax credit are designed to restore it to its original purpose — helping people get and stay off welfare by encouraging them to work.

But Democrats said the cuts — $23.3 billion from the $153 billion program during seven years — would have just the opposite effect. They made the provision the focus of their opposition to the Republican bill.

The earned income tax credit, designed to help low-income workers stay off welfare, ranges from just a few dollars a year to a maximum of $3,564. It can be claimed annually as part of recipients' tax refunds, or it can be received as supplements to their paychecks, a sort of reversal of withholding paid by Americans with higher incomes.

The bill would extend some tax breaks due to expire, trim some and phase out or end others.

Dr. Crusty will compete in Opus 9

Page Getz
contributing writer

Editor's note: This is the third in a five-part series profiling the bands that will compete in the Opus 9 band competition.

Dr. Crusty, a Topeka band in its prime as a local band, will be participating in the Opus 9 competition.

Recently, the group released its first CD on an independent label, Ugly Sandwich Productions. The CD, "Blockacheese," will be available in Manhattan record stores shortly after the Opus competition.

It is the band's first full-length release following the production of its "Period" demo in October 1993.

"We started writing songs when we got our bass guitarist, Erik Francis, in '92," guitarist Brad Durston said. "We just started hammering them out. That's when it started to get real."

Between the new CD and the opportunity to perform at Opus, the members of Dr. Crusty are looking forward to more regional exposure.

"Topeka doesn't have much of a music scene, and Lawrence has a really cliquey scene," guitarist John Cummings said. "It's just tough for local bands in the Midwest."

Durston said he agrees.

"It's tough because their are so many bands — especially in Lawrence because it's the hot spot around here for record companies," he said.

"And alternative music seems to be going toward the mainstream now, Weezer type of stuff with less guitar and less rhythm."

The band is now in the process of talking to various record labels through an agent in Chicago.

"She does a lot of 'shopping' for us, and we're trying to book as many shows as possible," Cummings said.

Dr. Crusty is also working with two contacts out of Redhouse, a recording studio in Lawrence.

In addition to the release on its independent label, the group will be featured on a compilation disc produced out of Colombia, Mo., through Relax Productions.

The compilation, "The Best of the Midwest," also includes music by DJ Romeo and State of Mind. It will be distributed nationwide, and will be available in late November.

Dr. Crusty played with Manhattan's Spine in June and at Charlie's Neighborhood Bar and at the Lone Star in Kansas City last spring.

Spine will be the alternate in the Opus 9 this year. "They're really one of the best bands we've had an opportunity to work with," Durston said.

Opus 9 will be Friday at 5:30 in the free-speech zone on the north side of the K-State Student Union.

Can Computers Hurt My Eyes?

More and more, computers have become part of our daily lives. Work on computers can cause symptoms of eyestrain and fatigue such as burning tired eyes, trouble maintaining focus, and blurry distance vision for a while after working at the computer. Taking frequent breaks, adjusting the contrast and room lighting may help with these symptoms of eyestrain. If you wear glasses, having a current prescription and adding an anti-reflective coating to the lenses may decrease eyestrain.

Wetlands, habitat increase because of new funding

Associated Press

JUNCTION CITY — Kansas has 600 more acres of marsh this fall, thanks to the state, private backers and a giant pump set up along the Republican River.

Geese, various breeds of ducks, muskrats, beaver and other water-loving animals are expected to make their homes in the new marshland developed by the Kansas Wildlife and Parks Department and Ducks Unlimited Inc.

"It's very unique that we can enhance what Mother Nature has done," said Ed Augustine, president of the Geary County Fish and Game Association and member of the state MARSH — Matching Aid to Restore State Habitat — committee.

"Some species like deep water, and they have the benefit of the whole reservoir," he said. "This area can be drained and reseeded if needed so plants and critters that live there can reestablish themselves."

The land, owned by the Corps of Engineers and under license to the state, lies in an arc-shaped swath of Kansas north of Milford Lake and has been divided into three sections.

The Beichter Bottom makes up 100 acres of land five miles north of Wakefield on the west side of the Republican River. The Smith Bottom is composed of 320 acres of land six miles northeast of Wakefield on the east side of the river. The Cane Creek Bottom is made up of 200 acres of land three miles north of Wakefield on the west side of the river.

And all of it is being pumped full of water from the nearby Republican.

Mark Mohler, a Wildlife and Parks management supervisor working on the project, said a system of natural levees had developed along the river.

By using those levees, plugging the drainages, installing stop-log structures that can be opened or closed to control the water level and then flooding behind the levees, a system of manageable wetlands was created.

A 160-horsepower engine is running a water pump that at maximum efficiency can take 10,000 gallons per minute out of the river and into the wetlands area.

The pump is the biggest expense in the $34,000 marsh creation project. Ducks Unlimited has donated $17,000, with the United States Fish and Wildlife Association reimbursing the state Wildlife and Parks Department for the rest.

Augustine said the water level in the marsh would vary from none in some spots to 3 or 4 feet, to suit various birds' and animals' needs.

The marshes saw their first hunting activity last weekend as teal season opened.

Mohler said he has seen several teal and has seen other varieties of ducks begin to move in to the new area.

But raising interest in duck-hunting is not the only benefit, Augustine said. The marshes will make a good holdover for waterfowl resulting in stronger, healthier birds.

"It just makes good sense to provide this kind of habitat in this day and age when wildlife habitat is declining," he said. "This area is going to be neat for a lot of different wildlife just for viewing. It will also be a natural habitat for eagles and things that prey on waterfowl."

Part of the Cane Creek bottom borders a wildlife refuge where no hunting is allowed.

For non-hunters, the new marsh itself and the refuge nearby mean more opportunities for wildlife-watching.

"There has been a tremendous economic benefit to any area that has one of these wetlands areas because people come to see them," said Augustine.

"I'm not talking about hunters, just people that want to see wildlife."

CD-ROM brings movies home

Microsoft Cinemania '95

of a possible 5 mice

Eric Westphal
contributing writer

In the shadow of Windows 95, Microsoft has a product on the market with actual value. You can now hit rental stores prepared.

Cinemania '95 provides you with entertaining and informative access of nearly 20,000 movie reviews. Along with its extensive review list, Cinemania includes more than 2,000 photographic portraits, 1,000 movie stills and 20 actual video clips. There are also more dialogue and music excerpts than ever before.

Cinemania includes the complete text from Leonard Maltin's "Movie and Video Guide 1995," Roger Ebert's "Video Companion," and Pauline Kael's "5,001 Nights at the Movies."

Every review tells you the parental rating, movie length and whether the film is available in color or black and white.

Still having trouble making a decision? Perhaps you should let Cinemania provide a suggestion.

Cinemania allows you to choose from more than 100 categories and will list all movies that correspond to your selected category. This feature is an entertaining and fast way to find the movie you're looking for.

If you're just looking for information about a particular movie, Cinemania is again the solution. Included is the entire list of Academy Awards for over 60 years.

Each year is broken down into every category, which helps you get right to the information you need.

Cinemania also has an interesting collection of biographies that provide information on more than 4,000 movie personalities.

In order to run Cinemania, you will need the following requirements: 386SX (or faster), 2MB of RAM, 5MB of available hard drive space, CD-ROM drive, sound card, Microsoft-compatible mouse or pointing device, VGA or higher-resolution monitor, DOS 3.1 (or later) and Windows 3.1 (or later).

The one area I would like to see improved is the quantity of actual movie clips. The live video is an excellent feature, and I feel more clips would be a great addition.

Overall, I was very impressed with Cinemania '95. The interface is attractive and user-friendly.

With Cinemania '95, the search for the movie is almost as entertaining as watching the movie itself.

Grow your own breasts

Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — While lawyers battle over the dangers of silicone breast implants, scientists are exploring a startling procedure that uses a woman's own cells to create tissue inside the breasts — in effect, a "grow-your-own" alternative.

The experimentation is years behind other substitutes for silicone that use vegetable fats and oils, but supporters said this technique doesn't permanently leave foreign substances in the body.

"We've been trying to outsmart the body's immune system. These fellows have come up with a concept that works with it," said James Martin, research director at Carolinas Medical Center. The experiments were begun last fall at the Charlotte, N.C.-based hospital and at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor.

In 1992, the Food and Drug Administration banned purely cosmetic silicone implants; the procedure is still available for cancer and other medical reasons.

If early work on laboratory animals succeeds, the researchers, within three to five years, will remove a tissue sample from somewhere in a woman's body, use it to grow additional cells in the lab, then implant the cells in the woman's breast.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Consumers shop on the Internet

Karrin Thomas
staff reporter

Shopping at home via computer is an increasingly viable option as many stores and customers are meeting on-line.

John Bunch, assistant professor of management, said this new form of shopping is gaining popularity.

"There is a lot of electronic commerce, but the size doesn't yet compare with TV and mail order, but it's growing quickly," he said. "It will eventually become a complimentary medium to mail order, telephone and television ordering."

Bunch said shopping on the Internet is experiencing 1,000-percent annual growth.

Some types of businesses have had more success with electronic commerce.

Although everything from clothes to furniture is available through on-line shopping, the medium seems to work best for publishing, information services and high-tech industries, such as computer hardware and software.

Business to business transactions are also successful over the Internet.

"Business to business transactions are going to become more common. That is the forefront of commerce," Bunch said.

Real estate is another business that can make good use of the Internet because people from across the country can access realtors in a places where they might be planning to move.

Dolly Anderson, owner of G&A Real Estate of Manhattan, has a page for her business on the World Wide Web.

"Hundreds of people look at it. What I was amazed at was that it showed me how many people are out there surfing the Net," she said.

Many people surfing the Net and shopping there are already familiar with the technology.

For many other people, access and trust are barriers to shopping on-line.

Although many of the commercial on-line services have shopping areas available, not everyone has a computer or lives somewhere with local access to phone lines.

NET SHOPPING

▶ The Internet Mall can be reached by pointing your Web browser to (http://www.mecklerweb.com:80/imall/)

Trust and the security of the transaction is a barrier for those who are not yet comfortable with the technology. There is fear that a third party can access credit-card numbers as they are sent across the net.

Bunch said many people have an interest in promoting the idea of insecure transactions because they want to sell software that makes it secure.

"All of these people are hyping the idea that someone might steal your card," he said. "There's not one recorded case right now where someone has grabbed the credit-card information as a third party from people who are doing business on the Internet."

There is a better chance of someone in a traditional transaction stealing a card number.

"It's easier to trace misconduct over the Internet than most other areas," Bunch said.

Most on-line shopping services have information about how they handle security of credit-card numbers.

Carolyn Wilken, assistant professor in the School of Family Studies and Human Services, has done some shopping over the net.

She said she let her nieces shop on her computer when they were visiting. One bought a sweater, and one ordered coffee.

"They had their stuff in less than a week, and it was just what they wanted," she said.

Wilken has since used her computer to order tickets from Ticketmaster.

"I could see a diagram of the venue on the screen so we were able to get better seats," she said.

sent to the restaurant. There, the order is processed and delivered.

Other types of local businesses have found the Web to be a useful medium for advertising their products and services.

Dolly Anderson, owner of G&A Real Estate Inc., put information about her business on the Web in June. A month later a couple planning to move to Manhattan saw her site, contacted her and are now preparing to move into their new home in Manhattan.

"I'm very happy with it," Anderson said.

"It did what I was hoping it would do."

Ordering flowers is another electronic shopping experience available to Manhattan.

Westloop Floral takes orders for floral deliveries over its Web site. Pictures of arrangements are on the page, and customers can fill out order forms and pay with a credit cards.

"I would say we've had good response to it," Karen Medlin, owner of Westloop Floral, said.

Some potential customers don't know that on-line shopping is available locally. Ryan Feldkamp, sophomore in accounting, said he wasn't aware that he could order pizza over the computer.

"I probably wouldn't use it because I'd just use a phone," he said.

However, the Manhattan home page gets plenty of attention. MegaMedia, the service provider for the page, can keep track of how many people look at a particular site.

Vanessa McCoy, marketing and promotions director for MegaMedia, said the page gets about 130,000 to 140,000 accesses per month.

AIRPORT

Bergren said U.S. Air Express averages about 1,500 people a month flying out of the airport.

Bergren said that during the last couple of years, she has seen a decrease of about 500 people a month flying out of Manhattan.

"I think the reason for fewer travelers using our airport is, quite simply, the fare structure is higher than they want to pay for," Black said.

Black said the cost for a round-trip ticket to Kansas City averages about $150.

If the traveler is connecting at Kansas City to fly elsewhere by the same airline, U.S. Air Express, the ticket is less expensive. The cost to fly from Manhattan and connect to another U.S. Air Express flight will cost about $30 in addition to the ticket price out of Kansas City.

The cost to connect to U.S. Air Express is competitive with the cost for a shuttle service that comes to Manhattan and then back to Kansas City.

The cost for KCI Roadrunner shuttle service is $35 one way and $59 round trip. It is about $5 less for K-State students with an ID.

"We are hoping that the construction of a new terminal will generate some publicity for the airport," Bergren said. "There are probably still some people in the surrounding area that don't even know we're here. The publicity could generate some awareness."

"The new terminal gives passengers a new facility," Black said. "We are more or less dedicated to that purpose."

The new airport is to be a larger, more efficient facility. With a larger facility comes possible room for another airline.

"We will hopefully acquire another carrier," McCallum said. "It is always our goal to expand and offer more services."

Black said the new terminal will have room for up to three airlines.

Bergren said if another airline moves in, it would most likely United Express.

"United Express is a different airline, but it is owned by the same company that owns us, Mesa," Bergren said. "I would expect fares to lower because if United Express moves in, they would provide flights to Denver."

U.S. Air Express only provides flights to Kansas City.

After the terminal is complete, the second part of the project includes a new parking lot and completion of the access road.

Black said that as part of the master plan, the 1997 forecast is an extension of the current taxiway all the way down to the end of the runway.

The current taxiway only runs about three-quarters of the way down the runway. This makes it awkward for pilots who have to wait for any other planes to take off or land before taxiing the rest of the way down the runway, only to turn around to take off.

"Hopefully, we can recapture the traveler, get him off the road and get him back into the airplane," Black said.

TEACHING

taking four weeks of classes at K-State to prepare her to enter the classroom, she will spend the next 12-1/2 weeks student teaching. Her first official day in the classroom was Monday.

By observing the classroom beforehand, Tague was able to preview the classes she would be working with while student teaching.

"They were very good. I was shocked. They all came in and sat down quietly. The teacher didn't even have to tell them when it was time to begin. She introduced me briefly and told them that they would be working on the poetry they had been working on. They got in their groups and started to work," Tague said.

"This is different from classes at K-State. You have to go. There is no option. I can't miss class now because it's a job."

KENA TAGUE
K-STATE SENIOR AND STUDENT TEACHER

During the second advanced sophomore English class, Tague had her first interaction with the students on a teaching level.

"Within the first 10 minutes of the class, a student came up to me because the teacher was helping another group and said, 'Ms. Tague, can you help us?' " she said.

"I felt really comfortable helping them out. This particular assignment involved writing a poem about movement, and they wanted to see if I could tell what they were writing about. I was really impressed with the quality of their poem."

Tague didn't begin her years at K-State with the idea of one day standing before a classroom teaching a room full of students.

"My debate teacher in high school encouraged me to teach. I always said that there would be no way. There was no money in it for the amount of stress and time it required. I came to college not wanting to teach at all," Tague said.

She said that she came to K-State after graduating from high school in Salina thinking she knew exactly what she wanted to study.

"I changed my major three times in my first three years here. I started out with journalism mass communications, then changed to political science, then philosophy and finally English," she said.

Once Tague was in the English department, she said she knew she was in the right place. The only problem was figuring out what to do with her love of English.

"I love kids, and education has always been super-important to me. I've always had the idealistic thought that education is pretty much the key to solving most of the problems the country is facing. One way or another, I want to teach English," Tague said.

Berland has five classes per day and one planning period. Tague said Berland is going to ease her into the teaching rather than dumping all five classes on her at once.

By the end of her day observing, Tague said she realized how much work it is to teach.

"She kept asking me if I was tired, and by the end of the day, I was. I began to realize that there really is no time between classes to get a drink of water or run to the bathroom. You just have to wait and do everything in your planning period," she said.

"I know that it is going to be really exhausting. This is different than classes at K-State. You have to go. There is no option. You have to go in the morning and be there all day. I can't miss a class now because it is a job. I used to run errands during the day, but you can't do that."

Although tired by the time the final bell rang, Tague said many of her fears had been laid to rest.

"I felt a lot better by the end of the day and much more relaxed. I had a good feeling about the teacher and the students. I'm not as worried now," Tague said.

"I feel like there is a really good match with my teacher. We have similar teaching philosophies. My greatest fear was getting a supervisory teacher that had a totally different philosophy. Now I know that things are going to be just fine."

CITY

Commissioner Justin Kastner said he supported the proposal and he thought it met the conditions of the fund.

Mayor Edith Stunkel did not participate in the discussion of the proposal. She said this was due to a conflict of interest. Stunkel works for the K-State Center for Aging and was a member of the retirement recruitment committee, which helped draft the proposal.

There are five conditions under which MEDOFAB will award money to a business. These conditions are for loans, seed and venture capitol, job incentives, grants and contingencies.

2L Inc., a Wichita-based company, has been the only application approved by the board. It received $200,000, which was approved by city commissioners about two months ago. The company also received a $125,000 loan, which will have to be paid back in 10 years.

In other business, Riley County Emergency Response Services might expand its emergency area to include part of Pottawatomie County.

Manhattan is in Pottawatomie and Riley counties. That means that if an accident were reported east of Tuttle Creek Boulevard, Pottawatamie emergency services would respond.

City commissioners voted 5-0 Tuesday night to authorize the mayor and city clerk to petition Riley and Pottawatomie county commissioners to agree on the expansion.

▶ CAMPUS-WIDE FORUM

Education will be topic of discussion

Jeni Pruitt
staff reporter

Critical changes in what will be taught and how it will be taught at K-State will be the subject of a campus-wide discussion Friday.

Creating the Environment for Institutional Change planning session will be at 1:30 p.m. Friday in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union.

The forum will set the stage for K-State President Jon Wefald's State of the University address that follows at 3:30 p.m.

Changes are being forced upon the University because state funds for higher education are decreasing and K-State's enrollment is expected to jump to 25,000, a 13-percent increase.

The changes will affect the entire University so faculty, students and staff are encouraged to attend.

"We have no choice but to make fundamental changes in the way we educate students," John Havlin, Faculty Senate president, said. "If we make these changes and do it in a way that will enhance education, I think our state legislators will take a second look about funding higher education."

In a Faculty Senate meeting last week, several faculty members voiced concern that decisions about these changes had already been made, and the forum would not be a time of open discussion about possible solutions.

"Regardless of what the perception is, the strategic planning process has not begun discussing solutions yet," Curtis Kastner, Strategic Planning Committee chairman, said. "We want to give them information in this meeting so that they can not only listen and be informed, but also so that they will be able to ask questions and offer solutions.

"The forum is structured in a way that will allow such a discussion," he said.

Five members from the strategic planning committee, created three years ago to gather perspectives about how to enhance education, will speak about the need to create an environment for institutional change.

The meeting will then be opened for discussion.

Since almost 90 percent of the University's budget is directed toward the faculty, re-engineering faculty time will be at the heart of the discussion, Havlin said.

"We must look at how we spend our time, what we teach and how we teach it," Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said.

Utilizing technology and restructuring faculty responsibilities are solutions expected to be offered.

Since half of the elementary and secondary schools' classrooms will be on-line by the end of this year, future freshmen at K-State will be used to accessing information through the Internet, Krause said.

"We must take advantage of technologies like the Internet and video classes," Krause said. "This is a major way to free up dollars and accomplish more efficient teaching."

However, many students are worried that an increase in technology would sacrifice student-teacher relationships.

"The changes must be made in a way that will enhance education," Brad Finkeldei, student body vice

Forum addresses bikes

Collegian staff

An all-University bike fair is in the works and scheduled for Wednesday, Oct. 4.

Dwain Archer, director of Parking Services, announced the bike fair during a Mortar Board forum Wednesday.

The fair, organized by the bicycle sub-committee of Parking Council, will be at the K-State Student Union Courtyard and include three local venders, Archer said.

Students will also be able to register their bikes throughout the fair, he said.

The free registration will include a decal, which displays the Power Cat logo. The Parking Council and bicycle sub-committee are still debating whether the decals will be legitimate for one year, or five years, Archer said.

Archer said the decals will be difficult to steal because of their material.

"It would be tough to steal them since they are made of thin material which destructs easily if tampered with," Archer said.

Bike registration is going smoothly and Parking Services plans to have all bicycles on campus registered and decaled by the first of November, Archer said.

"Registering bikes gives us an opportunity to retrieve them if stolen," he said.

Between 40 and 50 stolen bicycles were auctioned by the police last year, because they were not registered.

Other topics discussed at the forum Wednesday included:

■ Due to the increased University use of e-mail, a committee is researching the possibility of installing every residence hall room with wiring to a properly designated network, Charles Reagan, executive assistant to the President, said.

"Forty percent of the students come to school with their own computers," Reagan said.

■ Farrell Library's construction is on schedule, Karen Cole, associate dean of University Libraries, said.

"The construction at Farrell Library should be complete by the beginning of 1997," Cole said.

Also, a new computer system is being installed at the library to offer students an expanded choice of resources.

"We are installing a new library system, which integrates Lynx and the on-line catalog, with other libraries around the nation," Cole said.

The new system will allow students to reserve books electronically and access the library from an on or off-campus location.

■ K-State enrollment could soon be possible by touch-tone telephone, Reagan said.

"We are reviewing offers from a company. We need at least a year from now to set up the system," he said.

■ Linear fee payment, which takes effect fall 1996, will not increase the cost of tuition for students, Sue Peterson, director of Governmental Relations, said.

"With the linear fee-payment system, students will not pay any more than the old system," Peterson said. "The linear fee payment is more accurate for our dealings with the state and legislature."

■ The Academic Learning Center, which is a $1-million facility, should be completed by May 1996, Veryl Switzer, associate director of Intercollegiate Athletics said. The facility will include a computer center, a library, group-meeting and study rooms.

■ The University is currently working to transform the campus to accommodate non-traditional students, Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said.

"We don't have enough resources, but we are willing to hear ideas on ways of doing it," Franklin said.

■ Job openings created as result of manufacturing plant

Brent Johnson
staff reporter

The first volume manufacturing plant for electric automobiles in the world is coming to Manhattan, bringing with it the potential of more than 100 high-paying jobs.

Along with producing the electric-powered Ford trucks, the Troy Design and Manufacturing Co. plant will manufacture specialized parts, train employees and others in the field of alternative fuel vehicles and conduct research on alternative fuel vehicles and other automobile features.

TDM TROY DESIGN & MANUFACTURING CO.

Bill Coppola, managing director of electric vehicle development for TDM of Redford, Mich., said the company will be hiring 99 percent of the employees for the new plant from Manhattan.

In the first year, the plant will hire 52 to 67 new employees with a total projected payroll between $2.21 million and $3.27 million.

Production-line workers could make $17 an hour, Coppola said.

Coppola also said the plant will create jobs outside the plant. For every 100 jobs within the plant, about 78 spin-off jobs will be created outside the plant.

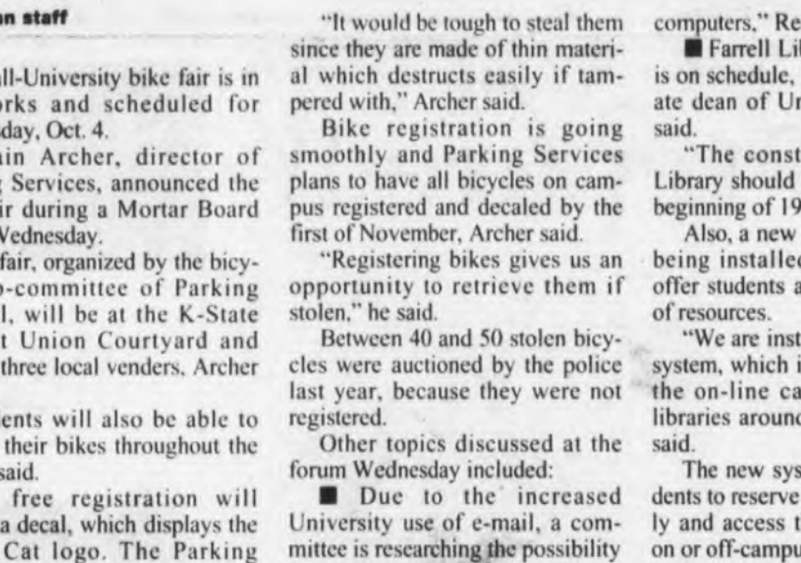
TDM will have local businesses manufacture parts and supplies for TDM. This means those local businesses will need to hire people to help it fill the demand.

Coppola said it will be looking to hire college graduates with experience in quality operating systems. Jobs for mechanical and electrical engineers will also be available.

"I can see job potential for K-State students," Coppola said. "I can conceivably see students working at the plant their third and fourth years in school in cooperation with K-State and continuing into long-term careers with TDM."

TDM has a deadline with Ford to have the plant in Manhattan open and ready, certified to manufacture and produce a vehicle by Feb. 15.

"We wanted to start construction yesterday," said Dale Stinson, director for economic development for the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, in an effort to show the urgency to start this effort.



TDM has a minimum order from Ford to manufacture 2,000 Rangers. The Ford contract set a deadline to have the first salable Ranger finished by March 31.

There were many key elements needed in order to bring TDM to Manhattan. The Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund Advisory Board

Student financial aid affected by cut

James Dierking
staff reporter

K-State students face losing almost $8 million in financial aid during the next seven years, if financial-aid cuts are passed by Congress.

"Those students would have to rely more heavily on loans and part-time jobs," Larry Moeder, director of financial aid, said. "Students may persist, but it may take them longer."

In January, Republicans introduced "Contract With America." The contract, sponsored by Newt Gingrich, speaker of the House of Representatives, R-Ga., would make changes in a series of government operations.

INVESTIGATION CONTINUES

K-State football coach Bill Snyder has not commented on the story reported in Tuesday's Collegian regarding a criminal investigation of members of the football team.

"I will maybe at some point, but not yet," Snyder said.

Police say the investigation continues and should be concluded by the end of this week.

▶ DEMOCRATS SUPPORT VOTE TO DISMANTLE FEDERAL WELFARE SYSTEM

WASHINGTON — Con-gressional Republicans are optimistic they can send President Clinton a bill this fall that imposes the first-ever time limit on welfare benefits. This comes despite sharp differences between House and Senate versions for overhauling anti-poverty programs.

With solid support from Democrats, the Senate voted 87-12 on Tuesday to dismantle the federal welfare system and end the New Deal guarantee to provide a subsistence income to millions of single mothers and their children.

Eleven Democrats and a single Republican, conservative North Carolina Sen. Lauch Faircloth, voted against the bill, which Faircloth has called nothing more than a pot of Pablum. Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., did not vote.

The House passed its version of welfare reform in March, in its whirlwind action on the Republican "Contract With America," and picked up only a handful of Democratic votes as it also agreed to abolish Aid to Families with Dependent Children.

House and Senate negotiators must resolve the differences between the two bills.

▶ 6-YEAR-OLD STABS PLAYMATE

MODESTO, Calif. — A 6-year-old girl stabbed a 7-year-old playmate in the back with a steak knife in a fight concerning Barbie dolls, police said.

The older girl was hospitalized in serious condition Monday with a 2 1/2-inch-deep wound.

The girls got into a hair-pulling, name-calling fight over the dolls, Lt. Tim Atchley said. The 6-year-old girl told her friend she was going to kill her, went home and returned to her friend's apartment with a knife, he said.

Police questioned the younger girl, and released her to her parents. Atchley said little can be done because of the girl's age.

"Our society is becoming more and more violent every day," he said. "It's bad enough to see 14 and 15-year-olds inflict unimaginable kinds of bodily harm on each other."

▶ SERB FORCES NEAR DEADLINE

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Washington's push for peace in the Balkans hangs in the balance as government and Croatian forces seriously squeeze the Serbs for the first time.

The Serbs, meanwhile, have until tonight to pull back their heaviest guns from around Sarajevo under an agreement reached with U.S. envoy Richard C. Holbrooke last week.

Holbrooke, who has shuttled around the Balkans for days to keep his peace effort alive, said late Tuesday that he had encouraging news from Sarajevo, but refused to give details. He left for Washington late Tuesday night.

NATO airstrikes that crippled Serb communication systems were called off last Thursday to allow the Serbs time to meet demands to withdraw the guns from around the city they have besieged for 3 1/2 years.

The initial deadline expired Sunday night but was extended.

Artist's style receives recognition

Jennifer Cawley
staff reporter

"You have no style."

Imagine being told that as a young artist. Imagine getting excited for the arrival of a famous female artist from San Francisco, driving more than an hour to hear her speak, proudly showing her your portfolio and then being told ...

"You have no style. You need to get a style."

That is what happened to Barbara Rutherford, graduate student in fine arts.

So instead of following a traditional style, she invented her own and as her winning postcard proved, it worked.

"Some people were telling me that I didn't have a style," Rutherford, said. "What they were really telling me was to get a cliché."

Rutherford recently received recognition as one of the 16 winners in the Kansas Artist's Postcard Competition, Series XVIII.

With a combination of photography, paint and fragmented poetry, her postcard has a style uniquely her own.

So much her own style that, in fact, she created her own undergraduate degree in mixed media.

John O'Shea, assistant professor of art, was instrumental in helping her apply her different interests into one major, Rutherford said.

"She has her own peculiar vision and combines pictures that are important to her with words that are important to her," O'Shea said.

It was also important that the viewer receives something out of her work. For the postcard competition, she tried to let the viewer put his or her own experiences into the piece.

> "I think I wanted to show my life as a Kansan. I wanted something more that people can relate to as another Kansan."
> BARBARA RUTHERFORD
> GRADUATE STUDENT IN FINE ARTS

"I think I wanted to show my life as a Kansan," Rutherford said. "I wanted something more that people can relate to as another Kansan."

All of these aspects were created in a truck on the way to Salina in a rush to beat the 5 p.m. entry deadline for the competition.

Although she had been included in the touring collection of last year's competition, she was surprised that her last-minute entry won.

But unlike her winning postcard, "Watermark of the Soul,"the development of her individual style did not happen overnight.

Rutherford, 36, has spent most of her life in Manhattan.

She was encouraged in art by her mother, who paints, and has learned to appreciate the art in the work of her father, a welder, and her younger brother, who does body work on cars.

In high school, her interest in art peaked as a photographer for her newspaper and yearbook staff.

"I got in the darkroom, made my first print and never turned back," she said.

In the summer of 1993, she bought a $10 plastic camera and started taking pictures of her neighbor's Dalmatian.

She put those first shots together with words and paint, and suddenly, her new media was born.

"Using color and turning back to photography can give a clear content to my work. The photo becomes the content," she said.

The postcard competition was organized by the Association of Community Arts Agencies of Kansas.

A jury selected 16 winners and nine more pieces to become part of the nation's largest collection of art exclusively devoted to Kansas artists.

"People really appreciate that the postcard series is a cross-section of Kansas artistic talent you don't see anywhere else," Ellen Morgan, ACAAK's executive director, said.

Lofty entry wins contest

Tonya Bobbitt

A pass-me-down loft stole first place at the West Hall loft contest this week.

Sarah Powell, freshman in business, won the loft construction contest that was sponsored by the West Hall Governing Board. Powell's loft was given to her by her brother, who had previously used it in the residence halls.

Entering her space-saving loft in the contest was a last-minute decision, Powell said.

"I was talking to a friend at the front desk and a person came to enter the contest," Powell said. "There was only one other person entering, so I decided to sign up and I was surprised that I won."

The contest was a way to help residents learn more about the Hall Governing Board, Danielle Paris, junior in business and pre-law, said.

Paris, West Hall's HGB vice president, said the contest was also a way residents could get to know each other and participate in future projects.

"This was our first social event," Paris said. "It was a way to let residents learn about HGB and what we do. Also, it was a way to get residents involved."

Jessika Kiser, senior in criminology, and West Hall HGB president, said the lofts were judged by four main criteria: creativity, beauty, originality and overall appearance.

"We took pictures of the lofts and the Loft Committee chose the ones that they thought were the best," Kiser said.

There were prizes given to first-, second- and third-place winners.

First prize was a pinata, second place was an insulated mug from the Derby bakery and bakery coupons and the third-place winner received bakery coupons.

Lofts are very popular in the residence halls because the space is very limited, said Christine Wiese, sophomore in elementary education and fourth floor resident assistant.

"It's a way to create more floor space in a room, by elevating the bed on a wooden structure," Wiese said. "It's very similar to a bunk bed."

Lofts save space because they allow the bed to be lifted off the ground and increase floor space, she said.

Building a legal loft

These are some specifications for setting up a loft in the residence halls.

Smoke detectors should have free ventilation.

Materials must have a flame spread number of no greater than 75.

Regular beds can only be bunked to the height of 70 feet to the top mattress. Sleeping lofts, or any beds on platforms larger than 4 feet by 8 feet, are not permitted.

No construction will be allowed 1 foot to either side or 3 feet directly in front of heat convectors.

Kassebaum's proposed charge limits education

The 2-percent charge, if passed, would force K-State to pay more than $1 million in federal financial-aid charges, according to the K-State Financial Aid Office.

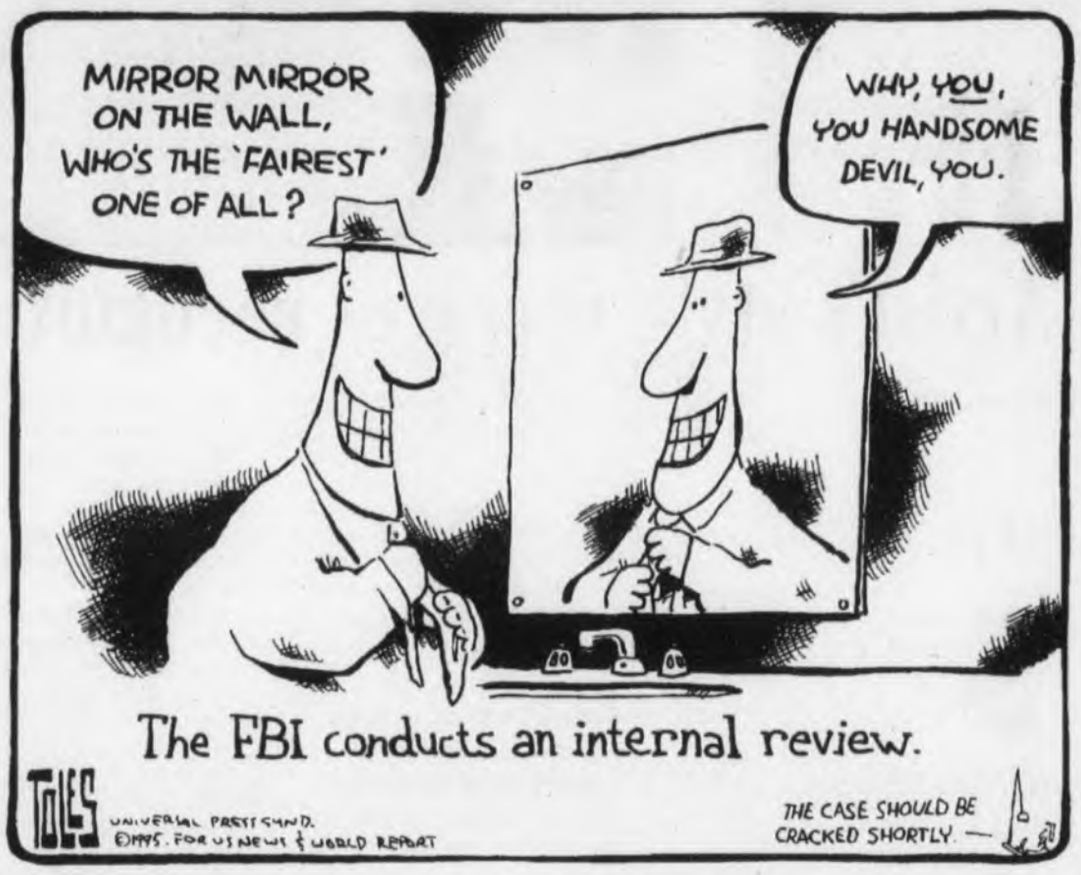
Tuesday, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, chairwoman of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, proposed adding a 2-percent charge to colleges and universities on all federal loans their students receive.

The new charge would raise $4.4 billion of the $10.1 billion the Kansas Republican's committee is required to save over seven years as part of the Republican's "Contract With America."

The 2-percent charge, if passed, would force K-State to pay more than $1 million in federal financial-aid charges, according to the K-State Financial Aid Office.

According to the Sept. 20 edition of the Topeka Capital Journal, Ed Elmendorf, vice president for governing relations of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, said the proposal was stupid.



Essentially, in a time when University enrollment is increasing — and state funding is decreasing — the government has found another way to stretch America's educational limits.

Kassebaum is forgetting that millions of American students need federal loans to receive a higher education.

If colleges and universities are forced to pay a 2-percent charge for their students' federal aid, then it is doubtless that universities will not push their students to take loans. Therefore, low-income and middle-class students will not enjoy the encouragement they have in the past from enrollment recruiters.

Needless to say, Kassebaum's 2-percent charge is stupid. Colleges and universities cannot afford it, students cannot afford it and America cannot afford it.

Solve youth's problems with athletic supporters

Recently, while participating in the traditional American Saturday afternoon pastime, which is to go to Wal-Mart and spend large quantities of money for garage-sale stuff, my second-grader, Dustin, encountered an interesting item in men's apparel (and I am NOT making this up):

Dustin: "Hey Dad, look as this weird softball holster."

Me: "That's what is called an athletic supporter."

Dustin: "You mean like when we go to football games and you yell, "WHAT'S THE MATTER REF, YOU GOT YOUR HEAD UP YOUR ATHLETIC SUP —-?"

ME: "That's enough Dustin."

Dustin: " ... and Mommy is crawling under the stadium seats trying to hide, and ..."

Me: "I SAID THAT IS ENOUGH DUSTIN! That's not what I mean."

Dustin: "And look at THESE holsters ... they even come with a special face-mask."

Me: "Take it off your face, son — that's a protective, plastic cup. You wear it like you wear underwear, only this is for when you play sports. The cup is used to protect you when the ball takes a bad bounce, or when you pat another player on the butt and he takes it the wrong way, or when you momentarily suffer a minor catastrophic brain hemorrhage and absentmindedly comment to your wife that she looks like she is putting on a little weight."

Dustin: "Wow! Now THIS would make a great sling-shot (lets fly with a package of tubesocks into women's lingerie)!"

Me (to my other son): "LET'S RUN FOR IT BEFORE THE SECURITY GUARDS GET HERE!"

Newspaper headline: "7-year-old holds SWAT team at bay with athletic supporter and an unlimited supply of tubesocks."

You probably read about it. It wasn't a pretty sight.

All I can say is I warned them not to go in after him. After all, what did they think they could really do to a 7-year-old kid completely covered from head to toe with protective, athletic cups?

Fortunately, Wal-Mart officials arranged a deal through the SWAT team's crisis negotiator wherein my son could have a year's supply of candycorn for free if he would just put down the athletic supporter and come out.

I figure Wal-Mart got off easy. In these situations, my son normally settles for a much larger quantity of free goods and services — like 50 percent of the company's gross profit or the executive jet, whichever is greater.

BRAD SEABOURN

However, this naturally occurring shopping adventure brings to mind what I perceive to be THE problem in our education system. Contrary to the belief of Newt Gingrich and the Religious Reich, who feel prayer is the major, moral factor lacking in our school system today, my personal opinion is that there is only one thing that will keep a kid on the moral "straight-and-narrow": an athletic supporter.

Prayer doesn't hold a candle to a good athletic supporter.

And, you can imagine my concern when I recently learned that our public school system no longer requires young men to wear athletic supporters in gym class.

THIS IS AN OUTRAGE! (Can I have an "Amen?")

The traditional wearing of the athletic supporter is just one of a countless number of "family values" that has gone by the wayside during the last 40 years.

If this tradition goes the way of so many other "Leave it to Beaver" values, like saying "Yes, Ma'am" or "Yes, Sir," when spoken to, or offering to drive your date home and walk her to the door after a heavy make-out session in the backseat of your dad's Chevy, then we are a country whose existence is doomed, doomed, DOOMED!

A young man's first athletic supporter is a significant event in his physical and mental development.

Why, I can still remember the first time I strapped one on in the locker room of my old-grade school gym — the snug feeling of fine, strong elastic; the chiseled, statuesque look it gave my young, sinewy physique; the incredible whiplash when Johnny Dugersmeir pulled back on the strap roughly 683.27 feet and let go, causing my athletic supporter (with me still in it) to reach warp factor nine without actually going anywhere.

Yes, I remember the effectiveness of the "jockstrap wedgie" in keeping unruly members of the team on the moral path to righteousness. What we need in schools today are MORE athletic supporters.

You would see a marked change in our youth's behavior (and singing range) if the consistent use of athletic supporters were actively encouraged and strictly enforced.

Dustin: "Hey Dad, look at what I am going to wear in gym class this year — an athletic supporter!"

My wife (looking concerned): "Brad, do you think he is old enough to wear one of those THINGS?"

Me: "I think it's a great idea! However, whatever you do, don't send him to school with any tubesocks."

Life loses value because of abortion

Although the presidential elections are more than a year away, many candidates have already hit the campaign trail.

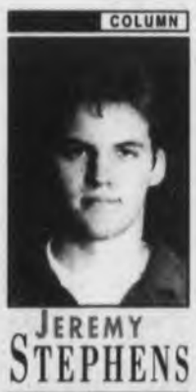
Many of them talk about their stand on the issues, some of them tell sob stories about budget cuts, and pseudo-candidate Colin Powell can talk for hours without saying anything.

However, the one thing the candidates don't talk about is the issue of abortion.



I was recently watching a clip of a tour stop made by Bob Dole. While he was mingling with the crowd, a woman approached and asked him what his stand was on abortion. Following a response that was full of um's and uh's, Dole moved away from the woman at a speed greater than any 70-year-old I have ever seen.

Why is it that abortion is the non-issue of choice for politicians? In last year's elections, not a single pro-life incumbent candidate for Congress was defeated, yet a pro-life stance is usually avoided by this year's crop of candidates.

During most discussions of abortion, one argument made by those in favor of it is that it is a woman's choice and that no laws should be passed that prevent a woman from controlling her body.

However, virtually every law ever passed regulates what a woman can do with her body, yet there are no protests in the streets against prohibiting women from committing murder.

The question is not whether there will be laws that govern what women can do with their bodies, but rather, what they will be.

COLUMN

JEREMY STEPHENS

The entire issue of abortion centers around whether an unborn human is a human.

If it is indeed human, then laws protecting a human's right to live would apply to it, or at least moral outrage equal to that expressed over the Jewish Holocaust because more unborn humans have been exterminated than the number of Jews who died during that period.

Many say a fetus is just another kind of tissue matter and that a woman can dispose of her tissue matter any way she chooses to, thus legitimizing abortion.

However, this same tissue has a heartbeat, can move on its own, feels pain, and produces electrical activity in the brain before it is born. I am not aware of any forms of tissue that can perform these activities without having a life of their own.

Thus, to claim disposing of the fetus is legitimate because a woman should have the right to do with her body what she wants to is not a valid reason to legitimize abortion.

For those who support abortion on this basis, please do not write me off simply because I'm trying to tell you what to do or I'm forcing my morality on someone.

There is no way around forcing one's beliefs on others. To support legalized abortion is to force your opinion on someone, and to oppose it is to force your opinion on someone. The question is: Who is right?

The woman who fought to be able to obtain an abortion in the case of Roe vs. Wade recently recanted her position on abortion and encourages women not to have abortions simply because the babies they are carrying are unwanted.

Although this does not undo the court's decision, it is the highlight of a trend in this country to fight legalized abortion on demand.

Since the court approved abortion in the early 1970s, there has been a decline in the value of life. Crime has been on the rise and now murder cases are covered on national television with most of the attention focused on bickerings between lawyers.

Little attention has been paid to the fact that two lives were lost. This is not surprising.

Society has become so desensitized to the value of life that most people don't even think about Nicole Simpson and Ron Goldman, but whether or not O.J. is guilty.

I am not saying mothers with unexpected pregnancies should have to raise their child to pay for their mistakes.

There are other options besides abortion, including adoption. I do not say this lightly.

A friend of mine who is dealing with an unplanned pregnancy has had to consider these things and decided to keep the child.

It will not be easy for her, but it is better than being on her conscience for the rest of her life.

Abortion on demand should be restricted because the right to life supersedes all other rights, including a claim to privacy.

Less than 10 percent of all abortions are performed because of rape or incest, and a national pro-life group reported that one in three babies die because of abortion.

"There is no way around forcing one's beliefs on others."
JEREMY STEPHENS

Every time an abortion is performed, there is a chance that a life could have gone on to cure cancer or end world hunger.

Think about it. An unborn human is still a human.

Editor,

Kevyn Jacobs is always accusing many of us of stereotyping gays, and now he adds drug users to this list. I suggest that he himself is just as guilty of stereotyping.

For instance, he says some laws are " ... absurd, puritanical laws that everyone breaks ... sodomy laws, under-21 drinking ages and 65 mph speed limits ... "

Excuse me, Kevyn. Everyone? I am sure the vast majority of your readers have not broken at least one of these laws, and that quite a few have not broken any of them.

Kevyn, since you're so diligent in informing all of us of so many intimate details of your personal life, why not let us all know the next time you'll be driving out on the highways? Many of us can then choose to stay off the roads to avoid your 95 mph self-imposed speed limit.

▶ SWIM MEET COVERAGE

Editor,

I'm writing you as a concerned student and avid reader of the Collegian. I'm not a greek. Forgive me for not conforming.

I'm not at all disappointed in the lack of coverage of the intramural swimming competition. In fact, I'm glad you ran that article on the Navajo Community College cross country team. OK, so there weren't any spectacular school records in the article, but so what? The article was about athletes, not a bunch of whining, beer-drinkin', fast-food-eatin' frat boys.

And David Frintchen, not all fraternities are looked upon in a negative view.

I realize the greek system does quite a bit of community work, and that's great. Please, please, please quit whining.

You've still got the Greek Times. Everyone will see your picture and realize what a cool, athletic house you have. Women will flock to the home of the two-time defending swimming champs.

I'll stay home and read the paper.

the newest bar in the 'Ville

An old location has a new name and atmosphere

Story by Kimberly Kircher
Photos by Tye Derrington

12th Street Pub is Aggieville's newest addition to its variety of bars. The pub, which opened last month, is located at 615 12th street.

Same location, different look and atmosphere.

For those students and alumni who remember Kite's Bar and Grill, the addition of a new bar in Aggieville might bring back memories. It's located where Kite's used to be.

The 12th Street Pub is partly owned and operated by a K-State student, Tyler Olson, senior in marketing.

Even though he works between 80 and 90 hours a week, Olson doesn't seem to mind the time spent in the bar.

"The hardest thing right now is keeping up with school," Olson said. "I enjoy working so many hours at the pub because it is mine."

The idea and researching for the bar all started around a year and a half ago.

"At first I was a little overwhelmed with the cost," Olson said. "Finding out how much we needed to gross made me a little nervous and stressed."

There are three equal owners of the pub; Olson, Mike Robinson, graduate of Emporia State in management, and Olson's mother.

"Mike and I have been friends forever, and we have always talked about opening a bar together," Olson said.

Robinson has owned a bar before.

"While attending school I owned a bar in Emporia and sold it last year" Robinson said. "With Kite's closed down there seemed room for another bar in Aggieville, and we wanted to create our own niche."

Olson said the pub's target clientele is everyone from the corporate business professional to college students, from families to K-State professors and alumni.

While the research for the bar began earlier, the actual process began when Robinson and Olson bought the building space about nine months ago, and construction began about six months ago.

Opening a bar is not as easy as it may look.

"The building was completely gutted, and starting fresh was good," Olson said.

"We wanted the focus to be on the bar — the bar being accessible from all sides so we can get the drinks out as fast as possible."

Some of the work involved hiring an architect, a menu consultant, an advertiser and an interior designer.

"We went to the Farrell Library archives to look up old pictures of campus for the pub," Olson said.

"When we were designing the interior, we wanted an atmosphere that anyone would feel comfortable in. The wood and brick makes the place more like home."

Getting ready to open was a task, but opening week was more hectic and busier for the pub.

"Trial and error was what we went by the first week," Olson said, "We found what was good and what we needed to change."

The wait staff was one of the biggest concerns.

"The inconsistency of the clientele was one of the hardest things for the wait staff," Robinson said. "Getting used to the routine takes time."

Now that a couple of weeks have gone by since opening, the staff members said they find work easier.

"It was hard because I have never waited tables before," Diane Grosko, senior in accounting and waitress, said. "Plus, there was about four hours of training for the servers.

"There was a lot of confusion at first, and now it is unbelievable how organized everything is."

Grosko said that she has watched Olson as he has gotten his feet wet in the ownership business, and said owning a business matures a person.

"Owning the pub makes you grow up and what you learn is extraordinary," Grosko said.

Robinson said the advice and criticisms he receives are great.

"We are young and have a lot to learn," he said.

Reactions to the pub have been mixed but mostly on the positive side, Olson said.

"Most of our complaints have been about the food, and we are working everyday to improve the menu," Olson said.

But what about the damages that every bar faces from a late-night crowd?

"It is pleasing to find respect from the customers, and plus, the crowd seems older and like the sit-down drinking type," Olson said.

Customers do seem to enjoy the pub's atmosphere.

"The place is real with a good atmosphere to meet people," Brett Robinson, junior in arts and science undecided, said.

Brett Robinson said he has a different view about the clientele.

"I think 12th Street Pub is geared toward the greeks and young college people," he said. "I just turned 21, and it is probably my favorite place to go. "

So what is the next step for Olson and the 12th Street Pub?

"First is graduation in May, and I want to buy my mother's share of the pub," Olson said.

Olson said he would like to research building space in other college towns in the Big 12 Conference, in order to focus on a similar market. The possibility exists that the two might open similar bars in the future.

"Mike and I want to open more pubs, restaurants and bars in the future, but for now we are playing it by ear," Olson said.

Meegan Miller, senior in speech pathology, pours a beer for a patron at 12th St. Pub early Wednesday evening. Aggieville's newest addition has several different types of beer on tap.

12st Street Pub, which occupies the space formerly used by Kite's Bar and Grill, offers a casual atmosphere with a full-service lunch and dinner menu during the day and a social environment at night.

The Aspen (Colo.) Daily News recently ran a front-page story about a local woman who reportedly put 37 men in nearby hospitals in one night with symptoms ranging from bleeding hickies to sexual exhaustion.

The problem with the story was that it was written as a joke for the reporter's girlfriend, but it somehow made it into the copy chain. However, producers from the Jerry Springer Show are still said to be trying to scrounge up this woman's phone number for a show with the topic "I'm a Newspaper Nymphomaniac!"

Obese rock singer Meatloaf claims to have had a premonition about a helicopter accident that took the lives of two people during the filming of his latest music video.

He said he had an unusual fear of a helicopter he had ridden in the night before the video shoot. He boarded it anyway, but it crashed just after he got off.

Investigators may be looking into whether Meatloaf's disembarking from the aircraft caused an uneven distribution of weight in the helicopter, causing it to lose control and crash into nearby power lines.

New playoff system good for baseball

Baseball is a funny game.

We're coming down the home stretch, and for those of you who still give a rat's behind about baseball, things aren't quite decided yet.

Yes, the fat lady has yet to sing, and we actually have a reason for keeping an eye on the pennant race. This is all due to the new alignment and the expanded playoff structure implemented last year. (It was implemented last year, but, of course, it was never used because of the strike.)

COLUMN

KELBY SCHERER

When the idea — realigning the teams into three divisions and having a playoff system to determine the world champion — first came out, I thought it would be a bad move for baseball.

I am a baseball traditionalist. I disliked it when they put lights up at Wrigley Field, and I don't care for the designated hitter. So as a baseball traditionalist, I rebuked the idea of changing a system that had been used for such a long period of time. I, at first, thought the new alignment was the dumbest idea I had ever heard.

But now that the season is coming to a close, I have changed my view.

If you were to put this season into the old alignment, it would be a whole different ballgame. There would be a close race in the National League East, but all the teams would be under .500. Cleveland and Atlanta wouldn't have clinched their division titles yet, but it would be doubtful that anyone would catch up. Colorado, Los Angeles, Houston, Boston, the New York Yankees, Seattle, and our very own Kansas City Royals would have no chance of making the playoffs.

In essence, the regular season would be over.

Normally, the divisions have theoretically (though not always mathematically) been determined by this point in the season. The four teams that are getting ready for the playoffs try to fill a few holes in the roster with last minute trades, while the rest of the league starts playing around with bringing up new prospects and thinking about the next season.

Most of the players don't play with much intensity anymore, and the fans just don't pay much attention to the games until playoff time. I don't know about you, but I am one who always likes a close game and a close pennant race. I still want my favorite team to win, but fun and excitement are gone from the fans, the players, and the games when one team is just walking away with the title.

This season there is one divisional race worth watching — that is if you even care about Colorado and L.A. But for those of you who still shun the playoff system, take a look at what it is doing for the fans (the few fans who care about baseball anymore) and the players.

There is a one game difference between four teams in the American League and a relatively close race between five teams in the National League — all teams who would otherwise be out of the running in the old alignment — for the wild card spot.

The players are playing every game as if every team was tied for first in their division, and coaches can't just start toying around with new players and team changes as if they were out of the race.

Everyone has to continue to concentrate on every game that is left.

Now some people would say the wild card spot is worthless because the team that qualifies will be too weak to compete and will get knocked out easily in the first round. Not necessarily true.

In future seasons there may be two dominant teams in the same division, but, as you know, only one team can win. What if that second place team only loses the division by one game? It would be a shame to that such a good team was done for the season while another division winner, which may be weaker, goes on to the playoffs. The wild card, which the second place team will most likely win, allows that team to try and prove it in the playoffs.

And, every team, no matter how weak they may appear, has a chance. The funny thing about baseball, or any sport for that matter, is that any given day any given team can win. The Braves are thought to be a powerhouse, but they haven't won the World Series yet. If you don't understand that just watch the NCAA basketball tournament for a while or how about Northwestern against Notre Dame? There is always a team who can and will defy the odds.

Cleveland is said to be the "best in baseball" right now, but Seattle and New York have beat them before. So what's keeping them from doing it in the playoffs?

The simple fact is that the new alignment and playoff system have brought new life to baseball. Teams in the wild-card race are fighting for one spot all the way to the end of the season.

I think the momentum from the win will carry over to the playoffs and may catch Cleveland or Atlanta, who are cruising along at this point, by surprise. They may not beat Cleveland or Atlanta, but they will at least put up a good fight. A team like the Yankees could very easily be on a hot streak and simply out play Cleveland.

Remember, baseball is a funny game.

NU's Benning not charged

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — It was supposed to be a banner year for Nebraska running back Damon Benning, playing just behind a Heisman Trophy contender on one of the top offensive teams in the country.

The junior from Omaha was looking forward to plenty of playing time for the second-ranked Cornhuskers at tailback and on special teams. He wanted to better the 367 yards he had last year playing behind star Lawrence Phillips.

Then came a nagging hamstring injury that kept him off the travel roster for the Sept. 9 game at Michigan State. Then things got worse for Benning and for the defending national champions.

Hours before Nebraska kicked off that morning, Benning was arrested after an argument with his former girlfriend. He was booked on suspicion of third-degree assault, a misdemeanor. He had to wait days for a prosecutor to clear his name by announcing no charges would be filed.

For Benning, who said three days before the Michigan State game he couldn't wait to show his big-play ability if he could just shake the hamstring injury, there was relief.

For Coach Tom Osborne, who had stood by Benning, there was vindication.

"I told you a week ago what the deal was," Osborne told reporters. "I had no doubt that this would happen.

"I don't know how many of you are parents, but you can imagine how it is to have a child and feel like he hadn't done anything and have the name splashed all around the country as an assault artist or whatever."

The incident with Benning didn't make the front page or newscasts at first, but then Phillips was arrested Sept. 10 for hitting his ex-girlfriend and a media blitz followed. Benning found himself in a very unwanted spotlight.

Stories had linked Phillips and Benning as if playing tailback at Nebraska bred criminal behavior and violence toward women.

The issue flared again this week with word that a third tailback, sophomore James Sims, faces a Nov. 7 trial date for disturbing the peace after a run-in with a former girlfriend.

Benning said he only tried to restrain his former girlfriend from entering his apartment.

His father, Don, blasted the media for leaping to conclusions. He said stories of his son's vindication should be treated with the same vigor and thoroughness as was the story of his arrest.

Professor Hugh Cowdin, who teaches a mass media ethics course at the University of Nebraska at Omaha, said Nebraska football players are considered public figures by reporters. He also said news media have problems balancing aggressive reporting and solid news judgment.

"I think there is an ethical problem with reporting complaints that are filed so quickly, and some later turn out to be a hoax," Cowdin said.

"Even when these things are de-emphasized — printed on the back page, for example — they still hold up a person's reputation for all to see."

It has been Osborne's reputation under scrutiny since Phillips' arrest. Like many Nebraska players have in the last two weeks, Benning defended his coach.

"He (Osborne) sets the standard," Benning said. "We as players know what's expected. Sometimes we make bad decisions.

"Most coaches start Monday meetings with straight football talk, X's and O's. We come in here, he brings up school, personal life and how things went."

Benning has practiced infrequently following his 62-yard performance in the season-opener at Oklahoma State. If healthy, he would probably start because Phillips, who pleaded no contest to assault and trespassing charges and awaits sentencing Dec. 1, was suspended indefinitely.

"I think the hamstring injury made the ordeal itself seem a lot longer because I knew this would all wash out," Benning said. "But I didn't know when my hamstring would be ready to go."

Coaches still don't know.

The 5-foot 11-inch, 205-pound Benning is still questionable for Saturday's game against Pacific (1-2). Senior Clinton Childs is nursing a knee strain, which could leave the start to Sims or freshman Ahman Green.

INJURY REPORT FROM WILDCAT BASKETBALL

The injury bug has bitten the K-State men's basketball team. Senior center George Hill broke a bone in his foot in preseason drills and will be out of action for at least two weeks.

The news was better for senior point guard Elliot Hatcher. After having arthroscopic surgery to on his knee, Hatcher has been cleared for preseason drills and practice.

NCAA HURT BY HARSH TREATMENT OF ALABAMA

(AP) The harsh treatment of Alabama's football program cripples the NCAA's summary disposition procedure for handling rules violations, a top NCAA administrator wrote in a national journal.

Brigham Young president Rex E. Lee, chairman of the NCAA committee that developed the summary disposition process in 1991, said he was extremely disappointed the procedure failed in the Alabama case.

"This action takes the heart out of the summary-disposition process," wrote Lee, a former U.S. solicitor general. "Fact finding should be left to the school and the enforcement staff. Unless you have that, summary disposition means very little."

Big 12 ADs discuss playoff possibilities

■ Revenue pros and cons debated at conference

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — First choice for Nebraska is no Big 12 football playoff, says NU athletic director Bill Byrne. Second choice is having a playoff in Lincoln starting in December 1996.

"If it's just money, we can match or do better than anybody else," said Byrne.

"If it's anything else, I think we're in better shape to get this thing done right than any of the other places that are bidding for the playoff."

In July, Big 12 commissioner Steve Hatchell said the conference was sending a committee to visit at least five sites that had bid to play host to a possible playoff between North and South division football champions of the new conference.

"A playoff would probably reduce the Big 12 to one team in the Alliance, so a playoff would have to bring at least $8.5 million into the conference coffers."

MIKE CHRISTIAN
RILEY COUNTY EXTENSION AGENT

The Big 12 begins play next year with a North Division of Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, Kansas State, Iowa State and Missouri and a South Division of Oklahoma, Oklahoma State, Texas, Texas A&M, Texas Tech and Baylor.

Although the playoff has not been ratified by presidents of Big 12 schools, Hatchell investigated bids from Kansas City, St. Louis, Dallas, San Antonio and Houston. All of the Big 12 football coaches voted against a playoff, but conference athletic directors voted 11-1 to pursue a playoff plan. Nebraska voted "no."

"We started talking about this three months ago because we know we could do it right," Byrne told the Lincoln Journal Star Tuesday. "It didn't matter that we were behind the others in submitting a bid. We think we can offer the best package deal, if there is a playoff.

"Number one, nobody else can say they've sold out 202 games in a row," he said. "That's a pretty good start right there, getting people in the stadium for a game."

However, there are questions whether the Big 12 members would consider playing the game on a non-neutral field and the possibility of poor weather conditions in December in Lincoln.

Byrne, who was in Dallas at Big 12 meetings, said he had heard nothing from the Big 12 that indicated the game could not be in a member's stadium.

"I don't see why not," he said. "We can offer everything everybody else can offer. And as for weather, it's football. It can be played outside in any weather.

"Somebody said they wanted this game on prime-time, but we could have the early afternoon game and the Southeastern Conference could play at night, since they play in a dome in Atlanta."

Nebraska opposes a playoff because the conference can get two teams in the Bowl Alliance, which would produce $17 million, Byrne said.

"A playoff would probably reduce the Big 12 to one team in the Alliance, so a playoff would have to bring at least $8.5 million into the conference coffers."

The Bowl Alliance tries to match a national championship between No. 1 and No. 2, if possible, then Nos. 3 and 5, and Nos. 4 and 6, in the Orange Bowl, Fiesta Bowl and Sugar Bowl on a rotating basis.

Nebraska coach Tom Osborne agreed with Byrne's plan.

"If we're going to have it, it might as well be here," he said.

"I still just don't see the numbers adding up in having a playoff. We're talking about two or three teams bringing in $24 million in the alliance, and with a playoff, you lose a big chunk of that in a hurry."

Farrell mural depicts construction progress

Holly McConkey
staff reporter

It's a little too soon for interior decorating at Farrell Library, but members of the library staff have been painting the walls.

A 9-foot-high mural was painted inside the entrance of the first floor at Farrell Library to show people construction progress.

"We thought it was a good idea. Giving students and others an idea what is going on, and what changes are happening," Brice Hobrock, dean of University Libraries, said.

The mural was started this summer by Lynn Cowley, building manager, and Renee Gates, staff unit head assistant, as a visual of the building's progress through different phases of construction.

"We started working on this a couple of months ago, and have worked on it during our spare time," Gates said.

Cowley said the mural has helped answer the patrons' and publics' questions about how construction has progressed.

"We get a lot of questions, and I'm not always around to answer them. People can go and look at what is going on," Cowley said.

Hobrock said the library staff has not been able to add to the mural lately, because construction is progressing at a stable rate in the same areas.

"Right now we can't nail things down to put up any new information on the mural," he said, "everything is expected to remain fairly stable through the fall semester."

But there will be some internal rearranging within the library walls, he said.

"We expect to be able to occupy new space in the northwest corner between semesters, but there has been some problems with loose plaster," he said.

The current entrance is also expected to move to the southwest side, near Lafene Health Center, sometime around spring break, he said.

The mural is just a basic painting of the changes that have happened to the building, and does not show what has exactly happened, Gates said.

Photographs will also be added to the mural within the next few weeks to show what has actually happened during construction.

"We have gone through selected photos that represent the construction," Cowley said.

As construction goes on, more pictures will be added in six-month increments to help people learn about the construction process during the long time span, she said.

"There are a lot of changes that people can't really see," Nancy Sprehe, business reference librarian, said.

The first floor will be the last area to be remodeled and the wall will stay until construction is complete.

▶ SCHOOL BOARD

USD 383 enrollment down less than expected

James Dierking
staff reporter

Manhattan-Ogden Unified School District 383 enrollment is down less than projected, Superintendent Dan Yunk told the Board of Education Wednesday night.

Wednesday was the official enrollment count day, and board members were concerned there might be large decreases because of Fort Riley downsizing.

"The worst-case scenario that we saw estimated us losing upward of 300 students," Yunk said. "In comparison with last year, we've seen a decrease of 116 students."

The board was also concerned with enrollment figures because of the effect they will have on the budget.

Yunk said a dollar amount of how much the decrease will affect government funding is not yet available.

"It's really not as simple as just multiplying numbers," Yunk said.

State funding of school districts is determined by how many students are in the district. A decrease in enrollment will mean the district will receive less funding from the state.

School districts used to lose state money equal to the decrease in enrollment.

School districts will be able to retain some state money for the students they lose, according to a new law.

"What we deal with is actual head count, but what the state deals with is full-time equivalency," he said.

Full-time equivalency allows the board to count students who are not enrolled full-time in public school but receive special services, such as special education, for funding purposes.

In other business, the board approved $11,000 for repairs for the Manhattan High School auditorium ceiling.

A portion of the ceiling collapsed a few weeks ago during work on a remodeling project.

Before the collapse, a district buildings and grounds employee had told contractors that the ceiling was sagging and was possibly in need of repair before they continued construction.

"The board feels strongly that this is not our responsibility, and we will be able to recoup our money at the end of the contract," Beverly Eversmeyer, board member, said.

The board also passed a basic bus rules and discipline plan presented by Transportation Director John Maberry and briefly discussed the possibility of on-board cameras for the busses.

"We've never had any kind of document that said what we were going to do about some of the things that are coming about in this day and age," Maberry said. "Everyone would be aware of what would happen if you violated the rules."

Maberry also told the board that on-board cameras for busses may be a need in the future. The cameras would be used to monitor student behavior and to correct discipline problems.

Putting cameras in district busses could cost about $10,000.

Board members also unanimously voted to apply for Kansas Goals 2000 grants.

"This would supplement things we're already planning to do with our QPA and leadership programs," said Tom Hawk, director of staff development and special projects.

The board will meet Oct. 4 when they will tour construction sites of the new schools and then meet in regular session.

AT&T restructures

■ Business splits into 3
smaller, focused companies

Associated Press

NEW YORK — AT&T Corp. is splitting into three companies in a stunning move that could help it get back into local phone service, the business it was forced to give up in the 1984 breakup of Ma Bell.

The telecommunications giant is also junking its personal-computer manufacturing business, acknowledging its 1991 merger with NCR Corp. was a disaster.

"AT&T is reinventing itself once again," chairman Robert Allen said Wednesday.

AT&T will break into companies that will focus on communications services, communications equipment manufacturing, and manufacturing of large computers. Shareholders will get a stake in each new company.

The move — which by some measures is bigger even than the 1984 breakup of AT&T — stunned Wall Street, which has seen one colossal merger after another in the telecommunications and entertainment industries.

Founded as Bell Telephone in 1877 by Alexander Graham Bell, AT&T has built itself into a giant whose stock is the most widely owned in the nation and is said to be a part of every widow's portfolio.

In 1984, facing a government antitrust suit, AT&T agreed to split into seven regional Baby Bell phone companies in a settlement that spawned the era of global telephone competition.

Under the settlement, AT&T is barred from buying a Baby Bell because that would reconstitute AT&T's monopoly over local and long-distance service.

However, once AT&T sets up a separate telephone equipment manufacturing company, the communications-services company becomes free to pursue a partnership with a Baby Bell.

Legislation now in Congress would make it even more attractive for AT&T and other companies to enter the local phone business.

"This restructuring of AT&T is the next logical turn in our journey since divestiture," Allen said. "In recent months it's become clear to me that for AT&T's businesses to take advantage of the incredible growth opportunities in every part of the information industry, it has to separate into smaller and more focused businesses."

> "AT&T is reinventing itself once again."
> ROBERT ALLEN
> CHAIRMAN

The communications-services company, which includes long distance, cellular service and credit-card calling, will retain the AT&T name. Names for the others have not been selected.

AT&T's computer operation will eliminate 8,500 of 43,000 jobs this fall in a move expected to cost $1 billion. The company will quit making personal computers — an area where competitors operate more profitably — but continue to manufacture larger computer systems.

When it acquired NCR, AT&T had hoped to combine communications expertise with computer manufacturing.

But the NCR unit — later renamed AT&T Global Information Systems — has been hit hard by the shift in demand from mainframe computers to networks of smaller machines. It lost $332 million in the first two quarters of this year.

AT&T did not indicate any other cuts in its workforce of 303,000.

The breakup comes at a time when many other big telecommunications and media industry companies have been coming together in the belief that being big will mean more growth.

"In a time when scale is all the rage, to see AT&T walk in the other direction is a major wake-up call," said Mark Plakias, analyst at Strategic Telemedia in New York.

AT&T shares were up $6.12 1/2 at $63.75 on the New York Stock Exchange at the close of Wednesday's trading.

The Justice Department said it will review AT&T's plans but noted that corporate spinoffs do not typically raise antitrust concerns.

Executives at the regional Bell companies were quick to read AT&T's intentions.

"This is a clear signal that the surviving AT&T is preparing to focus on its entry into the local-exchange business, which would be packaged with its long-distance and wireless capabilities," said Ray Smith, chief executive of Bell Atlantic Corp.

Based on AT&T's 1994 revenue of $75 billion, the three-way split is larger than the 1984 breakup. AT&T had revenue of $58 billion in 1981, the year before the settlement of the government antitrust suit, and employed more than 1 million people.

Man carries 27 condoms in stomach

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Carlos Trujillo had little room for airline food when he tried to board a flight to Colombia. His stomach was already full of $100 bills — 189 of them, tightly packed inside condoms.

"We see this quite frequently with cocaine and heroin, but this is not the method normally used by money smugglers," said Tom Smith, Customs agent in charge at Kennedy Airport.

Investigators are trying to find the source of the money and determine if it came from drug trafficking.

After Trujillo admitted he had swallowed 27 condoms, all agents had to do was wait. With a little time — 36 hours — and the help of a laxative, Trujillo produced the $18,900, Smith said.

Combined with $60,100 found in a knapsack on a Mickey Mouse doll and $10,495 Trujillo had in his pockets, agents recovered a total of $89,495, Smith said Wednesday.

The 30-year-old native of Colombia suffered no ill effects from swallowing the condoms.

Customs inspectors targeted Trujillo after he became nervous last Friday during routine questioning at the airport.

Olathe rock band Big Sky Showcase is musically comfy

Page Getz
contributing writer

Editor's note: This is the fourth in a five-part series profiling the bands competing in the Opus 9 band competition.

Big Sky Showcase will return to Manhattan Friday for its second year competing in the Opus band contest.

The Olathe band was described recently during a radio interview by Kansas City's FM-98.9, the Rock, as the Cult meets Danzig.

One unusual component of the band's music is the keyboards, played by Suzzana Polly. Polly has been with Big Sky for almost three years.

"It's kind of a different twist," she said. "Before they added the keyboards, the sound was all really heavy guitars."

But Polly is not the first to play keyboards for the band.

"I was the girlfriend, and it started out that I was just sort of an emergency fill-in for a gig," she said. "Then it turned into a wait-and-see thing, and, after a while, it just became permanent."

Joining Polly are Jim Gould, drummer, and brothers Delaney Moore, guitarist and vocalist, and Dedric Moore on bass guitar.

While things have been a little slow for the band lately with the birth of Gould's son and the demands of their various day jobs, the group has managed to continue work with an Olathe-based promoter at Caravan Entertainment.

Big Sky also produced a self-titled tape last June that is available in Kansas City-area record stores.

"We try to put out a tape about every six months and keep trying to get booked in other cities," Polly said.

"There is really nothing in Olathe. The music scene just doesn't exist," she said.

Despite these obstacles, members of Big Sky have remained committed to the band.

The band opened for Stick at the Bottleneck in Lawrence, and it also played with the former Long Jockey and Iris Anvil, both Kansas City bands.

"There is definitely a sound coming out of Kansas City," Delaney Moore said. "It's got a bluesy sound, but it's still got the edge."

Big Sky has recently been playing mostly around Nebraska, and while last year's Opus contest was the band's first musical venture to Manhattan, it isn't ruling out any opportunities to play in the area again.

Although Big Sky didn't place in last years competition, the band feels more confident about its progress since it last came to Opus.

"We're a lot more comfortable with our music," Delaney Moore said. "It seems more natural now."

"The music has gotten a lot more complex," he said. "The tempos and the chord structures have gotten more unique."

"In getting to know each other better, we've come to develop our own style," he said. "We are an emotional band. We have something to say in the lyrics and in the music.

"We're serious musicians."

▶ DINOSAUR

Fossils may set size record

▶ The bones of a new species of dinosaur that was far larger in size than a Tyrannosaurus rex has been discovered.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — An amateur fossil hunter has discovered what may be the biggest meat-eating dinosaur known; a fearsome beast that looked like the longtime record-holder Tyrannosaurus rex.

The creature was 41 to 43 feet long and weighed 6 to 8 tons when it roamed the grasslands of what is now Argentina, scientists estimate.

It lived about 100 million years ago, or about 30 million years before T. rex appeared, said paleontologist Rodolfo Coria of the Carmen Funes Museum in Neuquen, Argentina.

A bone-by-bone comparison with remains of the largest known specimen of T. rex suggests the new-found creature was slightly longer and maybe 3 tons heavier, said Coria, who reported the fossil find with an Argentine colleague in Thursday's issue of the journal Nature.

"This is a monstrous animal," said University of Chicago paleontologist Paul Sereno, who has examined the newfound fossils.

"It's probably a bit bigger than T. rex."

Scientists are uncertain how big T. rex got. Estimates range from about 40 feet to 50 feet.

The initial fossil find was made by a local auto mechanic who hunts dinosaur bones as a hobby. In honor of the discoverer, Ruben Carolini, the huge dinosaur has been named Giganotosaurus carolinii.

Scientists have recovered about 70 percent of the skeleton, including parts of the 5-foot-long skull, most of the vertebrae, both thigh bones and curved, serrated teeth about 8 inches long.

Without a complete skeleton scientists can only estimate the creature's size.

The creature ran on its hind legs and probably had rather small arms, Coria said in a telephone interview. Just what it ate in its environment, which resembled the African savanna, is a mystery, he said.

Despite the overall similarity in appearance to T. rex, Giganotosaurus was not closely related to it, and the two beasts arose independently, Coria said.

T. rex lived in North America, and there was no land bridge from South America that could have let Giganotosaurus or its descendants move north to become ancestors of T. rex, Sereno said.

Jack Horner, curator of paleontology at the Museum of the Rockies in Bozeman, Mont., said comparing the sizes of Giganotosaurus and T. rex is tricky because dinosaurs grew continuously until they died, rather than stopping at some adult length.

"I don't care who's bigger. That's not the interesting question," he said.

More important will be finding out whether Giganotosaurus was a hunter or a scavenger, he said. T. rex is usually considered a hunter, but Horner has suggested it was a scavenger.

In any case, fossils of a meat-eating dinosaur from North Africa suggest a beast that was bigger than T. rex, he said. No analysis of those bones has been published, he said.

Fertility doctors under investigation

Associated Press

SANTA ANA, Calif. — Federal and state agents seized records at the home and offices of fertility doctors who are accused of taking patients' eggs and implanting them in other women without consent.

Investigators from the FBI, Internal Revenue Service and other agencies served warrants Tuesday at Dr. Ricardo H. Asch's offices in Laguna Hills and Santa Ana, and at his Newport Beach home. They also seized records from his partners, Jose Balmaceda and Sergio Stone, and the doctors' bookkeeper.

Attorneys for the doctors said they would have turned over the records if asked.

"To barge in and start looking through patient records was, in my opinion, completely unnecessary," said Patrick Moore, attorney for Balmaceda.

Warrants authorized agents to search for records of reproductive tissue transplants; vials and import papers for HMG Massone, an unapproved fertility drug; any evidence of insurance fraud; and tax and income records.

Asch, former director of the University of California, Irvine's renowned fertility clinic, is a target of several investigations related to egg swapping at the facility. Balmaceda and Stone are also being investigated. All have denied wrongdoing.

University officials have said that at least 30 women were involved in egg or embryo swaps without their knowledge.

Patients left their fertilized eggs in storage at the clinic, to be implanted when they wanted to get pregnant. Several have complained that their embryos were given to other women.

Some recipients later gave birth; the biological parentage of those children was unknown.

The university closed the Center for Reproductive Health at its medical center on June 3 after suing the three doctors.

▶ POLITICAL CORRUPTION

Politicians charged with fraud, plead guilty

Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Republican Party's former county chairman was charged along with an aide Wednesday with padding the sheriff's payroll with 22 politically connected people — including Illinois state lawmakers — who did no work.

A third man was charged with being a so-called ghost employee.

"This systemic corruption in hiring included the active falsification of test scores, bribe-taking and the hiring of politically wired individuals," U.S. Attorney James B. Burns said.

The 22 people allegedly hired as ghost employees include two state senators and a state representative, and cost taxpayers $643,000 in salary and benefits, prosecutors said. Their names were not released. Seven others have been charged, and six have pleaded guilty.

Officials could not say whether any of the 22 are still employed by the sheriff's department, since not all have been identified.

Federal investigators have been examining records of a number of Chicago politicians as part of an investigation into ghost payrolling.

James Dvorak, former GOP chairman and one-time undersheriff of Cook County, was accused of payroll-padding as well as overseeing a test-rigging scheme.

Authorities said 367 people became sheriff's officers and jail guards despite flunking their exams.

Most of the 367, who represent about 7 percent of the department's 5,000 sworn officers, are still employed while the county tries to fire them, Sheriff Michael F. Sheahan said.

Charged with fraud along with Dvorak were former sheriff's personnel chief James K. Hogan and Felix P. Calazzo, 51, who was accused of paying $10,000 for a job in the sheriff's office.

From 1988 to 1990, Dvorak was GOP chairman in Cook County, which takes in Chicago and many of its suburbs.

Dvorak and Hogan are already in prison for corruption dating to the late 1980s, when they worked under then-Sheriff James O'Grady.

Dvorak is expected to plead guilty to the latest charges. His lawyer, Matthias A. Lydon, said Dvorak wishes to resolve these matters and put all of this behind him.

Hogan pleaded guilty in 1993 to rigging sheriff's exams and is serving a two-year sentence in federal prison. Dvorak is serving 3 1/2 years for a bribery and tax conviction.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Included in the plan is balancing the budget by cutting financial-aid programs.

"The Senate is looking much better than the House bill. It restores some money to graduate programs and gives money to other programs," Laura Wilcox, assistant director for public affairs for the American Council on Education, said.

After the bills passed by Senate, they must go to Congress for debate, back to the House and Senate for final approval and then to the President.

Wilcox said she expects Senate to vote on its first draft sometime next week.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., is chairperson of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee that deals with financial-aid issues.

"Because of budget reconciliation, Sen. Kassebaum has been instructed to reduce the budget by $10 billion in the next seven years," Angela Reiff, educational policy research assistant for Kassebaum, said.

Kassebaum supports balancing the budget, but would prefer not to cut financial aid.

The House bill includes freezing several programs at the same funding they received last year, cutting funding for some and completely eliminating others.

The Federal Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants are being proposed to continue at the current level of $583 million. These grants help almost one million students nationwide bridge the gap between the maximum Pell Grant and the cost of college.

The Federal Work-Study Program would also continue to receive $616 million per year, the same amount as it has in the past.

The TRIO programs, which currently provide tutoring, personal and career guidance to nearly 800,000 low-income students, are proposed to maintain a funding level of $463 million.

Although the programs will be funded at the same level it is still like having a decrease, because enrollment figures are continuing to rise, Moeder said.

"Some students may be dropped off, simply because there isn't enough money in the pool," he said.

The House bill also proposes that the Federal Pell Grant budget be cut from $6.2 billion to $5.7 billion.

The maximum grant would be raised from $2,300 to $2,340 and the minimum award would raise from $400 to $600 eliminating almost 280,000 students nationwide.

The House bill calls for the elimination of the Perkins Loan Program that provides undergraduate and graduate/professional students with low-interest loans. Almost 700,000 students would be cut, resulting in an estimated savings of $1.1 billion over seven years.

The House has also proposed eliminating the six-month, interest-free grace period for student loans through the Subsidized Loan Program. Currently, students do not have to pay interest on their loans until six months after graduation.

"The increase to the student could be as much as $1,000 or more depending on how much you take out," Wilcox said.

Another program facing elimination is the State Student Incentive Grant Program. This program provides incentive grants to states allowing nearly 650,000 students with money.

"336 students at K-State received State of Kansas scholarships through this program ranging from $50 to $1,000," Moeder said.

The proposed financial-aid cuts are not finalized and students' efforts have made a big impact, Wilcox said.

"Students should know things are getting better, but they're still not as good as they should be," she said. "We're really urging students to call and write their senators and representatives and let them know their views."

president and Strategic Planning Committee member, said.

"The plans should not take teaching out of the classroom but, rather, serve as a supplement."

A second alternative is to divide faculty responsibilities into teaching and researching to increase the amount of classes taught.

Faculty have a dual responsibility of teaching and researching. An option of allowing the faculty to choose one responsibility has been suggested.

"This is controversial because if the historical nature of the professor is research, they will feel less valued if they move solely to teaching," Havlin said.

"In order for this option to work, the faculty must be rewarded equally for their services."

Students will also be expected to undergo extreme changes.

"We will be discussing logistical changes for the students as well," Finkeldei said.

"There's going to be a need for students to take classes at unpopular times like 3:30 p.m. and 7:30 a.m. We will need to discuss how we will accomplish that."

PACKAGE

approved an incentive package for TDM Wednesday.

The package includes issuance of up to $4 million in Industrial Revenue Bonds, property tax abatement of 100 percent for 10 years, $300,000 from the MEDOFAB Job Incentive Funds in 1995, $250,000 from the MEDOFAB Job Incentive Funds in 1996 and $418,000 for the MEDOFAB Revolving Loan Funds.

TDM is willing to purchase the land in the existing Manhattan Industrial Park at $8,000 per acre. The plant will cover 40,000 square feet and will take up about 10-1/2 acres.

Another element TDM requires is the extension of a railroad service to the site of the plant.

"The rail is important because that's how the glider vehicles will come from the Ford production plant in New Jersey," Coppola said.

The glider vehicle is the Ford Ranger body without any engine and transmission parts. The interior parts will be the package of integrated components that TDM manufactures and installs in the vehicle.

The package of integrated components is made of the battery containment packs, harnesses, wires, a gear reduction box and the electric powertrain.

"Each package of integrated components is made up of $15,000 of unique technology of TDM content," Coppola said. "This package is so simple it literally drops right into the truck and is secured by a few bolts."

Coppola said K-State was an important factor for TDM wanting to locate in Manhattan.

The key ingredient was a partnership involving K-State, TDM, Western Resources and other utility companies, which would be able to provide a $1-million package for research support.

"If we didn't put that package together, TDM would have went elsewhere," K-State President Jon Wefald said in a press conference at the K-State Student Union Wednesday morning.

In order to get that package together and provide the other necessary elements to bring TDM to Manhattan, a team approach was used.

The team consisted of K-State, the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, Western Resources, the Kansas Technological Enterprise Corporation and the Kansas Electric Utilities Research Program.

"We did a team full-court press to convince them that this little town in the middle of America would be the best place for TDM," Wefald said.

Wefald also said this effort was strongly supported by Gov. Bill Graves and Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan.

Perhaps the most influential person in bringing TDM to Manhattan was Jim Hague, associate professor of architectural engineering and construction, Wefald said.

Hague served two years as the national chairman of a Department of Energy task force, whose primary mission was to develop a plan for the market development of alternative fuel vehicles nationwide.

K-State has been part of the Department of Energy's Electrical Vehicle Program for four years.

Hague said TDM will come to Manhattan to take advantage of the resource provided by both the community and K-State.

"We're going to take advantage of TDM," Hague said. "We're going to see a genesis of a partnership between TDM, the community and the University."

▶ CITY COMMISSION

City approves incentive package for plant

Cori Cornelison
staff reporter

City commissioners unanimously and with little debate approved an incentive package for an electric-vehicle plant that is to open in Manhattan.

Troy Design and Manufacturing Co., based in Redford, Mich., will receive $550,000 for job incentives, a $418,000-revolving loan for the next 10 years at no interest and $4 million in industrial revenue bonds from the Manhattan Economic Development Fund.

The Economic Development Fund was created with money from a half-cent sales tax, which was approved by voters in the November 1994 election.

TDM will also have a 10-year, 100-percent tax abatement.

Under TDM's contract with the city, there will be minimum employment levels of 50 in 1996, 70 in 1997, 90 in 1998 and 138 in 2000.

If TDM does not perform at the required numbers then it will be responsible for an initial 20-percent property tax, plus 1 percent for each employee it did not hire for that year.

For example, if TDM only hires 48 employees in 1996, it will pay 22 percent in property tax.

The plant will produce 2,000 electric Ford Ranger XL pickups under an agreement with Ford Motor Company.

TDM has already chosen a contractor, but it also needs local contractors to assist in construction of the plant.

The $10-million plant will open its doors no later then Feb. 15 and must have its first truck manufactured by March 31.

"We are well down the road with the development of the vehicle," said Bill Coppola, managing director of electric vehicle development at TDM.

The Ford Ranger will not be the only vehicle manufactured in the Manhattan plant. Cars, trucks and vans will also be manufactured, Coppola said.

"I don't want the Ford EV to eclipse the business effort we are spawning in Manhattan," Coppola said.

Coppola said there are many other places TDM could set up a plant, but the plant wants to build in Manhattan.

"The work ethic and fabric of the community is consistent with what we're looking for," Coppola said. "The people here are who we want to partner with."

No beer?

Alcohol banned at tailgate parties

Chris May
staff reporter

Tailgating checklist: hot dogs, hamburgers, chips, pop and beer.

Wait — don't bring the beer.

K-State is locking down on the consumption of alcoholic beverages inside the parking lot.

"Good luck enforcing it," Becca Stith, sophomore in English and secondary education, said.

Stith said she believes it is going to be extremely difficult to enforce the policy because of all the people in the parking lot.

Nikki Kern, sophomore in business, said there isn't the need to ban alcohol.

"It's all part of the atmosphere of football. If the police crack down on the drinking, it will ruin tailgating because people will go somewhere else to hang out before the game," Kern said.

People need to drink in moderation, Matt Urbanek, junior in economics, said.

"If people drank in moderation, alcohol wouldn't necessarily have to be banned," Urbanek said. "If it was a judgment call, I wouldn't have a problem with it."

Just because students are tailgating does not mean they are actually drinking, Angie Riggs, junior in business, said.

Sports fans to get policy lesson

Rich Pefley
staff reporter

This Saturday, the K-State Athletic Department and the K-State Police will be educating Wildcat fans about the alcohol policy at KSU Stadium.

"We are just emphasizing that it is against the law to drink on the sports complex grounds, inside and outside," said Jim Mueller, associate director of Bramlage Coliseum. "Those with visible containers face the possibility of being cited. Inside the stadium, fans face the possibility of being cited and ejected."

Ronnie Grice, campus police chief, said he has always had a concern about the consumption of alcohol at football games.

"I've been here a year, and it is something that I wanted to address," Grice said. "Before, it wasn't strictly enforced. But it was time to take a stance on it."

The first two or three games will be part of the educational process. After that, don't plan on drinking in the parking lot unless you are willing to suffer the consequences.

"We are taking a soft-hand or an educational approach," Grice said. "We're handing out flyers at the home games, and there have Student Senate voted unanimously to allocate more than $1,600 to a student group for an event in November.

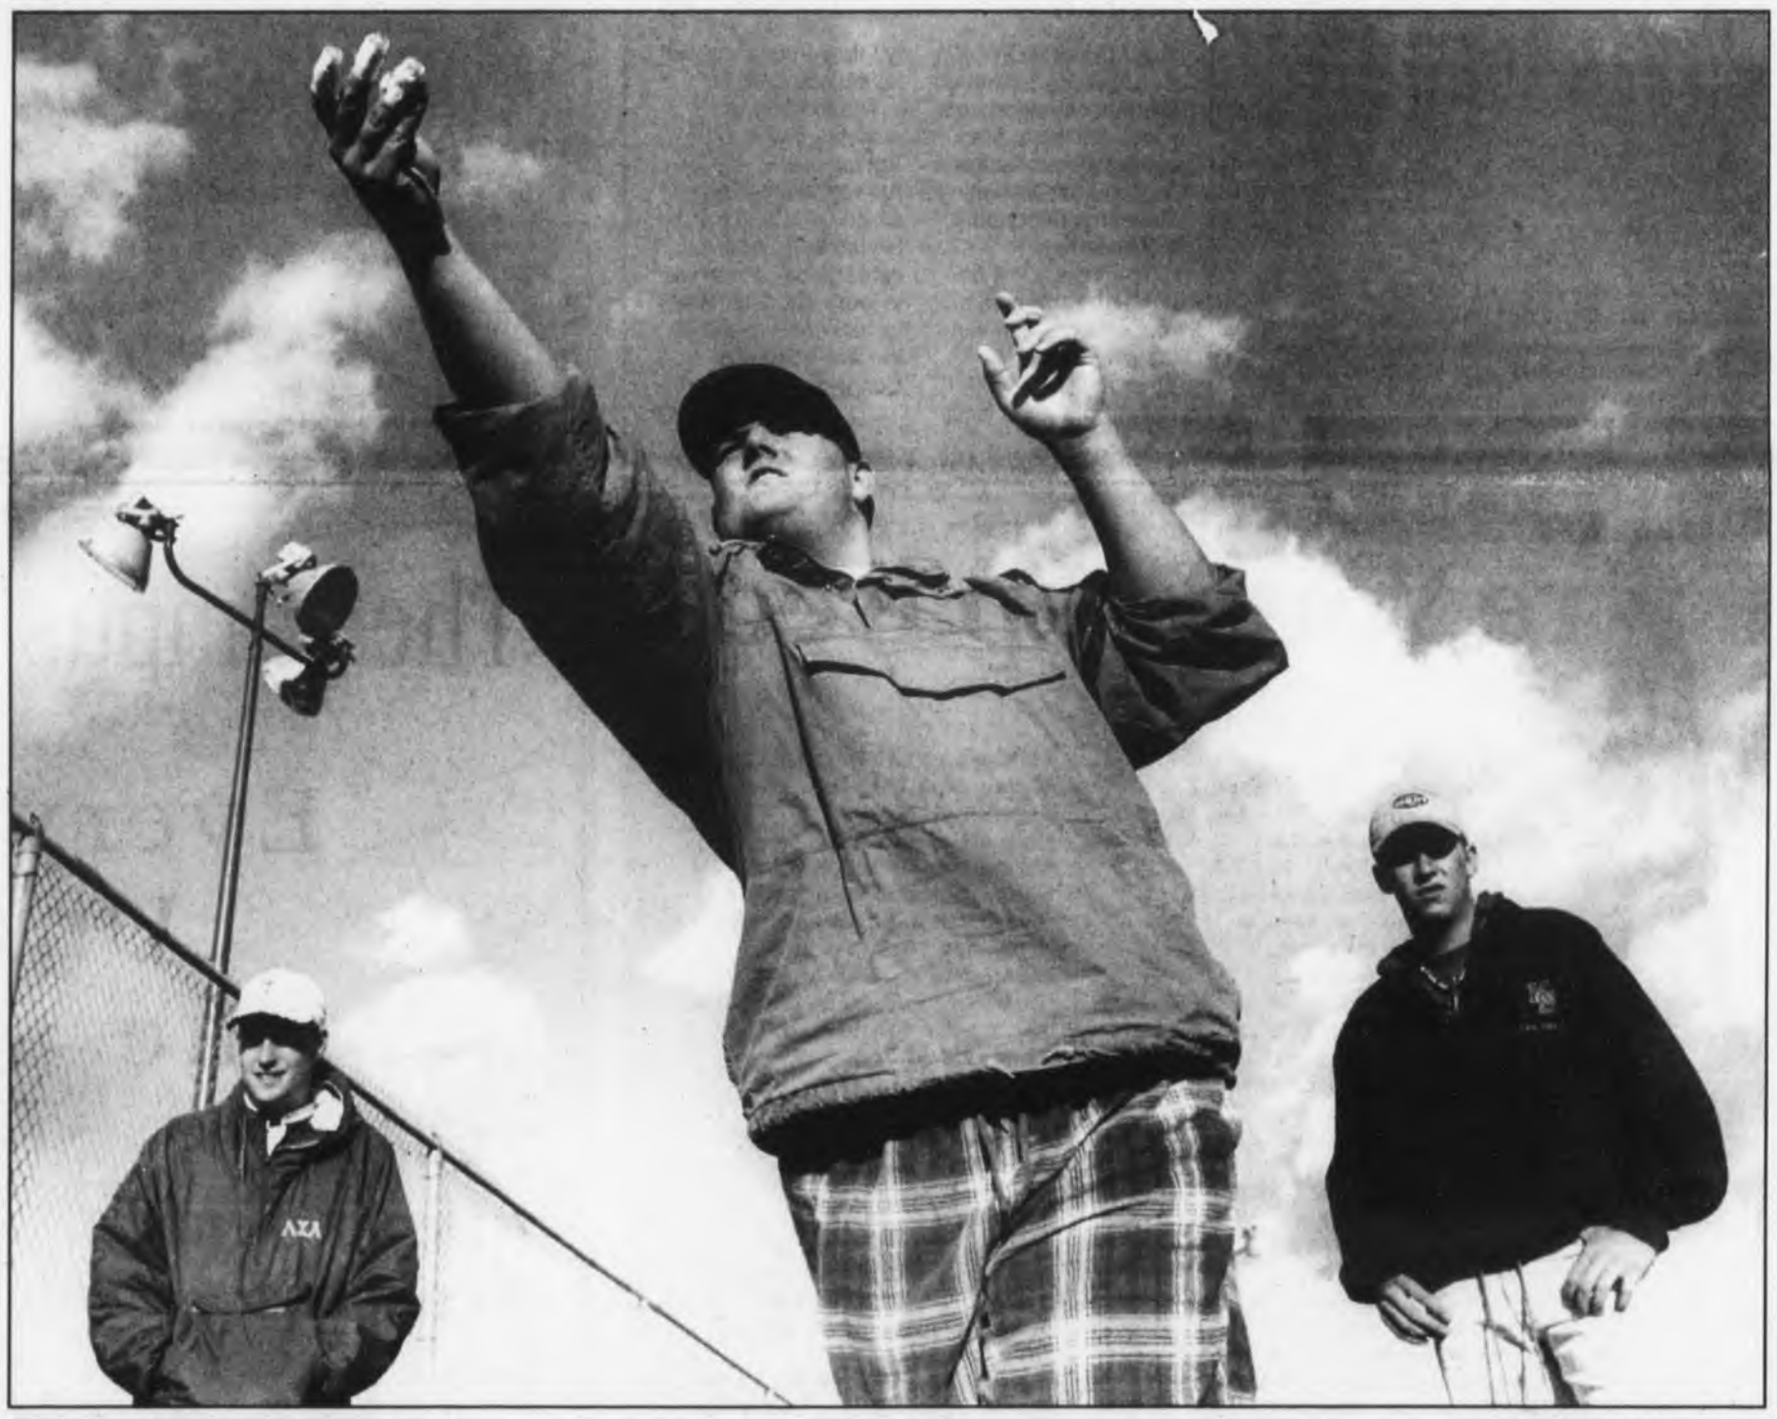
Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity requested $1,694.80 for its annual step show on Nov. 4 in Bramlage Coliseum. The money raised at the event is used to fund the fraternity's mentor program and scholarships.

The money requested by the fraternity would be used to cover advertising, printing, photocopying, telephone use, an honorarium for the music group Soul For Real and equipment rental.



"The committee voted for it unanimously," Chris Avila, Allocations Committee chairman, said.

The event will cost around $16,000, B.C. Camp, fraternity member, said. Soul For Real will cost $9,500.

"This is only a small portion of what it's going to cost them," Avila said.

Approval was also given to appointments for the members of the Holton Hall Advisory Board,

▶ FACULTY SENATE

Committee recommends grade standards

Mary Emerson
staff writer

K-State is searching for a way to continue providing quality education while operating on a smaller budget.

"We need to be able to say with candor and honor that we are going to deliver the best education we can, with the resources we have," said James Hamilton, professor of philosophy and member of the University Strategic Planning Committee of Faculty Senate.

Hamilton and Charles Thompson, professor of psychology and member of the planning committee, sent a proposal to Provost James Coffman that provides some ideas of paths the University can take.

First, they suggest every department and all faculty members maintain grade standards in their classes, which means in lower-level classes an average performance merits a grade of no higher than a C, and in upper-level classes an average performance would receive no higher than a B, according to the proposal.

Next, Hamilton and Thompson said the University should make a graduation requirement that students must be able to demonstrate their ability to write clearly about issues in their areas of study.

A survey given to K-State graduates four years after graduating shows the importance of being able to write, Hamilton said.

"They are asked, 'What didn't we teach you that we should have?' The one thing that stands out among the vast majority, was that they didn't learn to write," he said. "They hit ceilings. They can't advance in their career because they can't write about the areas they majored in."

Union bookstore plans activities for Banned Book Week

Tonya Bobbitt
staff reporter

The 14th annual Banned Books Week, which promotes the celebration of the freedom to read, will begin Monday.

The K-State Student Union Bookstore will celebrate Banned Books Week with a display offering selected banned books for 25 percent off, Linda Wiemers, book department manager, said.

"This is an incentive for people to buy banned books and to read something by somebody that's supposed to be unacceptable or inappropriate," Wiemers said.

Banned Books Week is not a book promotion, but a way to make students, facility and staff aware of books that have been banned, Wiemers said.

Many school officials don't want to upset parents or certain groups when it comes to censorship, so they buckle under the pressure and ban books, she said.

"People don't think about the long-term consequence of banning a book," Wiemers said. "This act is called censorship, and censorship is not right."

There are two types of book censorship, which include removing a book from the shelf and challenging a book that belongs to an individual or individuals by complaining to a school principal that a book is inappropriate.

According to Banned Books 1994 Resource Guide, sex and sex-related issues are the most-targeted category of challenged material.

Books that are challenged most often are books that deal with gay literature or gay education.

In 1993-94, books viewed as condoning, explaining or promoting homosexual lifestyles were under significant fire, according to the resource guide.

Also books that come under scrutiny range from traditional fairy tales to books about the occult, from dictionaries to religious works to social studies texts, according to the resource guide.

The guide also states that many award-winning books and classical literature are considered to be dangerous material.

For example, Huckleberry Finn was challenged by some places for having racial slurs that are offensive to both black and white students.

The guide also listed "Where's Waldo?" as a book that might be controversial.

It was removed from some shelves because there is a drawing of a woman lying on the beach wearing a topless bikini.

The Manhattan Library supports Banned Books Week by putting out a display about the books that are banned or challenged around the world, specifically the ones in Kansas, Judith Edelstein, assistant director for services, said.

"A good library has something to offend everybody," Edelstein said. "We all have different tastes, and the library is serving all parts of the community."

Many books are banned because of one individual or group that is small-minded and wants to keep other people from reading certain material, she said.

"It is a basic policy of libraries not to get in the habit of banning books because people have a basic right to have access to public information," Edelstein said.

The USD 383 school district hires professional librarians to select appropriate reading material.

The district uses sources like the Professional Review to decide what books are chosen for the district, Kay Stith, director of library information services, said.

"We don't promote censorship, and we don't have any books here that are prohibited," Stith said. "The key is we don't purchase anything that isn't appropriate for the age of the child."

The Professional Review identifies what is age appropriate, she said. It is important that each school has a professional librarian who knows how to select books, she said.

AMBASSADOR PROMISES REVIEW OF STATUS GIVEN TO GIs IN JAPAN

TOKYO (AP) — U.S. Ambassador Walter Mondale agreed Thursday to let legal experts review the special status granted to American military personnel in Japan, following an outcry about the rape of a schoolgirl.

During a meeting with Foreign Minister Yohei Kono, Mondale again apologized for the assault on the 12-year-old Okinawan girl, allegedly by three U.S. servicemen.

"It is outrageous, inexcusable," Mondale said. "We are ashamed, and we apologize."

The rape earlier this month on the southern Japanese island of Okinawa has dominated headlines and sparked widespread outrage among Okinawans, many of whom resent the presence of U.S. military bases.

On Thursday, a group of people representing a local children's organization called on Okinawa's governor to demand the withdrawal of U.S. forces from the island.

Mondale agreed to Kono's request that a panel of legal experts study the agreement that grants special legal status to American military personnel in Japan during criminal investigations.

The agreement gives the U.S. military custody over personnel suspected of crimes off-base until formal charges are filed by local authorities.

Newspapers and politicians have criticized the United States for not immediately turning over the three suspects.

The three — Marine Pfc. Rodrico Harp, 21, of Griffin, Ga.; Pfc. Kendrick M. Ledet, 20, of Waycross, Ga., and Navy Seaman Marcus D. Gill, 22, of Woodville, Texas — are in prison at Camp Hansen, a Marine base on Okinawa.

American officials have repeatedly said they will be turned over to local authorities as soon as charges are filed. In the meantime, they are letting Japanese police question the suspects for several hours a day.

Mondale stressed he sees no need to actually revise the agreement, under which 45,000 U.S. troops are stationed in Japan, but he said he would look into ways to improve its implementation.

CHICKENS LAY EGGS BETTER WITH CLASSICAL MUSIC, COLORFUL TOYS

JERUSALEM (AP)— An Israeli scientist says farmers who have already wired their chicken coops for classical music should go one step further to boost their hens' egg outlay: Give them toys to play with.

According to a study released Wednesday, colorful plastic toys placed in hens' cages soothe the birds' nerves and inspire them to lay more eggs.

"The calmer atmosphere particularly increases the chances of the weaker chickens in the social order to survive and to produce better laying results," the Hebrew University of Jerusalem said in a statement accompanying the results of the study conducted by Dr. Gadi Gvaryahu of the agricultural faculty.

Gvaryahu's thesis was tested in the United States during a 10-month period by Donald Bell of the University of California at Riverside.

Bell exposed half his sample of 120,000 chickens to Gvaryahu's specially designed environmental enrichment objects — resulting in a 25-percent increase in profitability per layer compared to the other half.

In an earlier study, Gvaryahu found that hens are also calmed by classical music.

2 APPOINTED BY GOVERNOR

TOPEKA (AP) — Gov. Bill Graves' office announced Wednesday the appointment of two businessmen to the Kansas Development Finance Authority.

They are David Aull of Overland Park and Douglas Debelak of Wichita.

Aull is chairman and chief executive officer of ClubHouse Inns of America. Debelak is general manager of Cargill Oilseeds, a soybean crushing and edible oil refinery.

The Kansas Development Finance Authority guarantees long-term loans for state agencies, political subdivisions, public and private nonprofit groups and businesses.

FUNDS APPROVED FOR AREA LAB

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Senate on Wednesday approved for $1 million to fund essential maintenance at the Grain Marketing Research Laboratory in Manhattan.

The money will be used for roof repairs, renovation of the ventilation system and other repairs necessary to bring the facility into compliance with safety standards.

The funding is included in the 1996 Agriculture Appropriations Bill, which went to a joint House and Senate conference committee to work out differences in versions passed by the two houses of Congress.

Lineup set for Opus 9

Jennifer Cawley
staff reporter

The ninth-annual Opus band competition will feature the same mission as the eight before it — a chance for small, regional bands to get some attention.

The free concert, sponsored by the UPC Eclectic Entertainment Committee, gives area bands a chance to show off their sound as well as earn some money.

"There are seven groups that will be competing for the cash prizes," said John Sandlin, Eclectic Entertainment Committee program adviser.

The bands chosen this year were Big Sky Showcase, Coolerspoon, Dr. Crusty, 425 Main, Jack Timberfish, 2nd Wind and Smudge.

The competition was open to any band that submitted a demo tape and the $40 entry fee.

"Nineteen bands signed up for the competition this year, which is an increase from last year," Sandlin said.

The committee listened to each band's demo tape and then chose the seven winners based on originality, vocal and instrumental ability.

"It is always hard just to be able to come up with original music and be judged. It just takes phenomenal talent," Mike Hodgson, Eclectic Entertainment chairman, said.

Mark Marron, Coolerspoon guitarist, said the band members were really excited because they wanted to enter last year but didn't have a demo tape or enough of their own music.

"We didn't want to enter as a cover band," Marron said.

Due to the inclement weather, Opus 9 will be in the K-State Student Union Ballroom instead of the original outdoor location.

The competition offers a unique opportunity to see live music without hitting the bar scene. It also offers bands a chance to play for a strictly music-loving crowd.

"This will be the first time people will actually come just to hear our music," Marron said.

Judges for Opus 9 are representatives from The Note, K-Rock and UPC. There will also be an audience member selected out of the crowd to make the competition a partially student-judged competition.

Shane Dolbier, a music agent from Kansas City, will also be a judge for the contest, which hopefully will make it more enticing to the bands, Hodgson said.

The judges will be using the same criteria that got the bands through the first cut, in addition to stage presence, delivery and audience appeal.

The RSC is composed of Reed Martin, Austin Tichenor and Adam Long. The show covers the history of America from 1492 until the election of President Clinton.

Maureen Ashe, senior in elementary education, attended a different production of the RSC, "The Bible - The Complete Work of God (Abridged)" last July at Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C.

"Let's just say you'll never see the Bible in the same way," Ashe said. "Even though it was the Bible, they hit every religion. At the beginning of the show, they say that they are very politically incorrect."

She said the troupe was entertaining.

...with two-way, interactive video, students miles apart can communicate and learn from one another. It's a particularly good deal for smaller schools that may not be able to provide a teacher of Russian or Japanese, for example, but can benefit from the resources of a larger urban district. And that will open up learning opportunities for all Kansas schoolchildren by providing access to teachers and classes across the state — and across the country.
It's also a great way to utilize the expertise of a nearby university or college. Advanced mathematics and science courses are among the most popular now offered to high school students over a "Distance Learning" network, as we call it at Southwestern Bell.
Thanks to the governor and the 1994 Kansas Legislature, who extended our TeleKansas program, never has a fiber-optic link to our Distance Learning network been more affordable. We're investing an additional $64 million statewide so schools can obtain the service at deeply discounted monthly rates. And the rate is good for ten years. What's more, there's no installation fee.
But to receive the service and the price break, schools need to order by October 1996. To inquire about your school's plans or to ask further questions, call 1-800-869-0897 and ask for our Distance Learning Coordinator.
Our $64 million investment — coupled with the $138 million we invested under the original TeleKansas program in 1990 — is part of our pledge to reinvest in Kansas.
We're keeping that promise.

Out-of-town bands dominate Opus competition

The bands were selected by the Eclectic Entertainment Committee, a student-run UPC committee.

Union Program Council is sponsoring the ninth-annual Opus band competition today at 5:30 in front of the K-State Student Union.

The contest is open to unsigned regional bands.

It's a free concert. No cover charges, no bouncers, just music and music fans. It's true that some bands have been in the contest two years in a row. But you chose them.

The bands were selected by the Eclectic Entertainment Committee, a student-run UPC committee.

Committee members listened to demos of each of the 19 contending bands in a blind test, then rated the bands on a points scale, John Sandlin, UPC program adviser, said.

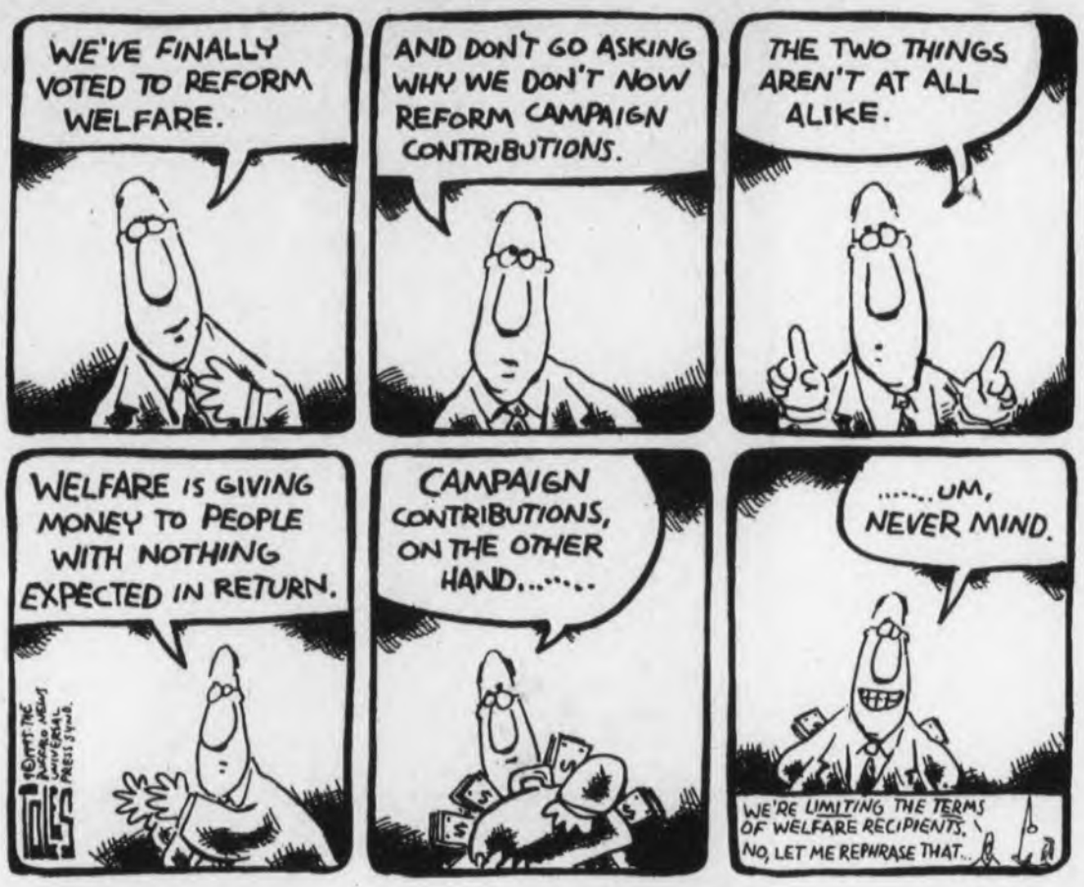
Those bands that received the most points were accepted into the contest. Those that weren't lost $40.

That money goes directly into payment for the top three bands in the contest.

Seven bands will compete, two of which are from Manhattan.

There should have been more local bands. But who can you blame? UPC?

Think again. Out of 19 total applications, less than half were Manhattan bands.



Whose fault is that?

If you don't like it, you can change it. Go to the UPC office. Pick up an information card. Be a volunteer on the EEC and pick the bands you like next time.

And if you're in a band, put in your application next year. Get $10 from each band member, pay the fee, and enter the contest.

The best you can do is promote your band and win $400, $200 or $100. The worst you can do is promote your band and lose $40.

Dumpster diving reaps many benefits

"One man gathers what another man spills." – the Grateful Dead

For some, it's a hobby. For others, it is a contribution to the small fraction of efforts to redeem the earth of the waste and pollution of the Average Joe. Still for others it is a means of survival.

I'm talking about the undocumented art of dumpster diving.

As an amateur diver, I salvaged virtually all of my furniture from what could have been your dumpster. I have accumulated a growing percentage of my closet in the trash, as well as compact discs, candles, a tapestry blanket and all kinds of books.

I have recovered enough vitamins and seasonings to last until I graduate.

With all of the less than half-used notebooks, leather brief holders and folders in perfect condition I found at the end of last semester, my school supply expenses were cut in half.

"Aug. 1 is really the Christmas of dumpster diving," said Neil Miller, a graduate student in entomology whose house is primarily furnished by dumpster contents.

Some of his past rummage scores include seven 80s Apple computers, four printers (that needed work) and five monitors — all found in a dumpster behind Waters Hall. He also found a $50 pair of Stussy pants, and his wife found a Sears-brand bicycle with the lock and combination on a piece of paper attached to it.

Sarieah, a self described non-advancing freshman taking classes on the side of motherhood, lived almost exclusively out of dumpsters — the nurturing force behind her existence — for the three years she was following the Grateful Dead and Phish tour.

"Some people add bleach to the food before they throw it away so that the homeless won't eat it," she said.

"Dunkin' Donuts, Winchell's and some pizza places do it because they say they don't want to be held liable if someone chokes or gets food poisoning, so they poison it so that the homeless won't eat it, and instead they starve."

But sometimes finding food in dumpsters isn't so hard.

Sarieah's husband, Chris, was on the road for about five years, and at a dumpster outside a bagel shop in Vermont found 4-5 garbage bags of bagels.

Another friend of Sarieah's found an entire truckload of warehouse-sized boxes of Nabisco cookies and crackers in a dumpster still sealed, while on the road in Tennessee.

Marlene Howell, instructor of women's studies, became most conscious of her own reasoning for diving while spending six months in Nicaragua a few years ago.

"I was amazed by the abject poverty and the ingenious ways people figured out of getting needs met," she said. "They could turn an empty can into a lamp shade. Nothing went to waste.

"So much of it was about survival. In such a poor country, people managed to not have waste."

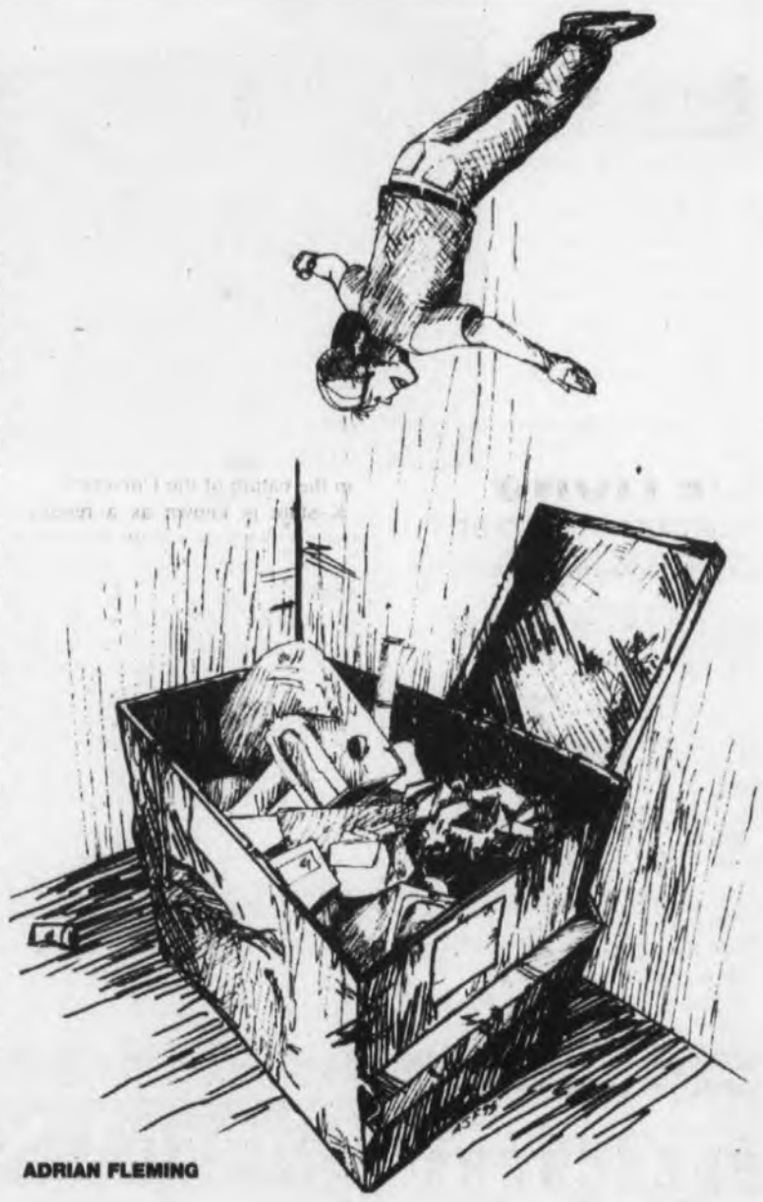
Her own list of finds include a VCR, a working TV, a brand new wok, a stereo system, functioning fans, a blender, vacuums, toasters, a bed and clothes.

What is disturbing is that this hedonistic and senseless waste is unnecessary.

Occasionally, as I pass the Dusty Bookshelf in Aggieville, I'll stop and pick up a few books out of the stacks from the dumpster that customers conveniently discard when they can't sell them to the store.

The store's owner, Diane Meredith, said that of approximately 4,000 books it takes in a week, it turns away at least double that.

Many people will take the books straight to the trash despite Meredith's suggestion to donate them to the public library or the Salvation Army.



Do we have that little respect for our world and for who have nothing that we dispose of such things so easily?

"Humanity shouldn't be allowed the right to dominate the earth and its animals," Howell said. "That, culturally, we choose to engage in this kind of waste borders on the immoral.

"It's a signal more raw to the depth of that failure. The shame is in the cultural ethic that says it's OK to throw it away," she said.

"The shame is not in taking it out of the trash — the shame is in putting it in the trash."

▶ BAND CHEATED

Editor,

For those of you who don't know, at 5:30 tonight on the K-State Student Union lawn, the ninth annual Opus band competition will be here. Sponsored by the Eclectic Entertainment division of UPC, it is a chance for interested, unsigned bands to play to a college-wide audience and compete for $700 in prize money. It seems like a good idea, but its financing is wrong.

After entering an audition tape of two original songs and a $40 non-refundable entry fee, we found we were not one of the seven bands selected to play the show. This did not surprise us. What did surprise us was that bands from Lawrence and Kansas City, which had no K-State affiliation, would be playing.

When we wrote our check, payable to the K-State Union, we were under the assumption that our money would go to the support of a K-State band competition, not to support the Lawrence music scene.

It doesn't bother us that we weren't among the top seven bands chosen. But we bet our audition tape was not even listened to. We were ripped off, and UPC knows it. It knows it cannot get any kind of crowd by charging admission, so it gets interested students to enter their bands for the lofty fee of $40, knowing it can bring in its ringers from Lawrence, Topeka and Kansas City.

We're not saying not to go to the show tonight. Manhattan needs all the help it can get from the students to build a better live music scene, and if bands can drive a van all the way from Lawrence to play, you can walk 10 minutes from the dorms to the Union to see first-class entertainment.

If Opus keeps getting bigger, it can attract bands from Fayetteville or St. Louis. Maybe by then, UPC can find a different source of revenue for the show.

Constructive acts limit aggression

When I read about the assault on two K-State students (and their dog) a month ago in Tuesday's Collegian, I was shocked and disgusted.

Not only because the students were assaulted in their own homes, and not only because the people being investigated for the crime also happen to be members of the K-State football team, but because that single act of violence was such a completely brutal, unnecessary waste of energy.

I am a pacifist.

Well, I try to be. I honestly believe in the philosophy of non-violence in my head.

You know, like the teachings of Christ, Gandhi and Buddha. It's just that, as several holes in the walls around Kedzie Hall will attest, occasionally my Attila-the-Hun temper has been known to take over and kick Gandhi's skinny behind back into my brain stem.

Over the years, I have gotten better at controlling myself and learning how to rechannel those energies into ways that give me some personal sense of satisfaction without having to deal with a court date.

I have decided to share those "other options" with others who have violent tempers, so they can utilize them rather than beating the crud out of others (and their dog).

Visualization is one of my most common ways of getting rid of anger. There are many people, who are mentally healthier than I am, who say dreaming that you are someplace calming and beautiful is one way to get rid of frustration.

Personally, I think running a nice little revenge sequence in your head is much more satisfying.

Some rules though: your head should be as far as the fantasy goes. Don't make voodoo dolls or burn anybody in effigy.

And I wouldn't slip into dreaming during those first 60 seconds of white, hot anger when you're sure serving 25-to-life is not such a bad idea after all.

Cool down a little first. Later, go ahead and indulge. Imagine that 5'8," size-five, human pixie stix who took your parking space will have a really bad case of acne and be working at a job where she has to say "Would you like fries with that?" 6 million times a day.

One of my personal favorite fantasies is visualizing that person in hell, wading through a pool of acidic goo that eats all the way through to his or her innards.

But for those of you who do not have very vivid imaginations or possess weak stomachs, that may not be the best way to go.

Exercising is always a good way to work off anger. You'd be surprised at how chilled out oxygen deprivation makes a person.

This too has its drawbacks.

I wouldn't recommend doing any exercises that might get you hurt if you aren't concentrating on it completely, like the shot put or fencing.

Running is all right. For those of you who, like me and have bodies shaped like an overripe kumquat, it should only take walking briskly for about 12 steps before you'll be out of breath and calmed down.

Another way to keep your temper is to vent at someone. Not the person you're angry at and not someone at random. I did that once, and I'm still on probation.

Go see a friend you know who will just sit there and listen to you spew.

I've discovered that Craig Brown over in the speech department is a great guy to yell obscenities at whenever I need a stress reliever.

"Personally, I think running a nice, little revenge sequence in your head is much more satisfying."

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

Try cleaning your apartment or house. My toilets are never more spotless than when I have had an argument with my roommate.

Or just throw things if it makes you feel better. This also gives you a great excuse to redecorate.

Someone recommended to me once that you should grab a willing partner and have sex.

But sex when you're angry might not be a good thing, especially if your partner is the person you're angry at. I'd run instead.

The best technique I have found to get rid of anger is just to do something nice for yourself.

Go shopping, splurge on something expensive, or better yet, do something nice for someone else. Commit a random act of kindness instead of violence.

It's much more satisfying, and you won't get blood on your clothes.

▶ QUALIFIED ADMISSIONS

College admission policy considered by Regents

Mary Emerson
staff writer

Qualified admissions could still on the table for the Kansas Board of Regents.

"We have recommended to the legislature that they pursue qualified admissions, but as of yet, they have not," said Barb Paschke, associate director of academic affairs for the Kansas Board of Regents.

"So, we encourage students take the recommended curriculum in high school in order to be prepared for college," she said.

It was proposed two years ago, but was voted down, she said.

Qualified admissions would require students to meet certain test score standards before they could be admitted into a college or university.

Students not meeting the standards would be allowed to test again for the next semester.

Kansas currently has open admission policies for state universities and colleges.

"Kansas is the only state with an open admissions policy," Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said.

"Granted, all states have different qualified admissions policies, and it varies from state to state," he said.

In order to have qualified admissions, the state legislature has to approve the change.

Charles Thompson, professor of psychology and member of the University Strategic Planning Committee, said qualified admissions would help weed out unprepared students.

"It is correct to assume that everybody should go to college, but incorrect to assume that everyone should graduate from college," Thompson said.

"If that's the case, we should just hand everyone a degree when they pay their tuition," Thompson said. "'You want to graduate? Just pay your four years of tuition now.'"

Robert S. Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said K-State students are self selected.

"In truth, our students are going to profile that they meet the ACT requirements, but there is a self-selection particularly at K-State and KU. You'll find students that have higher test scores than at places like Wichita State," Robert S. Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said.

Qualified admissions could eventually reduce the number of students going to college, said Charles Thompson, professor of psychology and member of the University Strategic Planning Committee.

Qualified admissions could possibly allow some remedial and provisional classes to be cut from the University's class schedule, therefore saving money.

"That's erroneous. You can have one of the finest universities in the world as long as you are admitting non-traditional students and 25 percent of our students are non-traditional," Krause said.

"You're going to need to have course work, such as intermediate algebra, that will allow people to brush up on skills. Plus the cost of remedial courses is small. I've always viewed that as a bogus argument," he said.

On the other hand, the University also has what it calls academic boat people, said James Hamilton, professor of philosophy and member of the planning committee.

Academic boat people are students who meet University requirements, but not requirements to get into particular programs or colleges on campus, so they float around to other programs, Hamilton said.

As of now, qualified admissions is not being pushed by the regents, but the option will come up again within the next few years.

"It's not going to be an issue this year, but the Regents has a task force working on it. It won't be something that gets voted on until sometime next year," Finkeldei said.

▶ BOARD OF REGENTS

Professors' priorities questioned

■ Research considered more important by some

Kimberly Hefling
staff reporter

Teachers at Kansas Board of Regents schools in a recent study said universities put a higher priority on research and getting published than on teaching.

Dominic Guzzetta, Emporia State's Jones Distinguished University professor, spent four months interviewing 40 faculty members from the regent universities.

He presented his findings at the regents meeting in Topeka Thursday. Teachers not only said universities put a high priority on publishing but that it played a large role in pay raises and promotions.

Guzzetta said he contacted the Faculty Senate president and chief of academic affairs at each school and asked to interview a typical faculty member.

Each interview lasted 45 minutes to 1-1/2 hours.

He said he discovered 80 percent of the faculty members said they considered themselves more teachers than scholars, 10 percent said they considered themselves more scholars than teachers, and 10 percent said they didn't think it was possible to separate the two, Guzzetta said.

Guzzetta also found these colmclusions:

■ The importance of teaching at all types of institutions was reaffirmed by the faculty from all three professional ranks (professor, associate professor and assistant professor).

■ The majority of the interviewees became professors primarily to teach, but the research and service demands have frequently steered their energies away from teaching.

■ Ideally, teaching and research should be complementary faculty activities, but realistically, they compete for time and status.

■ All saw merit in broadening the definition of research and scholarship and particularly as such activity could relate to the teaching/learning process.

■ Nearly unanimous support exists for maintaining a high level of continuous scholarly activity directed toward the improvement of instruction.

■ Faculty tend to gravitate toward professional activities where rewards are the greatest, and their perception is that rewards are geared to research and publications.

"Since the early 1950s, there has been a conflict in priorities, emphasis and expectations," Guzzetta said. "It's almost as if we have a cookie-cutter mentality and want to be the same as everybody else.

"This may not be the best way to do it. We should maintain our own identity."

Guzzetta also reported 42 percent of the faculty members surveyed said they believed the pressure to publish reduces the quality of teaching at the institution, and 73 percent said they believed better ways to evaluate teaching performance are needed.

"I chose this topic because I have found it intriguing the way we in higher education evaluate faculty and apply appropriate recognition and award to the assessment of the faculty members' total activities," he said.

In response to his findings, Guzzetta made the following recommendations to regents institutions:

■ Require all faculty to maintain a high level of scholarship activity aimed at improving the teaching/learning process.

■ Redefine and broaden the meaning of research to include all types of scholarly activities and recognize and reward such efforts equally.

■ Accept faculty whose preference is teaching and attach equivalent status, prestige, recognition and rewards for success in teaching.

■ Base the recognition and reward system on individual faculty achievements.

■ Adopt flexible models of faculty performance evaluations.

■ Eliminate the faculty's perceived gap between stated policies and actual practices.

"It appeared to me that we were getting to the point where there was more emphasis being placed on research. In the three-part mission of a university — teaching, research and service — teaching was coming out second best," Guzzetta said.

committee appointments and the new Judicial Board members.

The College of Agriculture competition team allocation received special orders. The college requested $15,000 for the 19 competition teams for its budget of $109,000. The Allocations Committee approved a $10,857.15 allocation.

"If the money is not available, then the students will have to pay out of their own pockets," Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator, said.

The allocation was moved special orders because the teams are already competing and students are spending their own money to compete, Don Beesley, agriculture senator, said.

Last year, the privilege fee for competition teams was opened up to other groups such as Speech Unlimited, the Society for the Advancement of Management and the debate team. None of the organizations have submitted budget requests this fall.

Craig Brown, coach and adviser for Speech Unlimited, was present at the meeting. He said his team would request a $9,000 allocation, but they would be happy with $5,000.

Brent Wiedeman, agriculture senator, proposed an amendment increasing the ag competition team allocation to $15,000 and adding the Speech Unlimited allocation of $5,000 to the bill.

After considerable debate about the allocation process, the amendment failed with a vote of 21-34.

Tim Riemann, ag senator, proposed an amendment that gave $15,000 to the ag competition teams. His amendment passed 34-18. The $5,000 for Speech Unlimited was not a part of the bill.

There will be $6,200 left in the account after the ag team allocation.

OPTIONS

The last option they suggest is that the University concentrate on the quality of education it provides to students with the amount of resources it has.

However, Hamilton and Thompson's suggestions are not the only options that K-State has, Thompson said.

"There isn't just one way to go. Other options include larger class sizes, tougher teaching loads for teachers and admittance restrictions," Thompson said.

Another change that can be made is in the nature of the University.

K-State is known as a research university because a large proportion of the faculty does extensive research.

Requiring faculty to focus more on teaching and less on research might cut costs, but would not solve the problem, Thompson said.

Hamilton also said other possible solutions included teachers using more technology to teach bigger classes, sending teachers to classes to learn how to teach more effectively and making sure departments have their best teachers leading the most difficult classes.

KSU tennis season to begin this weekend

Rich Pefley
staff reporter

The K-State women's tennis team opens the fall season this weekend in Manhattan at the Travelers Express International.

Tournament play begins at 8:30 Saturday morning and will conclude on Sunday. The Wildcats will face squads from Purdue, Oklahoma State and Oral Roberts.

Four new players will make their debut for the Cats this weekend.

Yana Dorodnova, a sophomore from Moscow, Russia, finished 1994 as No. 1 in doubles and No. 2 in singles at the Russian Junior Nationals. Dorodnova will play No. 2 singles and team with Karina Kuregian to play No. 1 doubles for the Cats.

Lena Piliptchak, from Kiev, Ukraine, will also join the Cats as a sophomore. She was ranked the No. 14 women's player in the Ukraine last year. Piliptchak will play No. 3 singles and team with sophomore Dinah Watson on the No. 2 doubles team for the Cats.

Yasmine Osborn, a freshman from Lenexa, finished her high school career in the Missouri Valley Tennis Association's top 10 and will step in to play No. 8 singles this year.

Laura Williamson, a freshman from Salina, comes to the Cats as their No. 9 singles player.

This weekend will also mark the debut of Monika Kobilikova as the Wildcats' assistant coach. Coach Bietau says Kobilikova brings a high level of expertise to the program.

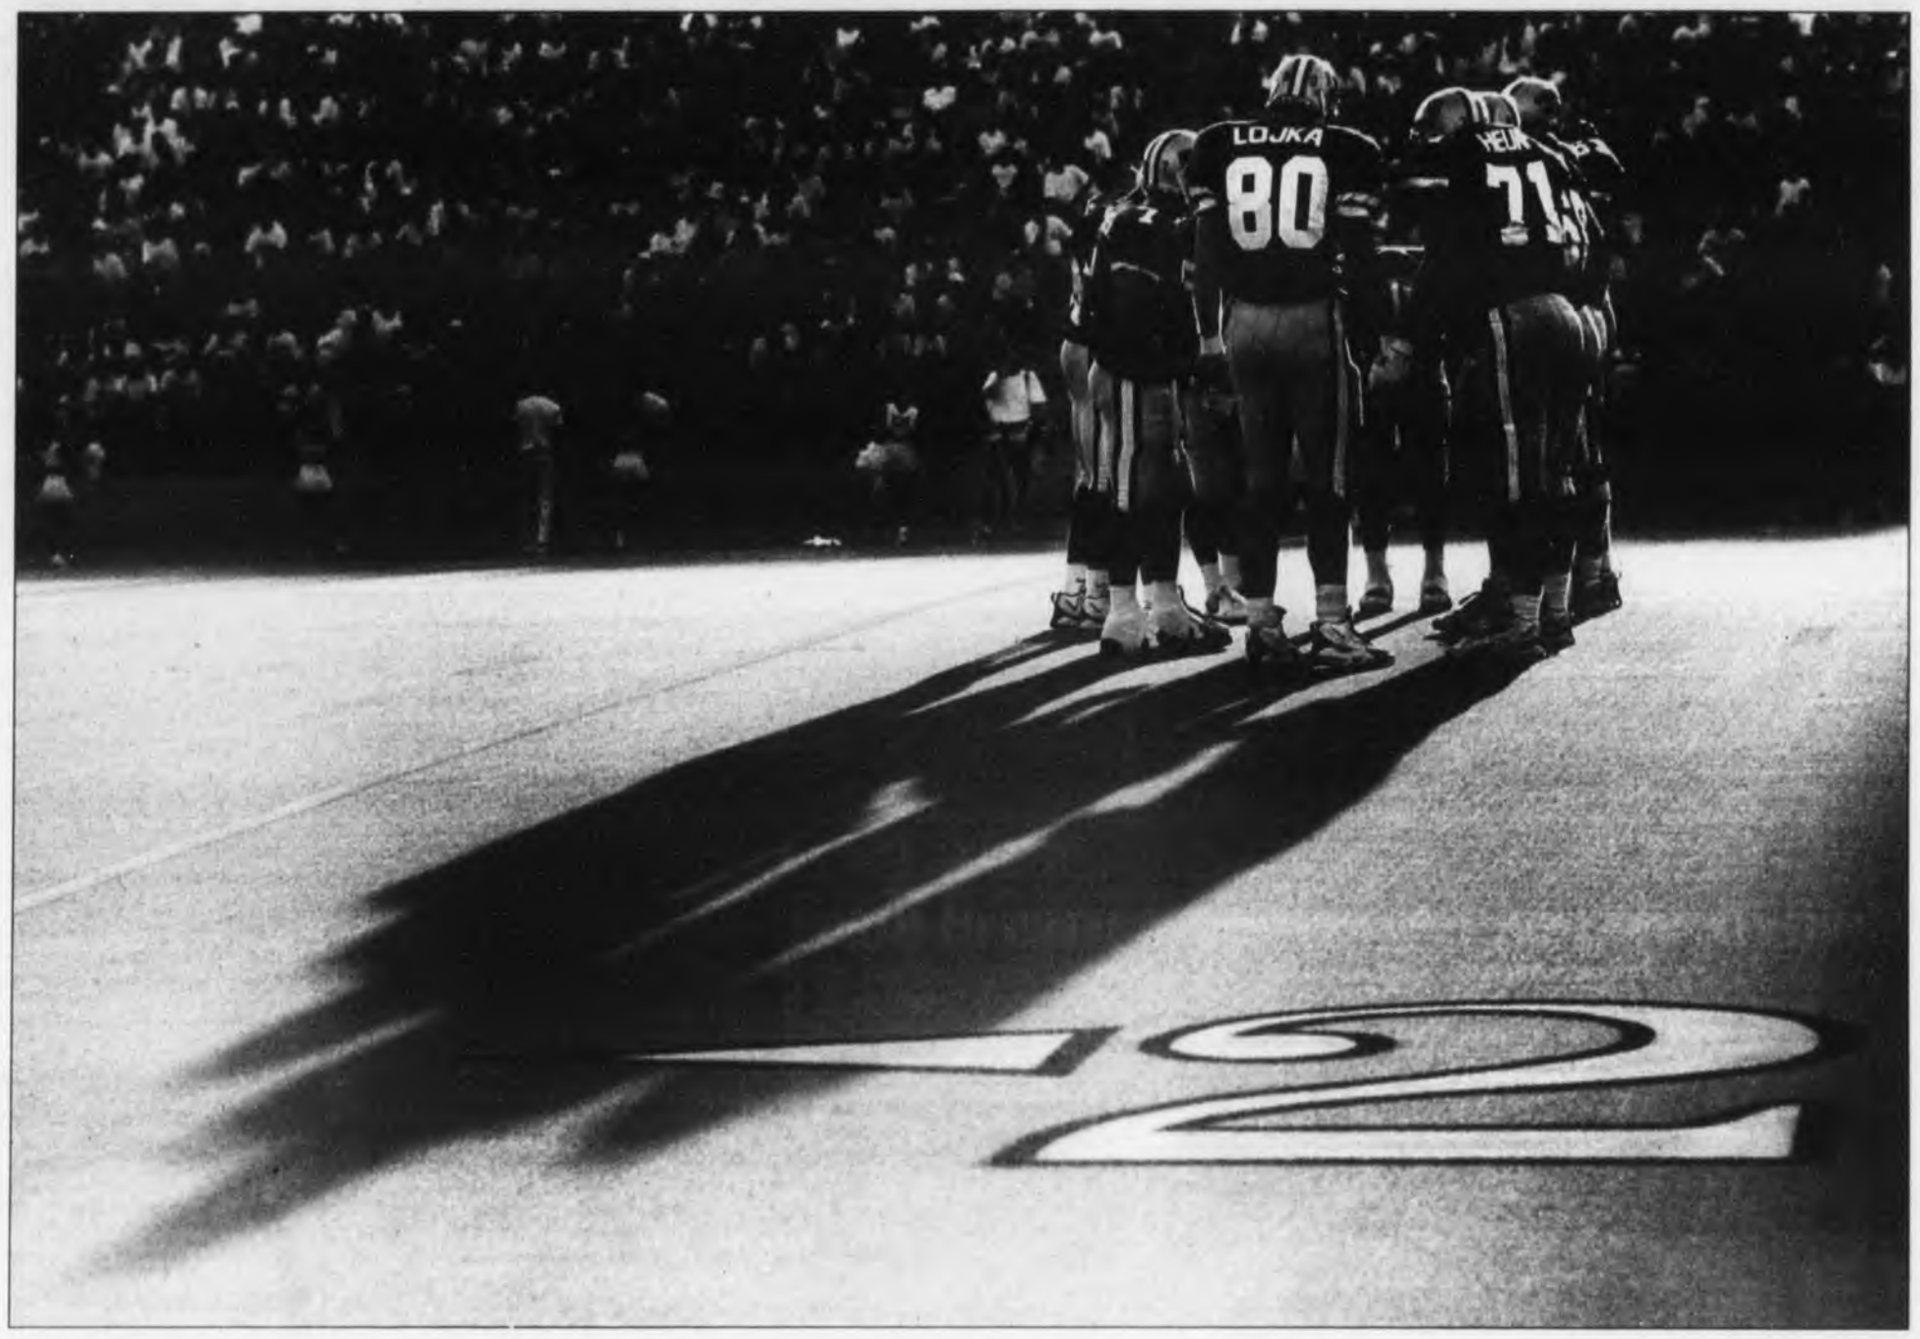
"She has a strong tennis background and a sense of confidence about herself that's well founded," Bietau said. "She's somebody I feel extremely good about having in contact with our athletes. I think she's going to be great for our program."

The tournament should provide a solid test for the Wildcat squad.

Purdue fielded one of its strongest teams in recent years last spring and returns two women who qualified for the clay courts in the NCAA Midwest Region last year.

Oklahoma State counters with Kym Hazzard, one of the top singles players in the conference last year. She is expected to challenge for the Big Eight singles title this season.

Oral Roberts will be an improved squad this year as well. ORU added two women to the squad last January, giving a boost to the team, and Coach Bietau said he expects them to be another step stronger this fall.



Last year, the Wildcats finished the season with a 9-12 record, 3-6 mark against conference opponents. The Cats wound up in a three-way tie for fifth place in the conference.

In the first match of the Big Eight Tournament, K-State was dropped 5-1 by Oklahoma State. The Cats then defeated Missouri 5-0 to advance to a match against Colorado. Due to inclement weather, the Colorado match was canceled.

The Cats are looking forward to getting this season underway.

"In our case, with so many new players, we're anxious to get some outside competition," Bietau said.

There will be four singles draws and two doubles draws in the tournament. Play begins at 8:30 a.m. both Saturday and Sunday. Admission to the tournament, which will be at the L.P. Washburn tennis complex just east of the Chester E Peters Recreational Complex, is free.

Two-back offense to return against Akron

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

By all pre-seasons indications, the K-State offense was going to be primarily a one-back, three-receiver set. At least that's what the media guide, news releases, television and radio reports and newspaper articles said.

But going into Saturday's game against Akron (0-2) at KSU Stadium, it looks as if Coach Bill Snyder is confident and willing to go with a two-back, two wide-receivers set throughout the course of the season.

Snyder said Tuesday the Wildcats have long had a two-back offense in the playbook but just haven't always used it.

"We've always had a two-back offense," Snyder said. "Last year, we were a little more of a one-back offense at the beginning, but at about the Oklahoma ballgame, we became a little bit more balanced and ran a great deal out of the two-back offense."

After the 35-21 loss to Colorado last October in which the Wildcats ran for only 64 yards and were forced to throw 41 times, Snyder implemented the two-back set the next week for the game against the Sooners.

In the 37-20 K-State win, the Wildcats rushed for 211 yards and went on to rush for 228 yards against Iowa State and 238 yards against Oklahoma State later in the season.

And against the Zips, who have lost by an average of 29 points a game this season, the Wildcats will look to pound the ball on the ground.

Last season, the Zips surrendered an average of 234 yards a game in their 1-10 campaign. And none of their top three returning tacklers are linemen. Senior linebacker Darwin Nelson had 95 tackles, junior free safety John Harpring had 87 and junior linebacker Jason Taylor recorded 70 stops.

All of which suggests the opposition gets into the secondary quite often.

Last weekend, Bowling Green rushed 397 yards against Akron in the Falcons' 50-12 win.

So K-State's running duo of Eric Hickson and Mike Lawrence will get plenty of work tomorrow night. And the pair of sophomores from Florida have made the most of their opportunity so far this season.

Against Temple, Hickson rushed for 107 yards and Lawrence 95, but the pair combined for only 86 yards against Cincinnati because the Cats were forced to throw the ball more in the second half in order to overcome a 14-point deficit.

Lawrence said he is surprised the Cats have gone to a two-back offense, with either Lawrence or Hickson lined up in the I-formation, and senior Dederick Kelly at fullback.

"I expected us to be more in a one-back offense, but since we've been doing good in the two-back, why not use it?" said Lawrence, who rushed for 80 yards in 1994.

"We'll do what will get the job done and two-backs has been getting the job done."

Hickson, on the other hand, isn't shocked by Snyder's decision.

"I'm not surprised," he said. "We work one-back a lot, but I think it's good for teams to see us in some two-back and some one-back because it throws them off."

With the Wildcats running an average of 49 times a game, as compared to 32 at this time in 1994, Kelly's role also has been amplified.

Throughout the first two games, Kelly has been a people-mover, throwing defenders out of Lawrence or Hickson's path.

"He's a big-time blocking back," Lawrence said. "It's because of him that we're getting the yardage because once he makes that block, we do the rest."

Hickson said Kelly gets a laugh out of knocking a defender to the turf with a loud thud.

"We have a lot of fun with Dederick," Hickson said. "When he comes back to the huddle, he's just laughing and talking about the dudes he just hit."

Even though Hickson, Lawrence and Kelly are making the two-back offense work, don't expect the offense to become Ground Snyder.

"It will balance itself out as it always does," he said.

But having to carry the ball on most downs wouldn't be depressing to Lawrence and Hickson.

"We're having fun," Lawrence said.

"We're doing what we've always done with rooting each other on and making plays."

K-STATE GOLF

▶ The K-State men's and women's golf teams hit the road again this weekend.

Both will play three-day tournaments, with the men competing in the KU Invitational in Lawrence and the women traveling to the Oral Roberts Invitational in Tulsa, Okla.

The Wildcats are looking to improve on last week's finishes, as both squads finished in the lower half of the field.

Team to earn experience at KSU Invitational

■ Jayhawks' poor showing last week leads to withdrawal from K-State meet

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

With his eyes on next week's big meet at Oklahoma State, cross country coach Terry Drake is using a bevy of freshmen and sophomores in Saturday's KSU Invitational at Warner Park.

"We go up against Arkansas, Baylor, Oklahoma State and Lubbock-Christian next week at OSU, so I'm not going to run our first nine (on the men's team)," Drake said.

"(For the men), next week is huge and one of the best meets we'll run all year, and for the women, it's the biggest meet of the season so far."

But that's next week in Stillwater. This week in Manhattan, several women who performed well Sept. 2 at the Baker Invitational will get a chance to run in their first varsity meet of the season.

Freshman Christy Swartz, who won the Baker meet, will lead K-State Saturday, with top runner Irma Betancourt taking the weekend off.

"She (Swartz) didn't have much competition (at Baker)," Drake said. "But she's been our No. 2 girl in all of the practices."

"KU isn't coming now, and I think it's because of what happened last weekend, so it's going to be a really low-key meet."
TERRY DRAKE
K-STATE CROSS-COUNTRY COACH

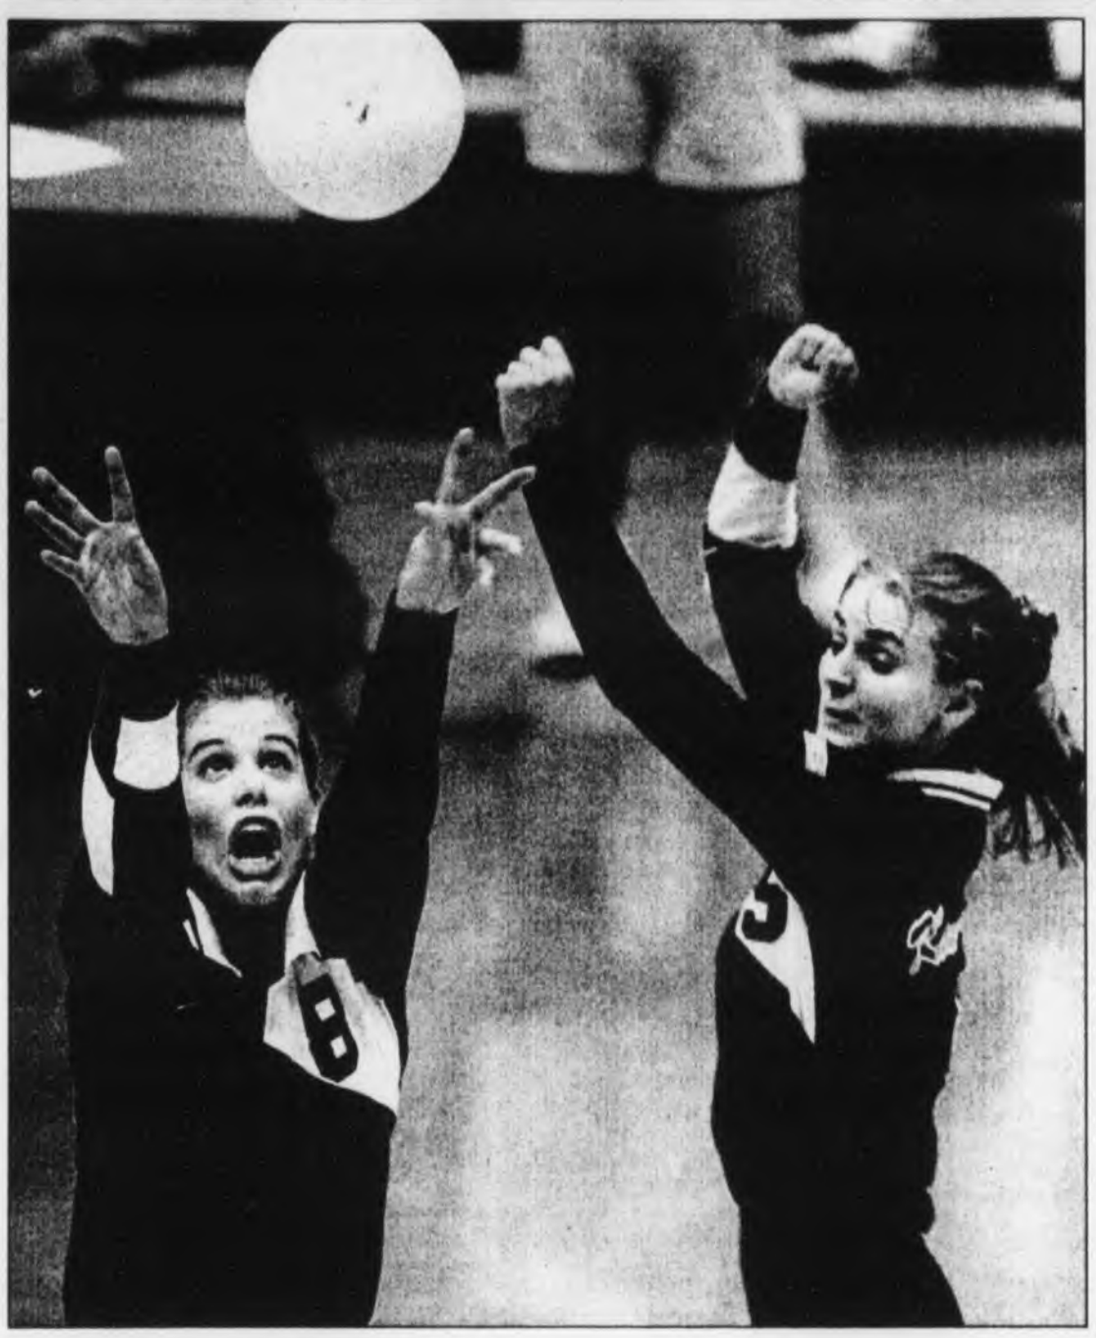
Also running will be sophomore Charity Swartz, who returned to the team two weeks ago after initially leaving the team.

Last week at the Jayhawk Invitational, Swartz, K-State's top runner in 1994, finished No. 23 in her first run of the season.

"She's just going to get better," Drake said. "She took most of the summer off, and that's why I'm running her, is to race herself into shape."

On the women's side, Drake looks for a Swartz sweep.

"We look for Christy and Charity to be one-two in this meet pretty easily if they work together," Drake said.



On the men's side, John Thorpe, who won the KU meet, won't run along with Ryan Clive-Smith (fifth place), and David Dominguez (seventh place).

That, Drake says, is the aim for the meet, which features mostly junior colleges after KU dropped out after it was beaten by K-State last week.

"KU isn't coming now, and I think it's because of what happened last week, so it's going to be a really low-key meet," Drake said.

"It'll be mainly for the girls who haven't run in college meets, and it will give our guys a little farther down the line a chance to run."

The women's 5,000-meter race starts at 10:30 a.m. Saturday with the men's 8,000-meter event following at 11:15.

Wildcat volleyball begins homestand with KSU Invitational

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

The K-State volleyball team may have to look around Ahearn Fieldhouse before this afternoon's match against Creighton.

After playing three straight weeks on the road to open the season, the Wildcats finally will get some home-court advantage this weekend in the KSU Invitational.

"The tournament gives us a chance to finally be at home," Coach Jim Moore said.

"We have a good stretch of matches that will be at home, and hopefully that will make life a little easier and a little better for us."

Aside from playing the Blue Jays today at noon, K-State (6-2) takes on Wichita State at 7 tonight.

Saturday, the team will face NE Illinois at noon and Rice at 7 p.m. K-State finishes the non-conference season next week with home matches against Missouri-KC Wednesday and Valparaiso Thursday before opening Big 8 play next Saturday against Colorado.

Moore said the biggest obstacle for the Wildcats to overcome before the conference season starts is intensity.

"We need to step our level of play up," Moore said.

"Our intensity, the way we go into matches, we need to have that as high as we possibly can when we get into Big 8 play."

Two weeks ago, Moore said he wanted to see improved defense, and the last two tournaments at Nebraska and Stephen F. Austin, the Wildcats have done that.

"As a whole, our level is better as a defensive team and as a blocking team," Moore said.

Statistically, the Wildcats are ranked 16th in the country in blocking, and last season, Jill Dugan led the Big 8 in block average and Kate DeClerk was third.

> "The tournament gives us a chance to finally be at home."

> K-STATE VOLLEYBALL COACH

Offensively, setter Devon Ryning, who has recorded 377 assists, or 12.6 per game, said she will go with the same hitter over and over again if they have the hot hand.

And so far this season, that title could go to several people. Dugan leads the team with 93 kills followed by DeClerk with 88 and freshman Kim Zschau with 79.

"If someone's got the hot hand, I'll go to them until they stop her," Ryning said.

As far as overall play, both Moore and setter Devon Ryning said the Wildcats were disappointed with the loss to Stephen F. Austin last week.

"It was a real disappointing against Stephen F. Austin, but that could have been the best thing in the world to teach us the lessons we need to learn," Moore said.

Ryning said all of the traveling could have been an excuse but isn't.

"That whole weekend we didn't play well," Ryning said.

"The thing we're working on is, 'no excuses,' and we let ourselves have some excuses. And that can happen. Stephen F. Austin taught us a lesson."

Men's, women's rugby play Saturday

Shana Newell
staff writer

There's rugby galore this weekend at Tuttle Creek Pond Area as both the men's and women's K-State rugby clubs take the field.

The competitions begin at noon tomorrow with the Cats competing against the Kansas City Women's Rugby Club.

"We usually beat them, but they won the final game of the season last year by a conversion," said Julie Leet, senior in hotel/restaurant management and public relations secretary of the club.

After the Kansas City match, the team continues competition in a second match against the KU Women's Rugby Club, whom it defeated 27-5 in a scrimmage last weekend in Lawrence.

This weekend's match will begin at approximately 1:30 p.m. Saturday.

Last weekend, four of the 13 team members tried out for and earned positions on the Heart of America's Select Side team. The district will send this select team to a tournament in Norman, Okla., next weekend.

Leet will join Jennifer Ohmes, club president and junior in advertising; Sharon Doll, graduate student in biology; and Julie Hix, club vice-president and faculty research assistant, in traveling south beyond the border.

The K-State Men's Rugby Club returns home following last weekend's tremendous 59-3 victory over Lincoln City.

It will play two matches against Springfield Rugby Club beginning at 1:30 p.m. Saturday.

"Springfield has been tough to beat in the past few years," said Brandon Derks, club president and junior in graphic design.

"They have always been a good team, and we enjoy playing them."

The team will bring its 2-0 record to the field and said it hopes to use that to its advantage.

Harold said the team has come together well, and the players are getting used to each other's moves on the field and functioning better, Derks said.

"We've got a lot of young people who just need time under their belts," Tim Harrold, senior in theatrical arts education, said.

"We've been working on several new penalty plays this week."

Both teams will play at at different fields near the Tuttle Creek Pond Area, down in the area of the campsites.

▶ COLLEGE OF BUSINESS

Faculty agrees to amendment

■ Requirements for pre-business majors change

Rebecca Schulz
staff reporter

Pre-business majors might be able to apply for a degree-track after completing 45 Business Administration Pre-professions Program hours beginning next fall.

Currently, pre-business majors are required to complete 60 BAPP hours before applying for a degree-track, but the College of Business has proposed to lower the required hours for application.

"Some of the faculty members felt if they let students choose a major before the 60 hours, it could help the whole advising process," Richard Ott, associate professor of accounting, said. "We're not cutting back on BAPP, just the time when you can apply for a major."

The amendment has been passed by business faculty and needs Academic Services and Faculty Senate approval before taking effect.

Kay Stewart, assistant dean of the College of Business, said the amendment benefits the students and helps them move into their degree-track.

"No one has raised any questions. I see it going through," Stewart said. "I assume it will be approved this year. We have a date of the fall of '96 for approval."

Ott said it will help students plan their major courses and give them a faster start in selecting a major.

The amendment allows students to talk to advisers within the different degree-tracks the semester before they start taking their major courses.

"If they do that, they can plan better for the class they're going to take and possibly get done sooner," Shari McCoy, graduate student in accounting, said.

Regina Nieberding, senior in finance, said taking more classes that worked toward her degree, instead of taking basic business classes, would have been more helpful.

"I don't think it would have changed any of my decisions," Jamie Krannawitter, senior in management, said.

He said being advised earlier would not have benefited him a lot because he would have to take the prerequisites before he could take his major course anyway.

The semester students are completing their 45 credit hours, they can apply at Calvin 107.

"The application will be reviewed at the end of the semester to see if they meet all their requirements," Stewart said.

If students have met all the requirements after applying, they will be assigned an adviser in their degree track, Stewart said.

KSU experiments return to Earth

Jennifer Burdoo
staff writer

The Space Shuttle Endeavour successfully landed in Florida Monday.

The shuttle was carrying various technical and biological experiments, which included eight designed by K-State faculty and students.

Rachelle Wolfe, a marketing coordinator for Bioserve Space Technologies, said it is too early to know the results of most of the projects.

"It takes us a while to analyze the data," she said.

K-State scientists, however, said they were pleased with what results they had.

"Our experiments were done really well," Jim Guikema, associate director of the Division of Biology, said.

Emmanuel Hilaire, graduate student in plant physiology, designed an experiment to discover changes in plant stress and respiration in space.

During the 11-day mission, Hilaire stayed at Kennedy Space Center to run the control group of his experiment on the ground.

Hilaire worked in cooperation with Christopher S. Brown, manager of the Space Biology Lab at Kennedy.

Hilaire's preliminary data showed that ethylene production increased in space, suggesting that microgravity may be stressful to plants.

However, carbon dioxide production did not increase, which indicates respiration is not affected by microgravity.

Hilaire said that he plans to study the cell ultrastructure with electron microscopy after his return to K-State this week.

K-State has worked with Bioserve since 1987, and K-State experiments have gone on nine previous shuttle missions.

An additional 11 or 12 experiments will be launched in Space Shuttle Columbia, currently scheduled for take-off Sept. 28 for a 15-day flight.

Three additional sets of experiments are also planned for launch next year, including a package which will remain aboard the Russian space station Mir for four months.

Students borrowing more for college

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — More American students and their parents are taking on debt — and more of it — to pay for college, a study said Thursday.

Borrowing for college has jumped 50 percent since 1992, from $16 billion to an estimated $24 billion in 1995, according to the Education Resources Institute, a Boston-based nonprofit group that provides information about college aid.

The growing loan volume, if it continues, could hurt not only students and their families but the economy as a whole by limiting their buying and saving power, the study said.

"We're trying to build awareness among consumers and in Congress that this could be a problem," said Ted Freeman, the institute's president.

In part, the increase results from good news — more people are going to college, including increasing numbers of minority students. But college costs also have grown, while federal grants have remained mostly static.

In addition, changes in federal laws two years ago allowed students to borrow more and made more students and parents eligible to borrow under the federal guaranteed-loan program.

College debt still accounts for a small fraction of all debt Americans take on, and thus not necessarily a cause for concern, some economists say.

"For a lot of people, it's the only thing to do, so they do it," said David Wyss, chief financial economist for market analysts DRI/McGraw Hill of Lexington, Mass.

"What's the alternative? If you don't go to college, you're stuck in today's world."

But Freeman cautioned that students may take on too much debt because of inexperience, leading to defaults. Surveys by the American Council on Education indicate some students don't understand their loan commitments, said ACE spokesman Dave Merkowitz.

"Some didn't realize they would have to pay the loans back," Merkowitz said. "And even those who did understand felt they had no choice but to take a calculated risk."

Chad Griffin, 22, a junior at Georgetown University, is among students taking such a calculated risk.

The Arkadelphia, Ark., student doesn't qualify for basic grants from the government. His schoolteacher mother and high school principal stepfather have three children in college, and a fourth soon to enroll. Griffin already has $32,000 in loans — mostly government-guaranteed — and expects more his senior year. He also works.

After college, he's confident he will find a job and repay the loans.

"But it still frightens me, seeing the numbers on those promissory notes," he said.

Parents surveyed in the TERI report said they, too, worry about debt but regard college as essential. As a budget priority, they rank it equal to buying a house.

Wyss said the survey indicates parents should continue to pressure colleges to keep down costs.

Early freeze endangers crops in Kansas

Associated Press

WICHITA — It may be a week before the total damage is known, but Kansas farmers were expecting significant milo, corn and soybean losses from an early freeze.

Snow fell in much of western Kansas from Wednesday evening through late Thursday morning.

Agronomists said, however, that serious damage was prevented because the temperature stayed around 32 degrees. Serious losses generally occur when the mercury dips to 28 degrees or less and stays there four hours or more.

However, the National Weather Service issued a frost-and-freeze warning for Thursday night.

"I'm sure if it got to 31, the sorghum is already being hurt out there," Dale Fjell, a K-State agronomist said of western Kansas. "Tonight's the one that's going to get us."

The greatest threat for a hard killing freeze was forecast late Thursday and early Friday over western and northern counties, north of a line from Ashland to Hiawatha, the weather service said.

South of the line, some frost was likely in areas including Wichita, Hutchinson, Manhattan and Topeka.

Kansas is the top milo producing state in the nation. The 1994 crop totaled an estimated 231 million bushels worth about $462 million. The largest milo production is in counties covered by the National Weather Service freeze warning.

Milo, field corn and soybeans all are primarily livestock feed crops. Weather-related losses could drive up the prices of the commodities, affecting the profitability of beef cattle and swine, according to Jim Mintert, a K-State livestock economist.

He said feed costs are about two-thirds of the expenses of bringing a hog to slaughter, with cheeper cattle.

If increased feed prices force producers to sell off animals, that could mean unusually large meat supplies and lower supermarket prices for beef and pork, Mintert said.

Can Computers Hurt My Eyes?

More and more, computers have become part of our daily lives. Work on computers can cause symptoms of eyestrain and fatigue such as burning tired eyes, trouble maintaining focus, and blurry distance vision for a while after working at the computer. Taking frequent breaks, adjusting the contrast and room lighting may help with these symptoms of eyestrain. If you wear glasses, having a current prescription and adding an anti-reflective coating to the lenses may decrease eyestrain.

Second Wind writes down-to-earth songs about casual issues

Page Getz
contributing writer

Editor's note: This is the final part in a five-part series profiling the competing bands in the Opus 9 band competition.

Second Wind is flying south for Opus, off the beaten path of its normal stomping grounds in Lawrence, Topeka and Kansas City.

While the band's members, now in their mid-30s, grew up in the same area and have played together on and off since high school in McLouth, they have only officially played as Second Wind for more than a year now.

Most of the band's influences reflect its generation but are not limited to it.

"We really like Neil Young, Ted Nugent and Grand Funk," David Pentlin, bass guitarist and vocalist, said, "but we like some of the new alternative stuff too, like Live."

Pentlin writes most of the music for the band, in which he takes a down-to-earth approach to most casual life issues.

"It's straightforward rock 'n' roll," he said. "I write about everyday life kinds of stuff — love, romance and greed."

Second Wind recorded a self-titled promotional tape out of Kansas City's Chapman studio recently that is available in both Kansas City and Lawrence record stores.

Independently, the members of Second Wind have had a lot of experience in bands during the years, and they agree this is the most extensive effort that they have been involved in yet.

"I'm as serious as I could ever be," John Abernathy, guitarist, said. "We're all dead serious. Steve (Garcia), the drummer, and I have been in bands together over the years, and then we both became fathers, so we took a break for a while," he said.

"I've been in a lot of bands, but this is by far the best one," he said. "We just think on the same wavelength."

In addition to the Opus, Second Wind is in the process of arranging a benefit concert in October for a neighbor who has been diagnosed with cancer.

The local concert will cost $5 a head, and the proceeds will go to cancer treatment for the friend of the band.

The band played at the Bottleneck's open-mike night last week in Lawrence, at Uncle Dale's bar in Valley Falls and at Abate, a weekend biker's camp-out at Lake Perry, where it played in conjunction with seven other regional bands.

The McLouth-based band said it is hoping to get more exposure at Opus and to get the attention of other bands so that it might have the opportunity to open for one of them in the future.

"We're real excited about playing in Opus," Pentlin said. "It will be our first contest together, and we're curious to see what kind of crowd turns out."

Abernathy said that even though the band may just be officially getting started, he and the other band members are anticipating a good time.

"We're just looking forward to getting out there and rock 'n' rollin,'" he said.

Dear Cassie,

What the hell is the point to the cartoon "Whatever"? I have never once even let out a single chuckle, or even smiled after reading it, and I still haven't seen one that has anything remotely close to a plot, storyline, or even cool-looking cartoon character.

Why doesn't the Collegian just sell that space for Pizza Shuttle so they can put some coupons there or something? Maybe even just leave it blank. At least I wouldn't be so disappointed then.

Until "Whatever" is no more, call me.
Chuck Woolery

Dear Mr. Woolery,

The Collegian is always looking for feedback, positive or negative. Maybe you should let the editor(s) know how strongly you dislike "Whatever." As with any form of discussion, some people can relate to it and some people can't; some people appreciate, and some people don't. I think the Collegian is probably just trying to entertain the many audiences that it touches each day.

Nevertheless, I do have to agree with you, "Whatever" doesn't really entertain me. Not to mention, as a broke college student, coupons are definitely always a good thing.

Dear Cassie,

I'm new to K-State and Manhattan. I have a question I hope that you can answer. Is it normal for college-age males to enjoy cross-dressing? I don't go full drag, but I sometimes like to wear women's panties. I enjoy it enough that I don't want to have to stop doing it, but I'm afraid my fraternity brothers will find this strange. I don't want to get kicked out of my house. Is there anywhere I can go to get help?

Unsigned letter

Dear Prince of Panties,

I would have to say that different things turn you on compared to the average Joe Student at K-State. This town, not to mention this state, seems to fall more toward the right — conservative, that is.

I don't think you would find good 'ol Bob Dole slipping into Elizabeth's black lacy Victoria Secret's before he heads to Capitol Hill, but as I often say to my readers, to each their own. It is your prerogative. Do what ever makes you happy.

However, you are smart to bring up the issue of your fraternity brothers. If you want to keep it a secret, it will be hard to do so since you live in such close quarters with 60 or more men. In addition, if you are a pledge, a word of warning: Watch out! You may end up being the butt of a mean prank, which will only lead you to embarrassment or hurt feelings.

Dear Cassie,

What's the deal with our basketball team? How come they are always hurt?

First it was Elliot Hatcher's knee, and now it's George Hill's foot. My gosh, we have to have these guys healthy if we want become a winning program. What can us fans do to help keep the team from getting hurt all the time? Even Chris Griffin had his knee hurt. Help us hoop-starved fans try to keep the rest of the team from getting hurt.

P.S. — Why is Matt Miller's hair so pretty?

Unsigned letter

Dear Hoops and Hair Lover,

I don't think there is really anything you can do personally to prevent any individual from getting hurt, unless you feel it is your responsibility to carry each player to class or dedicate your life to being George Hill's personal body guard.

All we can do is get pumped up for Wildcat season to start, be supportive of the players we have left and stand behind those individuals that are hurt. I too miss the days of victories in Ahearn, but be patient and give Coach Asbury some time to rebuild our team that Coach Altman so gradually brought down.

As for Matt Miller's hair, have you shared this opinion with him? Who knows, maybe you could get a date, or maybe it will boost his self-esteem giving him the confidence he needs to ensure us a 30-point-spread victory. Go Cats!

K-State professor breeds lean sheep

Dana Harding
staff reporter

A new breed of sheep is being introduced to breeders across the United States.

Neil Anderson, professor in food animal health and management center, is a breeder of Texel sheep.

The Texel breed is noted for greater lean muscle mass that produces a leaner carcass.

"A positive is that Texel are moderate-sized sheep — one could say their legs are short. Consequently, the leg of lamb is shorter and plumper, which means it has less bone and more meat for any given weight," he said.

Anderson said he first heard about the Texel breed in 1989 and saw one at the Meat Animal Research Center in Clay Center, Neb., for the first time in 1990. At that time, he purchased frozen semen. That autumn, he began artificially inseminating a dozen ewes.

"The Texel breed is native to the Netherlands and widely used in Europe. The breed excels in carcass characteristics by producing lean meat," Kreg Leymaster, research geneticist at MARC, said.

Leymaster said people in the United States have been interested in the breed for a long time, but the first sample of Texel sheep did not arrive in the United States until 1985.

"The breed was brought to MARC in 1985 and placed under quarantine for a period of five years. In August 1990, the first ram was sold to a breeder," Leymaster said.

In this country, the offspring of the fifth breeding is regarded as full bred. Subsequent to the initial breeding, Anderson purchased breeding stock in 1991 that were half Texel. After the present breeding, Anderson is two steps short of reaching the full-bred point with his herd.

Anderson said he became interested in the sheep project because he is interested in getting purebred Texels that will command a premium in the market place for breeding stock.

Two principal end uses for the Texel breed are crossbreeding for balance and for the production of lean meat.

All production livestock that go directly to market are crossbred to take advantage of the effect of crossing two unrelated animals. This results in faster growth and somewhat larger animals.

"One principal market for Texel sheep is to provide meaty rams to produce crossbred lambs that have better muscling than their ewes have," Anderson said.

Another use for a full-bred Texel is to produce lambs for seasonal markets on the eastern seaboards, Florida, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles. There are sizable groups of people whose culture includes the preparation of lamb for several holidays, generally in the spring.

"Whole families, even extended families, will ban together and buy a large lamb of appropriate size, and they will prepare it. That is very important to them culturally. They want a smaller lamb that produces a blocky carcass. That is, the meat is evident," Anderson said.

A potential niche in the market is for sheep milk and cheese products. Anderson said a pound of cattle milk contains 12.5 percent solid when diluted. A pound of sheep milk contains 18 percent solid when diluted.

This is positive because cheese is comprised of the total solids that are contained in milk. More cheese can be produced from sheep milk than cattle milk.

At this time, the Texel breed is growing rapidly in popularity.

"There are several other breeds known for muscle. It isn't a sure thing that Texels will be favored in this competition. It will be well into the next century before we can see if the breed has a place in this country," Anderson said.

Refugees face new enemy

Associated Press

BANJA LUKA, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Tens of thousands of Serb refugees battled filth, flies and hunger Thursday as the offensive that drove them to the northern Serb stronghold of Banja Luka appeared to wane.

Displaced by advancing Croat and Muslim troops, about 2,000 of these refugees were living in a former army building here. Flies swarmed around hundreds of people sprawled on straw beds Thursday, babies cried from hunger and the stench of unwashed people and sweaty horses filled the air.

Local aid officials were overwhelmed.

"We don't have enough food for everyone," said Miroslav Vjesic of the local Red Cross, as dozens of refugees jostled for handouts of canned goods. Medicine and other staples were also in short supply.

In a stunning offensive, Croatian and Muslim forces have cut Serb holdings to roughly 50 percent of Bosnia from the nearly two-thirds the rebels once held.

Yasushi Akashi, the top U.N. official in the former Yugoslavia, said Muslim-led government forces were continuing to fight in the north, but not around Banja Luka. The battles shifted instead to Doboj, a Serb-held town 45 miles to the northeast.

Doboj is an important road and rail junction, but the Muslim-Croat offensive appeared designed to surround and isolate Banja Luka rather than to capture Doboj.

Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic, facing immense international pressure to negotiate a peace accord, promised that his army would not enter Banja Luka, the largest Serb-held city in Bosnia.

U.N. spokesman Chris Gunness said government troops advanced Thursday around Doboj, and now controlled up to two-thirds of the 25-mile long Mount Ozren range southeast of the city.

Bosnian Serb radio said Serb units, apparently assisted by 1,000 paramilitary troops from neighboring Serbia, had halted the Muslim-Croat attacks on all fronts in northern, western and central Bosnia.

In Banja Luka itself, scenes of despair were multiplied in shelter after shelter.

"He hasn't eaten for 24 hours," said Rosa Strbac, pointing to her wailing 13-month-old son. "I cannot wash my children or feed them."

She, her husband and their five children fled enemy forces advancing Saturday on Bosanska Krupa and arrived in Banja Luka on Wednesday.

Like most of the estimated 100,000 refugees around Banja Luka, her family brought only personal belongings hastily thrown onto a horse-drawn cart.

The refugees left their belongings on the wagons, covering them with plastic sheeting to protect them from the rain. There was no room inside — several refugees complained they were packed so tightly at night that they had trouble breathing. One said an elderly man died overnight.

In a nearby school, old people and children slept on school desks. Many were crying, their faces etched with humiliation and despair, as officials brought reporters through on an organized tour.

In another makeshift refugee center in Rakovacke Bare, on the northeastern outskirts of Banja Luka, hundreds of hungry, dirty people mingled with horses in knee-deep mud in the center's yard.

Tens of thousands of Muslims and Croats have been forced out of Banja Luka since Serbs took the city when war broke out 3 1/2 years ago. U.N. aid officials said the expulsions continued from the region Thursday, as well as from central and eastern Bosnia under Serb control.

About 372,800 Bosnians have been driven from their homes in the past four months, the Red Cross reported Thursday.

Croatia's army, which has backed the Bosnian government in the offensive, begun pulling back from northern Bosnia after Bosnian Serb forces bombed them Wednesday.

U.N. peacekeepers near Bihac reported new Serb airstrikes east of Bosanska Krupa on Thursday. NATO, whose warplanes are supposed to strike at anything violating a no-fly zone over Bosnia, said it could not send jets to investigate in time.

On Wednesday, NATO announced an end to airstrikes on Serbs besieging Sarajevo.

Quayle chosen to lead Dole's Campaign America

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a dramatic overture to social conservatives, GOP presidential front-runner Bob Dole announced Thursday that Dan Quayle would take charge of a political committee Dole has used to support Republican candidates for nearly two decades.

In becoming chairman of Campaign America, the former vice president did not endorse Dole's presidential campaign. But Dole aides predicted the association would solidify Dole's standing with Christian conservatives, an important Republican primary constituency.

"I can think of no American who is better qualified to lead the battle for Republican victories in the vital elections that lie ahead," Dole, the Senate majority leader, said in a statement. "Dan Quayle has been a trailblazer for issues and ideas that sparked the Republican revolution of 1994. At the helm of Campaign America, he is sure to keep up that fight."

Quayle was on the verge of entering the 1996 presidential race himself earlier this year but abruptly changed his plans after assessing the daunting fund-raising and organizational hurdles. He later ruled out running for Indiana governor next year but said he would like to seek the presidency down the road.

Quayle has been looking for a way to raise his political profile and should get the opportunity through Campaign America. Dole had used the political action committee to bankroll his travels on behalf of GOP candidates while expanding his own political network.

Tapping Quayle to lead the PAC is similar to an overture Dole made to economic conservatives earlier this year in arranging for Jack Kemp, the former congressman and housing secretary, to be named chairman of a Republican commission studying proposals for dramatic tax reform.

"Senator Dole is clearly looking for lots of ways to send messages to the conservative base of the party," said Gary Bauer, a former Reagan White House aide who runs the Family Research Council, a social conservative group.

"I think the biggest impact will be a sense that Dole is for real in his more conservative stance, that he is putting a great deal of money where his mouth is."

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

ALCOHOL

"I don't associate drinking and tailgating, but I realize it happens, and I don't think it's that big of a deal," she said.

Banning alcohol in the stadium is one thing, but banning it in the parking lot is another thing, Riggs said.

"I can see banning it in the stadium, because I don't want the stuff spilled on me," Riggs said.

The ban of alcohol within the stadium seems to be commonly known as a relaxed law, Christy Drake, junior in business, said.

"They bring it in the stadium," Drake said.

"I don't know how they're going to enforce it in the parking lot."

Trying to enforce the law outside of the stadium might not even be worth the fight, she said.

"I'm not sure if it's a big enough problem to justify the cause. The costs will have to go up to have more cops patrolling the lot," Drake said.

The police will have to increase the number of cops they normally have on force if they want to enforce the policy, Mike Seyfert, senior in agriculture economics, said.

"Realistically, it is going to be hard to enforce. People can conceal it in a cup, and I don't think there will be enough police officers to patrol the parking lot," Seyfert said.

Jay Rozell, junior in elementary education, said the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics was sending mixed signals to the public by allowing alcohol sponsors to support the team.

"I believe the University is sending mixed signals to the public," Rozell said.

"Inside the stadium, there are signs of sponsors, and some of them happen to be alcoholic sponsors — beer sponsors, to be more specific."

Alcohol is allowed in the suites inside the press box and the Legends Room inside Bramlage Coliseum.

Leigh Poston, a Manhattan Catbacker, said the alumni might get to decide to tailgate elsewhere.

Financially, it could end up hurting the University if it starts making the alumni and Catbackers mad, Poston said.

been notices in the local papers."

"By the third or fourth game, we will start to issue citations," Grice said. "We will also confiscate the alcohol."

The educational process informs fans about the policy, Grice said.

"It has always been the same law," Charlie Thomas, director of Bramlage Coliseum, said. "We are just reminding people that there is a law, and we're making more of an effort to enforce it."

All the schools in the Big Eight have policies similar to the one at K-State, Grice said.

The University of Nebraska has a no-open-container law prohibiting the consumption of alcohol on the sports complex grounds.

"The campus police patrol the parking lots," said Gary Fouraker, assistant athletic director/business affairs at Nebraska. "They use a reasonable approach."

"We don't have a tremendous amount of tailgating because of our location," Fouraker said. "We are close to the downtown bars and restaurants. A lot of people go there before the games."

The University of Oklahoma does not have one large parking lot like K-State and does not need to enforce an alcohol policy.

"We don't have near the amount of tailgating as there is at K-State," said Jim Miller, football events coordinator at Oklahoma. "It's really not a problem for us. We don't have police patrolling tailgate parties all over campus."

Grice said he just wants Wildcat fans to be responsible.

"You don't have to be full of spirits to get spirited about Wildcat football," Grice said.

the same time they do a lot of improvisation," Ashe said. "They have some audience participation and, at one part, sprayed the audience with water."

The troupe also pokes fun at each other, the audience and the text.

For example, it created a saucy song about people in the Bible and how to keep them straight by their actions. No doubt, it has tended to cause a little controversy with more conservative audiences.

But it is funny, Ashe said.

"You can't choose a favorite part because you are laughing through the whole thing," she said. "It's not just a few cute parts like in some shows; it is funny the entire time. It's hilarious."

The troupe began performing at Renaissance Fairs in California in the early '80s. Its first full-length production, "The Complete Works of William Shakespeare (Abridged)," established a name for the group.

The RSC has performed at the White House, Kennedy Center and numerous other theaters throughout the United States and around the world.

The Kansas Arts Commission and the National Endowment for the Arts Foundation are presenting the Reduced Shakespeare Company at K-State.

Hostages taken in Chechyna

Associated Press

GROZNY, Russia — Gunmen took two Russian officers hostage in Chechnya just hours after a powerful bomb attack narrowly missed President Boris Yeltsin's envoy to the breakaway republic, a news agency said today.

The six unidentified attackers seized the officers at a military commandant's office in the capital, Grozny, Wednesday night. They then drove off in two cars, the Interfax news agency said.

In a separate incident this morning, an explosion rocked a Grozny oil refinery. Like another oil refinery blast Wednesday, it was unclear whether the explosion was accidental or the result of sabotage.

On Wednesday, Oleg Lobov, the secretary of Yeltsin's powerful Security Council and the president's personal representative in Chechnya, narrowly escaped an explosion that ripped through a bridge on Grozny's outskirts.

The attack destroyed a car in Lobov's motorcade and wounded four people in his party. Lobov was unhurt.

No one immediately claimed responsibility. Some Russian lawmakers suggested it could have been the work of Chechen rebels or Russian hard-liners trying to derail the peace process in Chechnya.

Yeltsin, vacationing in the Black Sea resort of Sochi, condemned the attack. His press service said the perpetrators obviously sought to aggravate the situation in Chechnya and torpedo the implementation of the military accord and efforts to reach political accord in the republic.

Movladi Udugov, chief representative of Chechen leader Dzhokhar Dudayev, today denounced the attack and the dirty insinuations that Dudayev's forces were responsible.

He offered to conduct a joint investigation with the Russians into the attack, Interfax said.

Yeltsin appointed Lobov last month to oversee the disarmament of Chechen rebels and to supervise the withdrawal of Russian troops, who entered the southern republic last December to crush its independence drive.

Despite months of peace talks, and a shaky military pact signed July 30, fighting has continued to rock the mountainous region.

Committee warned of closing effects

Associated Press

TOPEKA — Representatives for mental health reform warned the Hospital Closure Commission on Thursday the state is courting disaster if it closes a mental hospital without adequate planning and assurances that needed community services are in place.

However, those who spoke on behalf of developmentally disabled persons applauded the decision to close one or more hospitals. They said closing hospitals is critical because the financial savings can provide more community-based services in a time of severe budget constraints.

"I think Kansas is heading into a wilderness when it comes to closing a hospital for the mentally ill," Dave Seaton, chairman of the Governor's Mental Health Planning Council, told the commission.

"We have no plans for coping with those individuals who need 24-hour supervision in many parts of the state, including my own," said Seaton, publisher of the Winfield Daily Courier who has been involved in mental health reform planning in Kansas since 1988.

Seaton, in whose community one of the hospitals is located, said he personally opposes closing any hospital.

Local band ties for 1st place in Opus competition

by nolan schramm

Local rockers Smudge left the K-State Student Union $300 richer Friday night.

In the ninth-annual Opus band competition, Smudge tied with Lawrence's 425 Main for first after the judges gave them both equal ratings.

Smudge didn't enter for the money. It didn't enter for the fame. It might sound cliché in this era of modern-rock righteousness, but it just entered for the fun. Well, sort of.

"I don't think any of us went in with the mindset that 'We're gonna win this thing,' and we weren't disappointed with tying for first place," Hollis Berry, drummer, said. "Part of our goal was to win, but we also had a lot of fun."

The event was scheduled to be outside the Union in the free-speech zone. Although rains drove the contest inside, the weather didn't dampen spirits of the 200 to 300 people in attendance, Mike Hodgson, Union Program Council eclectic entertainment chairman, said.

"I wish we could have had it outside, but it was too cold," he said. "It was a huge improvement over last year."

Two years ago, Smudge entered the Opus contest with the name Teflon Brain.

In that contest, the guitarist broke a string and sliced his thumb, Berry's drum set broke apart in the middle of a set, and the contest was outside.

But Berry, freshman in music composition, said he has enjoyed the evolution the band has made into its present form.

"We were kind of in a speed-metal rut, trying to figure out what we were doing," he said. "A year later, we reset our agenda. We pushed a little bit harder, and we were more selective about what we wrote."

Whenever the band got in a rut, it was necessary to implement creative strategies.

"We did some crazy things. One time, we ordered pizza to the stage," Berry said. "Another time, our singer was drinking water from a Bleach bottle."

These theatrics attracted a larger audience due to the appeal of wonder, he said. People were always curious to see what the band would do next.

"Now, we've kind of channeled that silli-

▶ BALANCED-BUDGET BILL

Universities face charge on loans

James Dierking
staff reporter

A bill that would cost colleges and universities thousands of dollars is waiting for a decision.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., introduced a bill to the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee last week that would produce almost $10.1 billion to help balance the budget.

The bill called for a 2-percent charge to colleges and universities on all federal loans their students receive.

"It will probably cost about $850,000 to $900,000 a year," Larry Moeder, director of financial aid, said.

However, the committee altered the 2-percent charge to a .85-percent charge on Friday. Kassebaum's office was unable to comment Friday.

The bill, if passed with a .85-percent charge, would still cost K-State about $382,000.

"Almost 8,700 K-State students receive student loans totaling about $45 million," Moeder said.

YOUR VOICE

▶ Kassebaum's bill will be debated and possibly voted on by the Senate Labor and Human Resource Committee Tuesday. Voice your opinion to your senators and representatives by calling (202) 224-3121.

K-State administrators are unsure where the money would come from.

"It would probably have to come from a variety of sources that would really hurt the University," Sue Peterson, assistant to the President for governmental relations, said.

If the bill is passed, administrators will have to evaluate possible sources for the money.

"Really, it's going to come from somewhere in the student.

"Whether it's reduced student aid or reduced services somewhere," Moeder said.

Some colleges and universities are considering taking the money from financial-aid programs, although Moeder said that would probably not happen at K-State.

"I think K-State is too committed to providing student aid to leave it there for students," Moeder said.

Kassebaum's bill has received criticism from schools, although lawmakers are still concerned with reducing the budget.

"I think the schools and organizations are really jamming up the opposition," Peterson said. "But somehow, you have to make the numbers come out in budget reconciliation."

Women pack bags, leave Marlatt

The last of the women occupying the fourth floor of Marlatt Hall, traditionally an all-male hall, have moved out.

More than 80 female students lacking permanent housing assignments were placed on the floor, which is usually reserved as guest housing for the University. The presence of women in Marlatt was a first in 32 years of operation.

Bob Burgess, assistant director for business operations of Housing and Dining Services, worked to find temporary housing for the students.

"All of the students temporarily assigned to Marlatt were relocated out of there last week. As of the beginning of the week, there were no women living in Marlatt," Burgess said.

Renovations to the first and second floors of Goodnow Hall eliminated 80 female rooms in August.

"It was a combination of the Goodnow Hall spaces being under renovation and the conversion of Edwards Hall from a residence hall to University space," Burgess said.

"All the spaces eliminated in Goodnow were female spaces, causing the shortage and very few specifically female spaces lost by comparison in the Edwards conversion."

Moore and Ford halls opened terrace rooms in the basement to accommodate the overflow.

"The students moved mostly into Ford and West, though all the halls received a certain number with the exception of Goodnow, which was mostly full already," Burgess said.

Dave Yoder, director of Marlatt, helped students who were waiting for a permanent housing assignment.

"What this did was give some a better

K-State enters tight times; funding decreases

Jeni Pruitt
staff reporter

K-State will be forced to look internally for solutions to its budget crunch because of inadequate funding from the Kansas Legislature.

President Jon Wefald said in the State of the University address Friday the Legislature decreased K-State's funding by $968,000 for fiscal year 1996 because of a decline in enrollment.

Wefald said past Legislatures have subsidized funding in times of declining enrollment as a cushion against the loss of funds from tuition, but many new legislators were unfamiliar with this practice and voted to cut funding.

"The cuts make it difficult when you know you're not funded properly in the first place," Wefald said. "We return $1.3 billion dollars back to the state economy. No other business in Kansas has a better rate of return."

The Kansas Board of Regents has already approved linear fees for next fall, which would require students to pay tuition per credit hour, Wefald said.

He said linear fees will help funding problems because students will be paying for what they receive.

"The flat fees reflect a time when virtually all students were full-time students," Wefald said. "This is no longer the case. The linear fees will be fair to all students, and we don't want to keep increasing tuition."

The regents have also approved a program called tuition accountability. The measure

No alcohol allowed

Alcoholic beverages aren't allowed at KSU Stadium, but student and alumni tailgaters say the ban will be hard to enforce.

by Dana Harding

No kegs, no party balls and keep the alcohol out of sight was the message sent to Wildcat fans Saturday.

"If we see any kegs or party balls, we're supposed to tell the supervisor. We are not to do anything ourselves," Brian Neill, junior in business and parking director, said. "The police are watching for the smaller things. You'll be all right if you put canned beer in a cup."

Alumnus Mike Munson said enforcement of the alcohol policy will be difficult, especially when crowd support is strong.

"We have more crowd support now than ever. Why would they change? I think that if everyone acts responsible, then there won't be a problem. You can't have a good tailgate party without alcohol," Munson said.

Other fans said enforcement would be impossible.

"There is no way they can shut this down. The enthusiasm at K-State football games is incredible," alumnus Lawrence Andre said.

Some students said if beer is sold on campus, it should not be restricted at a University event.

"I figure if they sell beer in the Union, why not here? Nobody will come out before the game if you can't drink. May as well drink here instead of at home," Matthew Ohm, junior in park resource management, said.

▶ 540 UNIDENTIFIED BODIES UNCOVERED IN BOSNIAN MASS GRAVE

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — A mass grave filled with 540 bodies was unearthed in northwestern Bosnia after governmental forces recaptured the area from rebel Serbs, Bosnia's prime minister said Saturday.

It was unclear whose bodies were in the grave, but they were believed to be Muslims and Croats killed by Bosnian Serbs, Prime Minister Haris Silajdzic, said.

The discovery coincided with word of the latest ethnic expulsion by Bosnian Serbs — the driving of almost 500 Muslims from another Serb-held town under governmental attack. Expulsions have picked up across Bosnia as a peace deal that would separate ethnic groups becomes more likely.

Violence against civilians has been a hallmark of the four years of war in the Balkans, but tales of horror have grown more intense in recent months as sharp battlefield shifts have sent Muslims, Croats and Serbs fleeing for safety.

Mass graves are "a grim reality that we will be facing while liberating Bosnia-Herzegovina," Silajdzic said.

▶ GOP CREDIBILITY CHALLENGED

DES MOINES, Iowa — The Republican presidential candidates, shuttling early through key Midwestern states, jousted Saturday for backing from anti-tax conservatives by pledging smaller, less costly government.

Front-running Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole was most often singled out as the least credible. Dole chalked it up to the price of offering leadership.

"Who can you trust?" asked Pat Buchanan, a former TV commentator.

The presidential candidates spent their day shuttling between a meeting of 2,000 Republican activists in Michigan and the anti-tax forum in Des Moines.

▶ SIMPSON TRIAL NEARS END

LOS ANGELES — Here come closing arguments. The beginning of the end of the O.J. Simpson trial. Sure, it's not THE END, but we can see it from here.

On Tuesday, barring natural or legal disaster, lawyers will begin their final arguments before jurors who have recently looked comatose. Attorneys have not looked much better. The trial could be tree-dated by the circles under prosecutor Marcia Clark's eyes.

But wait, is that excitement in the air?

On Friday, when both sides rested, and the judge suggested working overtime to speed the arrival of deliberations, jurors actually guffawed. Work late next week? You bet. Just get us the darn case.

From snappy lawyers to weary journalists to the frequently cranky Judge Lance Ito, the strain of this year-old trial is visible.

"I think everybody is completely on edge," said Loyola law school professor Laurie Levenson, whose commentary appears in newspapers and TV broadcasts.

▶ EVIDENCE FOUND IN JAMES CASE

LEXINGTON, Ky. — A forensic scientist had an answer for one historic puzzle about 19th century outlaw Jesse James on Friday but also raised a new question.

Preliminary DNA tests revealed that remains exhumed from a Kearney, Mo., grave are most likely those of the infamous outlaw, James Starrs of George Washington University, said.

But Starrs also said the study of unearthed bone fragments showed James was buried face-down. The new question is why.

"There's a mystery you can sink your teeth into," Starrs said at the James-Younger Gang 1995 Kentucky Roots Conference, where he made his findings public for the first time.

In July, Starrs led an exhumation of the remains in Kearney to resolve lingering doubts about whether James' body had ever really been buried there.

"We could not, because of the state of our work, give you the final results as to the mitochondrial DNA," Starrs said. "That is not to say, however, that we do not have positive results to report."

Starrs said there is enough evidence to connect the mitochondrial DNA to Jesse's sister, Susan, through living descendants who gave their blood for analysis. He said every person's mitochondrial DNA is inherited from his or her mother.

A Texan claiming to be the great-grandson of the outlaw had contended that James had staged his death as a hoax, lived under aliases and finally died in 1951 in Granbury, Texas, at the age of 107. Jesse Franklin James of Leander, Texas, had claimed that the remains which were exhumed belonged to Charlie Bigelow, a James gang member.

Starrs said Friday that just about everything historians had believed about James' death may be confirmed by preliminary examination of remains and DNA testing.

Exhibit features families

OTHER

☑ "Other : Portraits of Multiracial Families" will be on display in the K-State Student Union Art Gallery until Oct. 6.

Scott Allen Miller
contributing writer

If you're one of those people who feel compelled to stare at multiracial families, here's your chance.

A photography exhibit titled "Other: Portraits of Multiracial Families" is on display at the Union Gallery. The exhibit consists mostly of monochromatic, posed portraits of ethnically and racially diverse families, accompanied by their autoessays.

Photography fans won't be riveted to the lens work of these shots. The photography itself is consistently flat and empty, as if the photographers were content with (or unaware of) the inherent two-dimensional nature of the medium.

What becomes clear quite soon into the exhibit is that it's not at all about photography or even art in general. It's about society. And like so many attempts at making political and social statements through an artistic medium, the medium suffers for it.

That said, this exhibit could be one of the more important showings in the gallery all year.

The exhibit's essays are the focus of the exhibit, not the photographs. Care was taken to make sure the subjects included a wide combination of ethnicities, races and sexual orientations. The exhibit also shows how multiracial families can be anything from interracial couples to families who grow by adopting children of other races.

Kansas, a state not exactly famous for its ethnic diversity or its number of multiracial families, offers few chances to become acquainted with the living, breathing, feeling people whose lives and love touch people who, at least superficially, are a little different from them.

Here's a chance to become more acquainted with this non-traditional expression of American family values.

The essays are also quite long. Leave yourself some time to get to know these people sojourning in the gallery and read what they have to share.

Alex Hiam, a white man who along with his wife adopted children of another race, is one of the subjects in this exhibit whose experience has been broadened by the unique needs of his children.

"Being a multiracial family really makes you part of a human community, not just a particular community," he said.

One couple in the exhibit has a special outlook on loving outside of their own race. Tim Blake and Rob Ranney have found that bonding with someone of another race causes them more problems than being a gay couple.

"It's much easier being gay," Blake said when describing the resentment of interracial dating. He said even some members of the gay community are critical of the practice, proving that gays can, of course, be prejudiced, too.

One pervasive conflict in the essays is how the families grapple with the balancing act of honoring the unique cultures of their children's ancestries with the need for family unity and cohesion. Another is how the families choose to handle racism.

An interesting contrast appears between Kathy and Dan Kiley, a white couple who adopted three black children, and Freda Sbar, a white woman who adopted a black daughter.

Both have heard it said that once a non-black adopts a black child, those parents become black, or more appropriately, become more aware of what it's like to be black.

Dan Kiley agrees with the sentiment because he has found that racism hurts more when it's his own child being targeted.

Sbar, on the other hand, is ambivalent about the statement's arguably racist tone but concedes she has become more aware of the ways people treat one another since she adopted her daughter.

Each essay has experiences like these to tell. They contain lessons that even the most tolerant of us could stand to learn. The photos, in spite of what they lack in depth, are redeemed by the love between all the family members that is so evident to even the most casual observer.

Although it's hard to imagine a bigot even darkening the door of the Union Gallery right now, those with some respect for society's diversity will be more humanized by this exhibit.

Those that can't help but stare at multiracial families will have their chance to stare as long as they want. They probably need to.

Poet: Women important to peace process

J. Scot
staff reporter

Women and the new generation of young people are the best allies for peace.

"Women are not part of the machine of war. We don't build the bombs. We don't arm the soldiers. Those in charge don't ask the us about war. Yet, women give men life," Ada Aharoni, president of PAVE, said Friday at Nichols Hall.

Aharoni is an award-winning poet, lecturer and international peace activist from Israel.

She is also the founder of PAVE, which is a non-governmental organization whose purpose is to pave a new peace wave through the pen, the computer, the cyber-wave and the mass media.

The way to bring about change or peace is to pressure the government through N.G.O, she said.

"N.G.O's are making big progress with the United Nations. All universities should have one," she said.

Aharoni

The purpose of N.G.O's are to agitate and pressurize governments for the good of the family, Aharoni said.

Women, together with men, could bring advancement and significant changes in the world, she said.

"Men are not used to the idea because there is a lack of knowledge of what women can do," Aharoni said.

Tara Glasebrook, junior in elementary education, said she liked what Aharoni said women have done and can do in the future for peace.

"She made me feel that as a woman, I can help in this ultimate goal of peace," she said.

Norman Fedder, distinguished professor of theater, said women are good for peace.

"Women tend to communicate through words, and men tend to communicate through force. We are socialized to behave this way by society and our individual cultures," he said.

Women suffer the most from war, and they can be the strength in stopping wars, Fedder said.

"Let's give women a chance at the peace process," he said.

The women's studies program, Office of International Programs, Hillel, the Jewish Student's Association and the speech communication, theater and dance programs sponsored Aharoni's visit.

Recommendations made for city funds

Cristina Janney
city-government editor

Student Senate's Government Relations Committee recommended improvements in lighting and sidewalks around the perimeter of campus be the top priority in 1997 for the City/University enhancement fund.

The fund was created as part of the University's annexation agreement with the city of Manhattan. The money in the fund comes from taxes raised on campus and is to be used for projects that benefit both the city and K-State.

The city approved $40,000 in funds for the lighting project for fiscal year 1996, which will begin in January.

Members of the committee said they were concerned about lighting for safety reasons.

"We are concerned with safety. Lights are something that are always needed, and it is a way to empower individuals," Jason Dechant, committee member, said.

The committee approved the following recommendations for the fund in order of priority:

- Lighting and better sidewalks on streets radiating from the campus perimeter.
- Stoplights at Claflin Avenue and Mid Campus Drive, and at Denison and Kimball avenues; turn lanes at College and Kimball avenues; a sidewalk on Claflin Avenue from Denison to College avenues; a pedestrian crosswalk at Sunset and Anderson avenues, and at Thurston and North Manhattan avenues.
- The creation of more bike paths both on and off campus.
- Continued funding of the campus escort service.
- Creation of a community plaza walkway on Moro Street from North Manhattan Avenue to 12th Street.
- A connection between Farrell and Manhattan Public libraries.

Besides the lighting project, the city commission also approved fiscal year 1996 funding for the bike path, stoplight, escort and library projects.

A new recommendation on the list for this year is a project to build a pedestrian plaza in Aggieville.

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, was not at the committee meeting but said no one from the city or University had contacted her about the proposed project.

She said a plaza would take up some curbside parking and that could be a concern. Sieben said she could not really comment on the project until she talked to the Aggieville business owners and manager she represents.

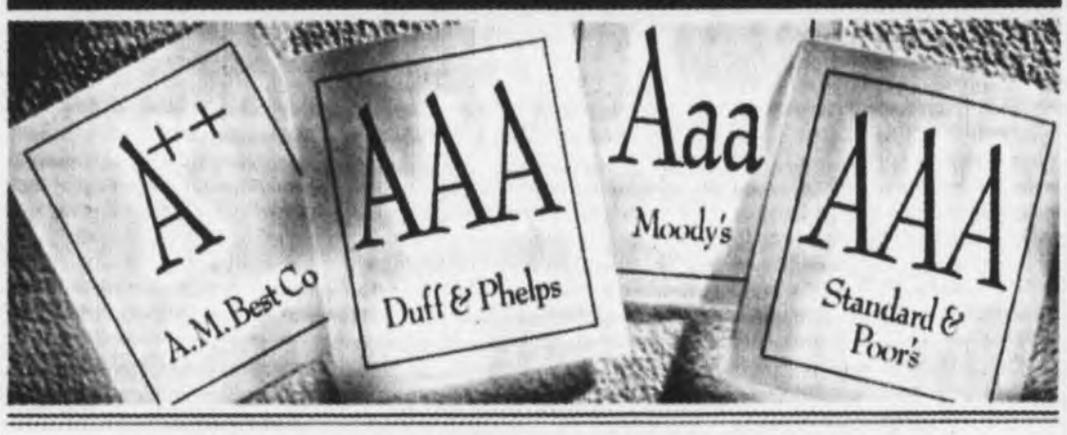
Eileen Meyer, store director of Streetside Records, said Aggieville Business Association members had discussed closing part of Aggieville two years ago to traffic on evenings and weekends.

Meyer said the association members wanted to bring music performers and food vendors to the area.

However, Meyer said closing parts of Aggieville to traffic permanently could cause problems because of the parking it would eliminate.

"There are older people and people that are just not well that shop during the day when students are in class, and those people don't want to have to walk a long way to shop," she said. "Also, businesses that sell more bulky merchandise really need parking close."

Aaron Otto, committee chairman, was not at the meeting but said many of the projects that were approved the first year were two- to five-year projects. He said a project like the plaza might not be funded until the 2001 or 2002, but the committee wanted to put the idea up for discussion.



A recommendation to fund improvement for the Manhattan Ice Rink was taken off the committee's list when a recommendation for the escort service was added.

Approval by the committee is only the first step in a year-long process to make recommendation for the fund. The committee's recommendations will be submitted to Senate for second reading Thursday night.

Student Senate and Faculty Senate's recommendations will be given to President Jon Wefald.

Wefald will make recommendations to the City-University Joint Projects Fund Committee, which includes representatives from both K-State and the city, including student representation.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

BEFORE TRUSTING YOUR FUTURE TO ANY COMPANY, ASK FOR SOME LETTERS OF REFERENCE.

You put more than just your savings into a retirement company. You put in your trust and hopes for the future, too. So before you choose one, ask some questions. How stable is the company? How solid are its investments? How sound is its overall financial health?

A good place to start looking for answers is in the ratings of independent analysts. Four companies, all widely recognized resources for finding out how strong a financial services company really is, gave TIAA their top grade.

IN THE FINAL ANALYSIS, TIAA IS LETTER PERFECT.

TIAA received A++ (Superior) from A.M. Best Co., AAA from Duff & Phelps Credit Rating Co., Aaa from Moody's Investors Service and AAA from Standard & Poor's. These ratings reflect TIAA's stability, sound investments, claims-paying ability and overall financial strength. (These are ratings of insurance companies only, so they do not apply to CREF.)

And TIAA–which, backed by the company's claims-paying ability, offers a guaranteed rate of return and the opportunity for dividends–is one of a handful of insurance companies nationwide that currently hold these highest marks.

CREF. FOUR MORE LETTERS EVERYONE SHOULD KNOW.

For further growth potential and diversification, there's the CREF variable annuity, with seven different investment accounts to give you the flexibility you want as you save for the future.*

Together, TIAA and CREF form the world's largest private retirement system based on assets under management, with over $145 billion in assets and more than 75 years of experience serving the education community. For over a million and a half people nationwide, the only letters to remember are TIAA-CREF.

TIAA CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.℠

*Not all accounts are available under the basic retirement plans at all institutions. They are, however, all available for TIAA-CREF Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs). CREF certificates are distributed by TIAA-CREF Individual & Institutional Services.

Emphasis on research limits quality of teaching

To adequately prepare students for the future, K-State must be prepared to focus on education.

University Provost James Coffman said Friday that K-State can expect more students in the coming years.

But as enrollment figures rise, K-State must develop a strategy to ensure that faculty are prepared to deal effectively with the growing student body.

A survey conducted by Dominic Guzzeta, Emporia State's Jones Distinguished University professor, found that 63 percent of faculty at Regents universities are interested primarily in teaching.

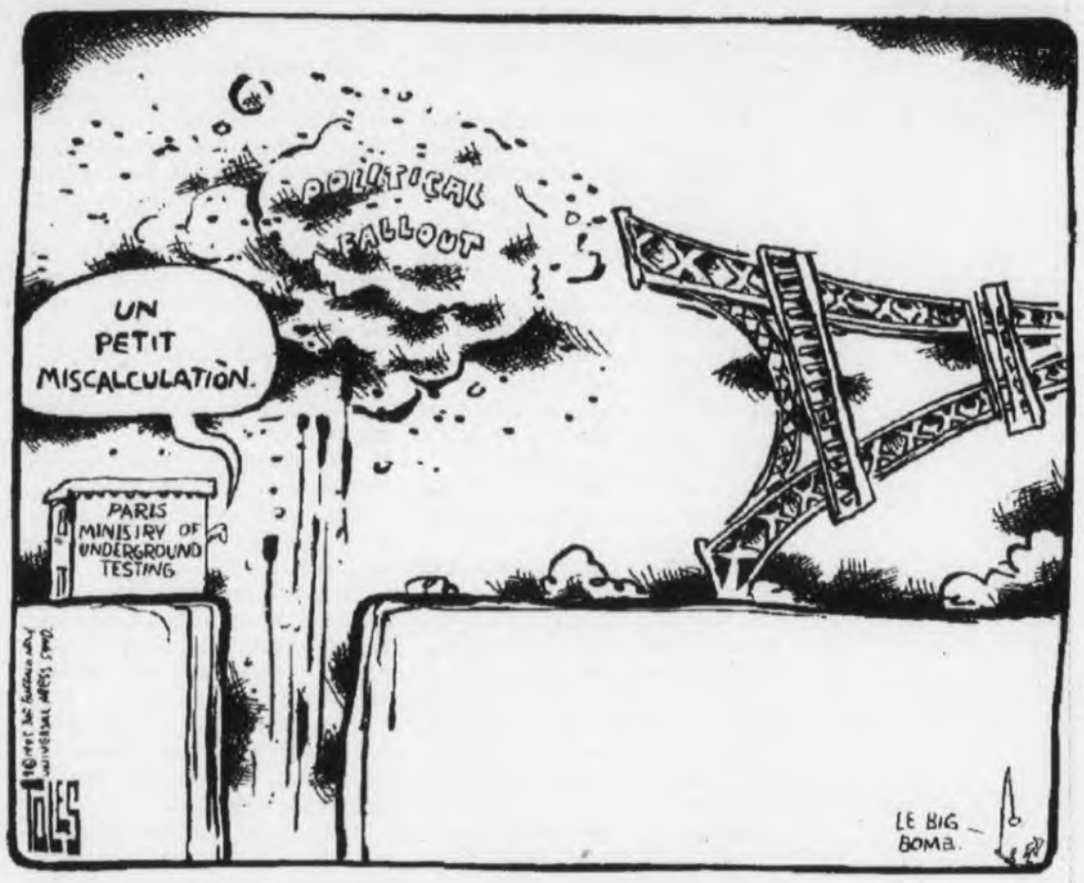
But 75 percent said it is difficult to achieve tenure without publishing, and 42 percent said this emphasis on research and publication reduces the quality of teaching at their school.

Research and publication certainly benefit the university, providing income and a vast array of educational opportunities.

But the push to produce should not inhibit classroom learning.

To adequately prepare students for the future, K-State must be prepared to focus on education.

Faculty Senate has recognized this problem.



John Havlin, Faculty Senate president, said not enough emphasis is being placed on teaching and encouraging administration and departmental leaders to place more emphasis on teaching awards when making hiring and promotion decisions.

Faculty should be encouraged to improve teaching styles at seminars and conferences.

And GTAs should be required to develop their teaching skills before entering the classroom.

The primary focus of a university is to its students. And while research can enhance the quality of that education, teaching comes first.

Credit cards demystified

Credit cards: You probably have one or two already. Credit can be a very powerful item in a consumer's pocket; however, it can cause great pain and stress if used incorrectly.

A credit card gives you the freedom to buy something on the spur of the moment without worrying if you have enough cash in your pocket.

It can make shopping look incredibly easy — just one payment at the end of the month.

But if you talk to friends or professors about using credit cards, you may find there are drawbacks. Many credit card users find they've spent too much money on too many items.

COLUMN

Scott Smith

The key to using a credit card wisely is knowing how to use it responsibly.

It seems that just because you are a student at K-State, you have the ability to be granted credit. You might forget you are establishing a credit history.

This credit history (prepared as a credit report by a credit bureau) is a description of how responsibly you handle credit such as, pay your bills on time and over credit limits. I recommend requesting a copy of your credit history at least once a year. The Office of Consumer and Tenant Affairs (CTA) can assist students with sending proper notices to the several credit bureaus.

Applying for a credit card: If you are going to apply for a credit card, think about how you will use it. You may want to compare the following cost features to see which card will best suit your financial needs.

1) Annual percentage rate: The APR measure the cost of credit on an annual basis and may be the easiest way to compare costs among credit cards. The lower the APR, the less you'll be charged for credit. The APR includes the interest rate and other costs, such as service charges or loan fees.

If you expect to pay back less than the full amount you charge each month, you'll have to pay finance charges on the unpaid balance. In this case, choose a card with a low APR.

2) Annual fees: Some companies charge an annual fee, no matter how much or little you use their credit card.

With many companies offering credit cards, do not pay an annual fee unless the APR is quite low.

3) Grace periods: This free period allows you to avoid any finance charges by paying your bill before the due date shown on your statement. Some cards have grace periods from 21 to 30 days.

Some have no grace periods and impose finance charges a fee for things such as paying your bill late or charging more than your credit limit. These extra fees, which may be charged in addition to interest, add to the cost of using credit card.

Once you have been granted credit and received the credit card, steps can be taken to help safeguard your credit card and most important, your credit history.

★ Sign your credit card in ink as soon as it arrives.

★ Never leave your credit card or receipts lying around.

★ Do not sign a blank receipt, whenever possible.

★ Never put your card number on a postcard or on the outside of an envelope.

★ Keep a record of your card number, expiration date and the phone number and address of the card company in a safe place, separate from your wallet.

★ Never lend your credit card to anyone.

★ Never give your credit card number over the phone, unless you are certain the company or organization is highly reputable.

★ Destroy all carbons and incorrect receipts.

★ Open billing statements promptly and compare them with receipts you have saved.

★ Contact the credit card issuer promptly if any questionable charges appear on your statement.

Consumer and Tenant Affairs will be conducting an informational seminar titled "Credit Cards, 101" at 2 Wednesday in the K-State Student Union 213.

A CTA student intern, Vicki Clements, and I will be on-hand to answer your questions concerning credit cards.

We will be showing a video titled "Credit Wise," from American Express and have several brochures about credit cards.

If you are unable to attend the seminar, feel free to stop by the CTA office in the Office of Student Activities and Services on the Ground Floor of the union, to pick up any brochures concerning consumer credit and credit cards.

Any choice of sexuality remains valid

It would probably shock some of my more liberal friends to hear me say I agree with the Radical Religious Right on one issue: Some people do chose to be gay.

So does that mean they are less deserving of respect than those who were born gay?

Many liberals have the attitude, "Well, since homosexuals didn't choose to be that way, we should accept homosexuality as a normal part of of life."

Just because homosexuals didn't choose to be that way? Are you saying homosexual behavior is ONLY acceptable if a person DIDN'T choose to be attracted to members of the same sex?

But what if someone DID choose? Would homosexuality then be unacceptable to the Politically Correct crowd? Is there no room for "acquired taste?"

I find the attitude of "they didn't choose to be that way" a bit condescending — as if homosexual sex were some sort of aberration, instead of a normal part of the human experience.

This may come as a shock to some card-carrying liberals, but I do know some self-identified lesbians on this campus who will tell you they chose to be lesbian as a political act.

So are they less acceptable than the gay man who says he was "born that way?" Is the love of these women who choose to love other women less valid because there was a conscious decision to make women the center of their lives, instead of men? Whose cause is more P.C.?

And what of bisexuals, like myself, who started out one way (in my case, gay) who have made a conscious choice to broaden their sexual horizons to members of the opposite sex? What of the young "omnisexual" woman whose primary attraction is to men, but has decided not to limit her options, just in case a woman she likes comes along?

COLUMN

Kevyn Jacobs

Is it possible there is more than one kind of homosexuality in the range of human experience?

It seems to me these are all questions that go to the very heart of human sexuality, and the narrow categories we as a culture have tried to put the broad range of human sexual experience into.

But sexuality is one of those things that just doesn't like to be boxed up into neat little opposing categories of "straight" and "gay," with "bisexuality" somewhere in between.

What if Alfred Kinsey was right? What if all human beings are, to one degree or another, bisexual? What if every one of us has the potential to enjoy being sexually active either with a member of the opposite sex, or a member of the same sex?

I suspect this reality may lie behind the intense fear many religious individuals have surrounding the subject of homosexuality — why these individuals are so convinced homosexuality is a choice and a temptation that most people need to be discouraged from giving in to.

I suspect these individuals sense deep down that almost anyone could be tempted into this "sin" ... and enjoy it.

Just as most homosexuals could probably be tempted to have sex with a member of the opposite sex ... and enjoy it.

We see evidence of this in traditional all-male or all-female environments (ships, prisons, convents) when members of the opposite sex aren't around, people turn to members of the same sex for physical affection.

These are folks we wouldn't say are "gay", even though they engage in homosexual sex — and even relish in it!

Many human cultures do not have this taboo, and in those cultures, people we would identify as "heterosexual" occasionally have sex with members of the same sex, and individuals we would identify as "homosexual" occasionally engage in sex with members of the opposite sex.

To these cultures, the concepts of "homosexual" and "heterosexual" are alien — you just have sex with who you have sex with. And if you prefer one sex over another, well, so be it.

In fact, "homosexuality" and "heterosexuality" didn't really exist in our own culture until about a hundred years ago.

The word "homosexual" was coined in the 1890s, and the word "heterosexual" followed soon after.

These were words coined to identify which direction an individual's sexual preference predominantly went — but in reality they are artificial social constructs that attempt to put human sexuality into neat little categories, and human sexuality is anything but neat.

That's why the bisexual movement is having such a profound effect on the way people look at sex and sexual orientation.

More and more people are stepping forward and saying their sexuality can't fit into one little box or another. That sexuality is too fluid.

So, what if I choose to develop an "acquired taste" in women ... does that make my sexuality a little less valid?

▶ BLUES FOR BEER

Editor,

What, no beer at the stadium?

As a K-State graduate (1990), I can tell you that this would not be a great idea. I have in the last month moved out of Kansas and can no longer attend games. But, tailgate parties are one of the things that alumni look forward to on fall weekends. During the week, most of us work our asses off, some at very corporate, serious positions. To be able to relax and cut loose on the weekend is very enjoyable.

We don't come into town, get drunk and kill 100 people while driving home. Our drinking is done in moderation — and if not, our wives/husbands drive home.

It's another case of the "Hey, now that we got them coming to the games, let's do something stupid to piss them off" mentality.

Mike Kastens
Austin, Texas

▶ BEER AT STADIUM

Editor,

The issue of the consumption of alcohol on state property is certainly a delicate matter. The University has been able to allow alcohol to be served during certain functions and ceremonies, in various locations around campus. If drinking is to be eliminated at the stadium, it must be banned completely, including the press box.

The persons that really get hurt in this matter are the University police. Trying to get a handful of officers to enforce a policy over tens of thousands of people is asinine. I hope that some of the administrators remember the riots of '88, resulting from a similar type of enforcement.

I encourage students to respect the campus police, for they are only doing their job.

If this plan does go into effect, alumni and students both should respond by having their parties elsewhere and then having a sober driver or cab deliver them to the game.

The best way to fight back is in the pocketbook. Revenues from football parking are in the millions of dollars per year and go to support the enforcement of these polices.

Coffman: Change inevitable

Dana Harding
staff reporter

How K-State will deal with an enrollment growth of up to 19 percent in the next five to seven years was discussed at a University-wide forum Friday.

Representatives of students, faculty and administrators talked about the inevitable changes K-State will face because of enrollment growth without significant increases in state funding.

Enrollment is expected to increase at K-State because of increases in the size of high-school graduating classes in Kansas in coming years.

"There is no way to predict the exact outcome of change, but as a university, we must adapt if we want to survive," James Coffman, University provost, said.

Coffman said because a university is the first source of new knowledge, it must consider who will be affected if it does not adapt to technological and budget changes.

"A university is always evolving. What is at stake is the education of millions of young people. There are 20,000 students at KSU per year that are affected," Coffman said.

He said the future of K-State depends on the making of strategic choices and upholding the mission statement of the University.

"Good ideas are our biggest need. Some will fly, and some won't. The only certainty we have ahead of us is change," he said.

Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said universities need to look realistically at the needs of its future students and how long it will take those students to graduate.

He said more degrees are requiring 4-1/2 to five years to complete, which will have effects on enrollment and the cost of higher education.

He said although more future students will be computer-literate, more remedial courses will have to be offered for basic skills because some students are not being prepared for college by public schools.

A student serving on the Strategic Planning Committee gave his advice on how to continue making K-State a better place.

"Financial accessibility needs to continue being available for K-State students. If the funding is taken away, students will be forced to work more hours at part-time jobs, forced to go farther in debt and will be in school longer," said Mike Zamrzla, student member of the Strategic Planning Committee.

He said students have a responsibility to become an active part of the administrative and legislative process.

John Havlin, Faculty Senate president, said students need to be properly prepared to face the world.

"We need to start asking, 'Are we preparing our students for the world?' Students need communication, analytical and problem-solving skills," Havlin said.

He said the Strategic Planning Committee focused on enhancing the learning environment for students with faculty leadership.

Havlin said not enough emphasis and rewards are attached to teaching. He said research is often given more weight in promotion and pay decisions.

Havlin said graduate teaching assistants also need to be encouraged to improve their teaching skills. He said GTAs are often discouraged from spending time learning how to teach.

The committee members said they are open for additional comments and suggestions about the strategic plan process.

PRESIDENT JON WEFALD

New students increase; total enrollment falls

Gina Buster
staff reporter

Fall enrollment at K-State is down by 188 from fall 1994.

K-State enrollment is 20,476, compared with 20,664 in fall 1994 on the 20th enrollment day.

Much of the decrease in enrollment can be based on a decline in Fort Riley enrollments, Richard Elkins, University director of admissions, said.

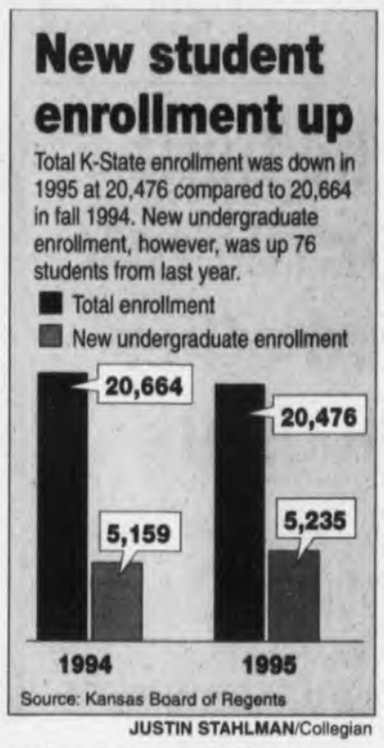
"We were fairly much aware of where the peaks and valleys would be because of enrollment from the spring and summer. Fort Riley is a big off-campus offering, which really affects us," Elkins said.

Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said the lower enrollment figures are a sign of demographics and economics rather than a reflection of K-State.

"We need to come up with creative ways to allow all students financial access to K-State," Finkeldei said.

Enrollment overall at Kansas Board of Regents schools was down 1.1 percent or 866 students.

The University of Kansas Medical Center had the highest percentage decrease in enrollment, losing 107 students compared to fall 1994 enrollment. K-State-Salina had the largest percentage increase in enrollment with a gain of 37 students for an enrollment of 795 students.



K-State Veterinary Medical Center's enrollment remained steady with an increase of four students this fall.

The largest losses of students across the regents system was in non-resident enrollment, which declined by 824 students.

Enrollment of non-resident students was down by 243 students at K-State this fall.

Although off-campus and non-resident student enrollment is down at K-State, on-campus enrollment at the Manhattan and K-State-Salina campuses remained steady with an increase of two students.

This is mainly because of an increase in the number of new students attending K-State. New student enrollment, which includes new freshmen and transfer students, increased by 76 students for a total of 5,235.

JUSTIN STAHLMAN/Collegian

"We were right on target with our predictions. This is the third year in a row that we had an increase in freshmen, and that is the key," K-State President Jon Wefald said.

Don Foster, University registrar, said the size of the sophomore and junior classes are also increasing because of increases in the size of the freshman classes the last two years.

These increases are the result of increases in high-school graduating classes and retention of students, he said.

Enrollment is expected to increase further in the next five to seven years because of larger high-school graduating classes, and K-State might see as high as a 19-percent increase in enrollment in that time, Wefald said at his State of the University address Friday.

Finkeldei said he believes he knows what attracts new students to K-State.

"I think it's the type of people we have at K-State. We're friendly. When people tour, they see what it's like to go to K-State, and they see friendliness. That's what separates us," Finkeldei said.

TUITION

would allow universities to keep their additional tuition money related to enrollment growth.

This would make tuition money immediately available to meet the demands of rapid enrollment growth, he said.

K-State will also join efforts withthe University of Kansas to increase lobbying for more state funds.

"On the football field, we compete, but we love KU," Wefald said. "We work with them closely — we have to. In developing a team effort, we're far more successful."

Despite funding cuts, Wefald stressed the need for increased faculty salaries.

"The faculty represent the heart and soul of the University. They're our most valuable players," Wefald said. "If you don't have competitive salaries, your university becomes hollow."

Although compared with other land-grant universities, K-State moved up from 44th to 42nd in faculty salaries, K-State faculty salaries are below the average for land-grant universities.

Wefald said he wants to establish competitive faculty salaries that would move K-State beyond that of its peers.

In the midst of a gloomy forecast, Wefald praised the University for its achievements.

"We are now the school of choice in this state. Period. Amen. Good night," he said.

He said K-State had a Marshall Fellowship scholar and four Goldwater scholars this year. K-State has had 23 Goldwaters scholars, tying with Princeton and placing only one recipient behind Harvard.

As an accumulative of all the significant national competitive fellowships, the Marshall, the Rhodes, the Goldwater and the Truman, K-State has had 50 awards in the past 10 years, more than any other public university, he said.

"We drove a Mack truck showing our Goldwaters off last year," Wefald said. "It drives others nuts how many Goldwaters, Trumans and Marshalls we've had."

Wefald also praised the faculty for teaching and research awards.

Faculty received $51.7 million for extramural competitive research, a new record, he said.

"This is an extraordinary achievement in a period of extreme competition and, in many cases, declining budgets in the national research foundations," Wefald said. "It's a clear testimony to the outstanding quality of our hard-working faculty."

K-State's membership in the Big 12 and athletic success has also boosted the University's appeal, he said.

"When we win Marshalls, we get on page 2 or 3 of the newspapers, but when we won the Copper Bowl, we were on the front page in solid color," he said. "This creates good will."

This athletic success has been a key factor in K-State's stable position in the Big 12, he said.

Wefald said he predicts the K-State women's volleyball team would be in the top 20 within the next four years.

In closing, Wefald said he pledged his continued support for affirmative action.

"Many are retreating from affirmative action," he said, "but we won't. It's not only the morally right thing to do, but it improves the educational oppor-

The hunt for the title and other thoughts

It's time to redraw the national-championship picture.

Nebraska, Florida State, Florida and Southern Cal are still going strong.

Each has recorded an embarrassing blowout of a weakling opponent, and each has thumped at least one semi-respectable opponent.

Alabama, Auburn, Notre Dame, Miami and Texas A&M are out. The first three lost to good, but not great, teams.

Miami has two losses (can we say "hooo-ray?") to mediocre teams.

And while the Aggies' loss came at the hands of a good Colorado team, the weakness of the Southwest Conference relative to the Big 8 and Southeastern conferences will prevent them from climbing back into the top spot.

COLUMN

DAN LEWERENZ

Penn State's close call at home against Texas Tech probably dropped the Nittany Lions out of the running.

Though itwill likely finish the regular season undefeated again, Penn State may already be too far behind the Florida schools and Nebraska to top them in the polls even if they rout an undefeated USC in the Rose Bowl.

Colorado and Ohio State have to be considered newcomers to this year's national-championship debate.

The Buffaloes were a big question mark after losing 10 players to the NFL and seeing their entire senior coaching staff leave.

But first-year coach Rick Neuheisel answered those questions by annihilating Wisconsin in the season-opener, then beating No. 3 Texas A&M in last weekend's biggest matchup.

Nebraska goes to Boulder Oct. 28 for a game that might decide who plays for the national title in the Fiesta Bowl.

Likewise, Ohio State has made believers by easily overcoming Boston College, Washington and Pittsburgh.

The next two weeks are crucial for the Buckeyes, who will be host to Notre Dame Sept. 30 and visit Penn State Oct. 7. If OSU wins both games, it'll win enough voters from the East Coast and industrial Midwest to stake a legitimate championship claim.

And what discussion of the national championship would be complete without K-State?

The Wildcats are 3-0 coming off a 67-0 shellacking (the spelling of which was the subject of much discussion in the press box Saturday night) of the mighty Akron Zips. And the schedule is favorable for the Cats.

K-State travels to Lincoln, where the Cats have nearly upset Nebraska on their last two visits, Oct. 21. The Big 8's other ranked teams (Kansas, Oklahoma and Colorado) all visit Manhattan.

Big wins in these big games will mean a big Fiesta for Cat fans.

■ Updates

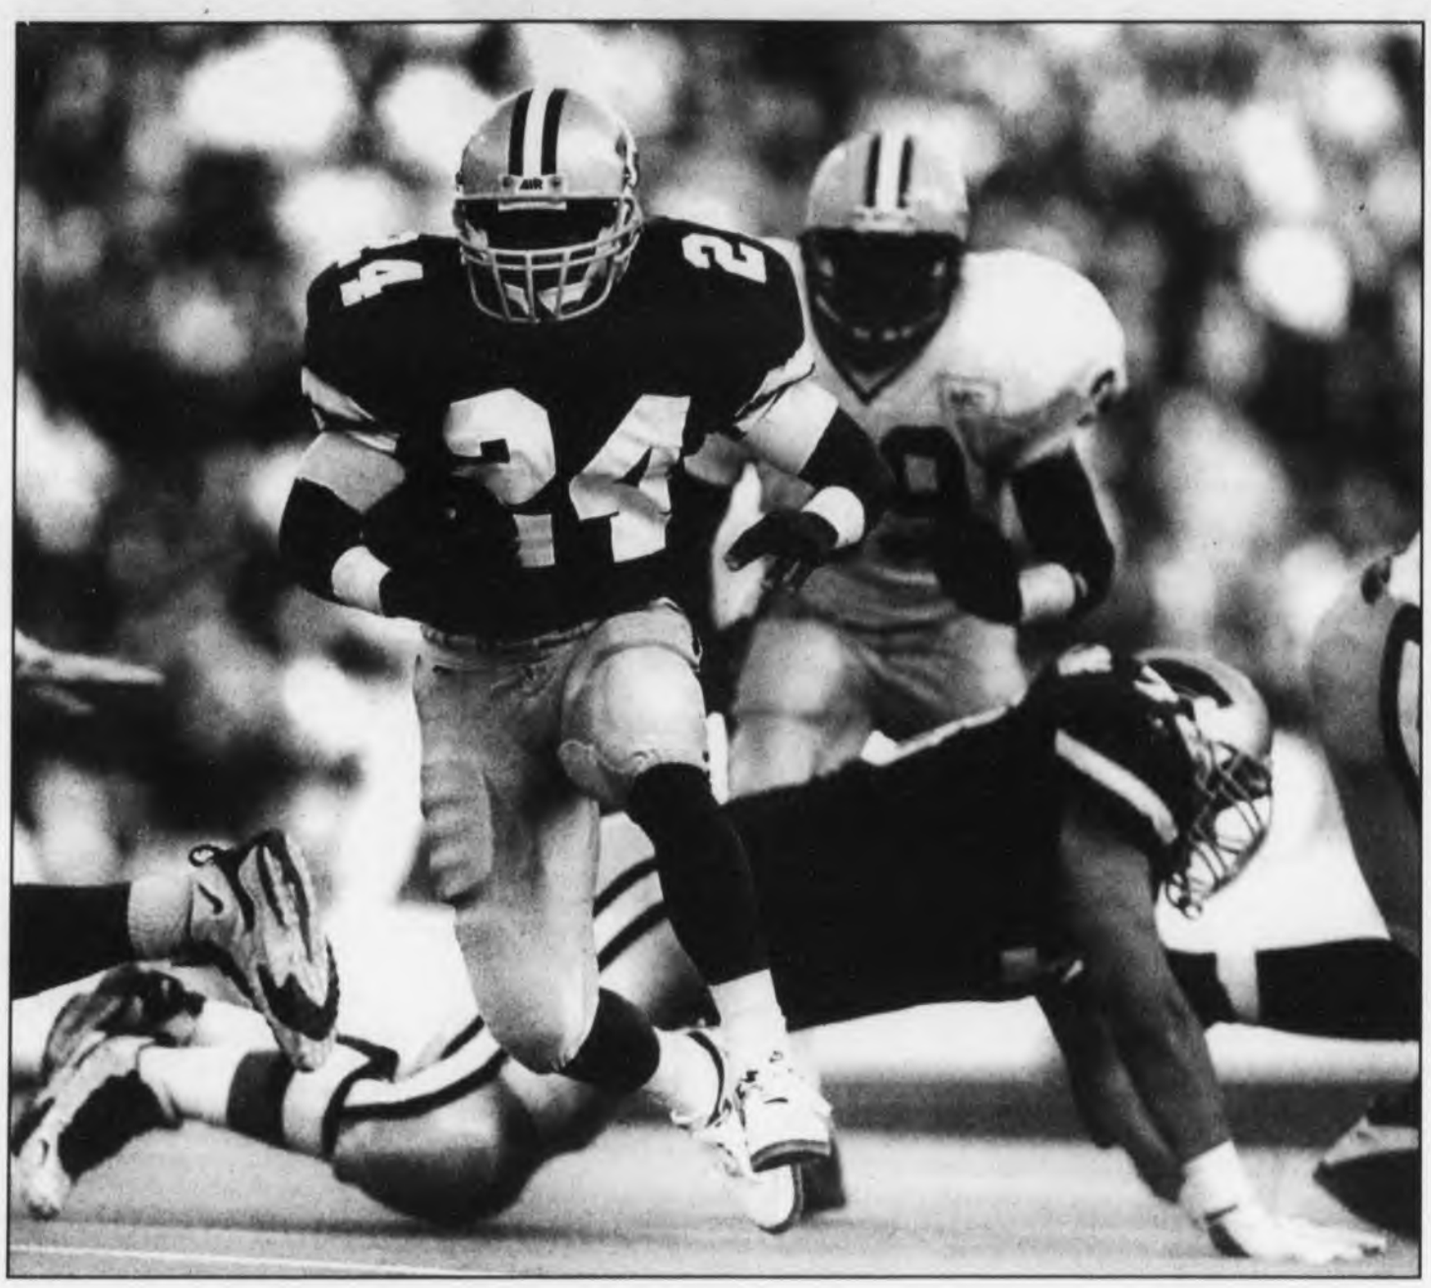
Speaking of K-State and the Fiesta Bowl, I am happy to report some of you are indeed tossing tortillas after K-State touchdowns.

Collegian staff writer Shana Newell even reported being whapped (past tense of the verb, "to whap," defined as "to strike with an object which makes a whapping noise") in the head by a tortilla at the Temple game.



Keep it up.

Tuesday columnist Shane McCormick has no comment on the Kansas City Chief's 3-0 start. Of course, that's because I haven't asked him.

And Wildcat quarterback Matt Miller has finally broken the silence regarding his highly regarded hair.

"I just wear my hair the way I want to," Miller said Saturday. "I'm trying to grow it out. I like my hair long."

Good call, Matt. Long hair is definitely in.

Reserves play as Cats smother Akron

■ Backups shine in 67-0 pasting of Zips

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

Andre Anderson got his chance.

And like several other backups who played in Saturday night's 67-0 drubbing of Akron, the K-State running back made the most of his chance to show for the crowd of 33,145 at KSU Stadium.

When Mitch Running caught a 4-yard touchdown pass from Matt Miller with 3:50 left in the first quarter, Anderson got his cue.

"When we got up 21-0, I started to jump around and do calisthenics, and I said to myself, 'It's time, it's time — I'm going to play today,'" Anderson said.

A mere 38 seconds into the second quarter, it was already 35-0, thanks to a Miller-to-Running 2-yard touchdown, an Eric Hickson 2-yard score, a Miller-to-Running 4-yard score, a Miller-to-Lockett 24-yard score and a Mike Lawrence 2-yard run.

On the ensuing series, Coach Bill Snyder started the mass substitutions, taking starters out every so often during the second quarter.

Sure, the regulars had their usual stellar games. Fill-in starter David Damon had a game-high 13 tackles, Kevin Lockett caught five passes for 85 yards, Running had seven catches for 80 yards, Miller threw for 141 yards and three touchdowns and cornerback Chris Canty had three interceptions.

But Saturday night belonged to the reserves.

Because K-State had not been able to blow out Temple or Cincinnati in the first two games of the season, the reserves were toiling on the bench for the first month of the season.

But against the helpless Zips, Anderson, running back Marlon Charles and backup quarterback Brian Kavanagh got their chance.

■ Anderson, who hadn't caught a pass and had rushed the ball only two times prior to the game, rushed 11 times for 71 yards, including an impressive 13-yard scamper in the third quarter.

"When Coach said, 'Andre, you're up,' the feeling just came over me, and I just wanted to do the best I could with it and show him I can do it," Anderson said.

The starting running backs, Hickson and Lawrence had another solid game for K-State. Hickson rushed 12 times for 115 yards and two touchdowns, while Lawrence rushed 12 times for 86 yards and one score.

Anderson said he was glad Snyder inserted him at running back instead of wideout.

"It felt really good knowing that when they call your number, you know you're going to get the ball," Anderson said.

"As a receiver, they call the play, and you might get it, and you might not get it. So when they called the play, I loved it."

■ Charles, a redshirt freshman from Kansas City, Mo., entered the contest in the second half and rushed four times for 39 yards, including an 18-yard dash.

Charles, who hadn't had a carry in the first two games, said the coaches didn't inform him during the week of their plans. "They never really told me anything," Charles said.

"I was waiting for my opportunity to come, and I kind of felt it was going to come because I saw Coach keep looking at me, so I felt he was going to put me in."

Early in the fourth quarter, with K-State clinging to a 58-0 lead, Charles took a carry 18 yards to the Akron 10, and on the next play gained nine more yards to set up Kavanagh's 1-yard keeper to make it 65-0.

"We've been practicing every day on the scout team, and it kind of makes you feel you'll never get a chance," Charles said. "It just feels good."

■ Kavanagh, the junior backup-signal caller, entered the game late in the second quarter when Miller went down with a bruised shoulder.

Kavanagh got his first extensive action of his career and made the most of it, completing eight-of-15 passes for 125 yards and one touchdown.

"All of the other times I've played, it's basically been mop-up stuff," Kavanagh said.

"This was the first time I had done the things I need to do to move the team."

In the third quarter, Kavanagh hit Lockett for a 39-yard score, the first touchdown pass of his career.

"It felt great," Kavanagh said. "I've been traveling with the team for three years, and this is the first chance I've got to play.

"Honestly, I thought I overthrew Kevin, but he made the catch and got it in. I can't describe it. It just felt wonderful to get that one in."

Lockett said Kavanagh's solid outing gave the rest of the team confidence that he can do the job if Miller goes out.

"I know as a receiving corp, we had a lot of confidence in him," Lockett said.

"But I think it let a lot of people on defense and others who weren't sure of his capabilities know that we do have a lot of depth at quarterback and we do have a solid No. 2 quarterback who can come in at anytime and perform just as well as our No. 1 quarterback."

So, while the regulars didn't have to break much of a sweat to build a 38-0 first half lead, the reserves got their chance in the second half to make it the third-most lopsided win in K-State history.

Defense key as Cats blank Akron

Todd Stewart
assistant sports editor

The offense might have stolen the show, but behind every shutout is a defense.

Lost in the 67-0 K-State victory over Akron, the 590 yards of total K-State offense and 326 rushing yards, was a defense that limited the Zips to 183 yards of total offense, forced six turnovers and allowed only one first down in the first quarter.

And this from a team yet to keep its opponents out of the end zone on its first possession.

"I think that was the biggest key of anything that happened in the game," cornerback Chris Canty said of this team's initial stop. "We knew we had to come out and do something to stop them. Our main focus was to stop the first drive."

Linebacker Percell Gaskins said the Cats learned their lesson about giving up early touchdowns.

"We'll never do that again," Gaskins said.

Akron's four-and-out first possession helped set the stage for the first Cat touchdown, a 2-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Matt Miller to wide receiver Mitch Running.

The Cat defense came right back from the touchdown with another stop, this time ending on an interception by Canty. The Cats racked up their second touchdown two plays later.

> CHRIS CANTY
> K-STATE CORNERBACK

"We felt we had a lot to prove," cornerback Joe Gordon said.

The defense stepped up when the team needed it most and did not allow a third-down conversion to the Zips all night. Combined with holding the Zips to 0-13 on third downs, the Cats held Akron to less than 3 yards a play for the night. The defensive charge was led by Canty's three interceptions. The last he returned 13 yards for a touchdown late in the third quarter, all of which had his teammates raving after the game.

"I bow down to him," Gaskins said. "He's the man. He's the man."

Canty said it was a once-in-a-lifetime game.

"I've never had anything like that," Canty said. "It was a real fun game for me. I hope that I can have another game like this.

"I was just in the right place at the right time."

Which is a change in the right direction for the Cats after sneaking out a 23-21 victory two weeks ago in Cincinnati. Some said they thought the off week between games allowed the Cats to work out some of the rough spots.

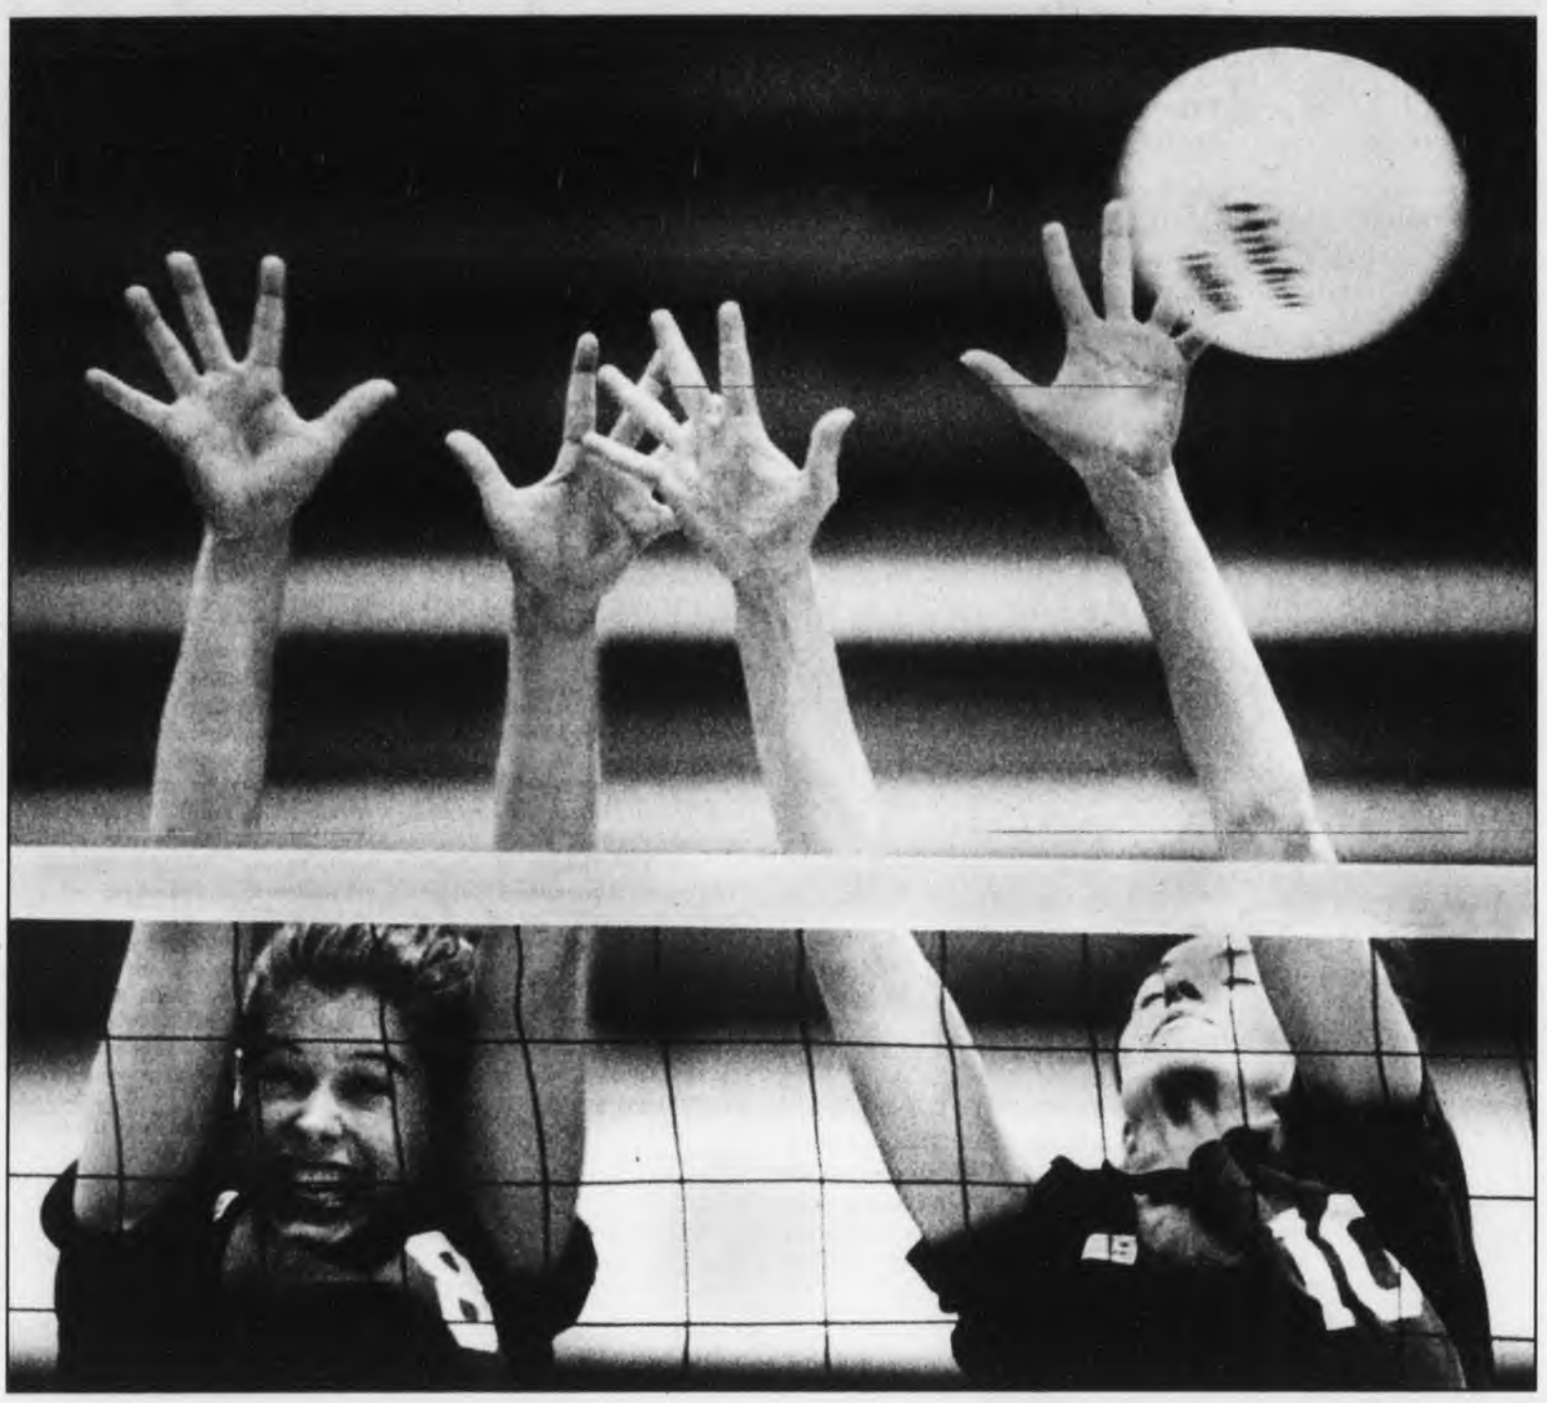
"I think everything that was going wrong was mental errors. We took this off week to put everything together," Canty said.

The Cat defense made its final statement of the night with 1:17 left in the game when Gordon, playing the end on the punt rush, tackled Akron punter Lloyd Kessler in the end zone for a safety and the final two points of the third Wildcat victory on the season.

Gaskins, who led the Cat starters in tackles with nine, said this game was not taken lightly.

"We look at this like a new season," he said. "We looked at this game as a stepping stone going into the Big 8 season."

But before Big 8 play starts, the Cats are host to Northern Illinois on Saturday, and Gaskins said it was important not to overlook Northern Illinois and not be too overconfident.



"I think they're a much better team than Akron, and they're going to present some problems."

The K-State volleyball team entered Ahearn Field House this weekend for the KSU Invitational with an impressive 6-2 record.

It walked out on Saturday evening with an even more impressive 10-2 record.

The Wildcats swept the tournament, winning matches against Northeastern Illinois, Wichita State, Creighton, and Rice.

The victories began Friday afternoon with a win against Northeastern Illinois. In an astonishing match length of only 52 minutes, the Wildcats demolished the Golden Eagles 15-0, 15-4 and 15-5.

NEIU was held to a minus .070 attack percentage while it amassed a .375 attack percentage.

Junior middle blocker Kate DeClerk and junior play-set-hitter Yolanda "Toie" Young led the K-State attack in the first game. DeClerk recorded 10 kills and 15 total attack with a percentage of .533. Young had five kills and seven total attacks with a .714 percentage.

Sophomore setter Devon Ryning contributed to the win with 16 set assists while defensively, sophomore swing hitter Val Phillips had 14 digs.

"Northeastern Illinois didn't play a very strong game, " K-State volleyball coach Jim Moore said.

"But it was to our advantage that we got to substitute players and have them play different spots. Mariela Fasce got to set for the first time and she did very well. It was nice to have the ability to sub."

That advantage apparently paid off for the Cats in their second match. They shocked Wichita State in three games, winning the match 15-6, 15-12 and 15-6.

The second game almost belonged to the Shockers as the Cats battled back from a 5-11 deficit to silence their opponents. K-State found itself ahead 14-12 with game point when Mariela Fasce had a service ace to win the game.

Wichita State entered the match against the Cats after losing in the afternoon to Creighton 15-8, 15-12 and 15-6.

Creighton competed on a higher level against the Cats, which was evident to the team and coaching staff.

"Wichita State played better tonight than this afternoon," Moore said.

"They gave us a little more competition than we expected."

He said he even experimented with the emotions of the girls and tried to use it to the advantage of the team.

"I tried to rile the girls up between the first and second games intentionally. I got them overanxious to see how they'd react to the situation. They didn't react very well, but they held together and won the game."

K-State was led by freshman swing hitter Kim Zschau, a key participant in the victory at all points of the game.

Zschau recorded 11 kills and 31 total attacks with an attack percentage of .258 offensively and three service aces.

Defensively, she had 18 digs and three block assists. Young made a strong contribution with 11 kills, 28 total attack and 16 digs. DeClerk had 15 digs and three block assists.

K-State came back from a dismal first game to beat the Creighton Blue Jays Saturday.

The Cats found themselves off to a sluggish start and down by nine points in the first game before coming back and losing 9-15.

"Basically, that's what we've been talking about a week ago today that we can't let happen and we let happen. It can't happen," Moore said.

"If we're going to achieve, the things that we want to achieve it literally cannot happen — there is no option. We didn't do it, and I'm not a very happy person."

The Cats came back in the second game and clobbered the Blue Jays 15-1.

The Cats scored the first 13 points in the second game and evened up the overall score 1-1.

"I told them in the huddle that is what separates them between whether or not we're going to be where we want to be or just another team that is like everybody else," Moore said.

Apparently, Moore's chat in the huddle inspired the Cats.

It was all K-State from there as it went on to beat Creighton 15-8 in the third game and 15-5 in the fourth game.

Moore said he was pleased with Ryning.

"Towards the end, Devon was unbelievable. That's as good of setting demonstration as most people are going to see. She did some pretty spectacular things," Moore said.

Ryning had 45 assists, a team high by 44 in the game, and she also had seven digs. But, like Moore, Ryning said she thought the first game was pretty pathetic.

"We just wanted to get it over pretty quick and get it done, instead of focusing on what we need to do to get the game over with," Ryning said.

Moore told the team it needed to step up because teams weren't going to roll over for them, Ryning said.

With the words of Moore ringing in their heads, the Cats did step up, and, with the win over the Blue Jays, improved their mark to 9-2.

The Cats knocked off the Rice Owls in the tournament final Saturday night.

The Wildcats ate the Owls alive in the first game, winning 15-1, but seemed to choke on their remains in the second and third games. The Cats barely won the second game, coming away with a 15-13 win, and struggled in the second game, losing 10-15.

The Cats were up against one of the best outside hitters in the nation.

"Rice has an outside hitter that is probably in the top two or three players in the country. She played on the World University game team. She's good. She's legitimately very good," Moore said.

"If we play like that in game one, they're going to kick the snot out of us," Moore said.

But there wasn't any snot being kicked out of K-State this weekend. With the four wins in the tournament, K-State is now 10-2 for the season. It also got a lot a slew of honors.

DeClerk was the named Tournament Most Valuable Player. Other Cats making the KSU Invitational All-Tournament Team included Young, Ryning and Zschau.

The team prepared for Rice all week, Moore said.

Moore also said he knew they were going to win all along. It was just a matter of how they were going to win.

The Wildcats prepared for the Owls by mentally preparing as well as physically preparing, Ryning said.

"I think we're physically a really great team, but I think that the problem we have is everything to what level we will be is up to our mental abilities," Ryning said.

The Owls came into the tournament 9-3 and left 12-4.

Runners place 2nd, 4th

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

Cross country coach Terry Drake had a "but this, but they, but again" attitude after Saturday's KSU Invitational at Warner Park.

With so many new faces running in the race, Drake used the "but" to describe the fatigue coming from the first race, to reiterate that nine of his top men's runners didn't race, and overall to describe the meet.

On the women's side, K-State finished second, six points behind Fort Hays State University, and got a second-place finish from sophomore Charity Swartz and a third-place finish from freshman Cristy Swartz.

"Sure, I would have liked to have won. But they were tired," Drake said. "They did well and competed well."

Drake said several of K-State's women's runners became fatigued late in the race because it was their first college race of the season. Or, in the case of freshman Jenny Cassiday, her first meet ever.

Cassiday finished 17th.

"Jenny's never run cross country before, so that being her first meet ever, she did well for us," Drake said.

K-State's men didn't do as well.

Junior-college transfer Ryan Johnson was K-State's top finisher with 17th place. Junior Travis Brown finished 19th, and freshman Rocco Morganti finished 23rd.

K-State finished last in the four-team, university-open division, 76 points behind winner Wesley Athletics of Wichita.

"I don't think the men ran exceptionally well," Drake said, "but again, it gave the younger guys a chance to run, and that was what this meet was for."

In the men's race, Drake used three freshmen, and in the women's meet, five first-year runners participated.

For their first race of the year, Drake said the younger runners fared well.

"We trained hard," Drake said. "We used this as an extended workout."

Next week, K-State travels to Oklahoma State for what Drake calls one of the biggest meets of the season.

First tournament a 'learning experience'

The K-State women's tennis team opened the fall season this past weekend in Manhattan at the Traveler's Express Invitational.

The Wildcats faced fellow Big 8 team Oklahoma State, as well as Purdue and Oral Roberts. There were four singles draws and two doubles draws in the tournament.

Cats' players Karina Kuregian and Yana Dorodnova played in the Flight A draw.

Both breezed through first-round victories. Kuregian routed Tamsin Wainwright of Oklahoma State 6-0, 6-1, while Dorodnova defeated Elissandra Rocha of Oral Roberts 6-3, 6-0. But both Dorodnova and Kuregian were defeated in their second-round matches.

Kuregian, who earned all-Big 8 honors last year, was beaten by finalist Mary Beth Maggert of Purdue, 6-4, 6-2.

"I thought she (Karina) played recklessly. She wasn't playing with any regard of what was going on out there. I don't know anyone who is good enough to play that way and expect to win," Coach Steve Bietau said.

Kuregian and Dorodnova later met in the third-place match, with Dorodnova beating Kuregian.

This weekend also marked the debut of four new Cats players.

Besides Dorodnova, Lena Piliptchak, Yasmine Osborn and Laura Williamson stepped out for their first action as a Cats. Piliptchak and Osborn both won their first matches, while Williamson was defeated.

Both Osborn and Piliptchak advanced to the finals of their draws.

Piliptchak defeated Natalie Feinstein of Oral Roberts 6-0, 6-1 in the first round and overcame Amanda Scott of Purdue in the second round. But Piliptchak was defeated in the finals by Correne Stout of Oklahoma State in three sets.

"Although Piliptchak got to the finals of her division, she really didn't play as well as she has in practices," Bietau said.

Osborn provide one of the more exciting matches of the tournament in her first match. Osborn defeated Dena Degyansky of Purdue 4-6, 6-2, 7-5. Though Osborn was down 2-5 in the final set of that match, she fought back to win it.

"I started paying attention to what I was doing out there, and I kept putting balls into play. All of a sudden the score was 5-5, and I knew I had a chance," Osborn said.

In other matches, Dinah Watson of K-State advanced all the way to the third-place match of her division, where she defeated Rachel Fiset of Purdue in three sets.

Another Cats advancing was Karen Watson. Watson advanced to the third-place match of her division. Karen Nicholson was defeated by Amanda Scott of Purdue.

In other singles action, Chris Shulte advanced to the second round, where she was defeated by Elizabeth Vote of Purdue, 6-4,6-3.

All four of the Cats' doubles teams were victorious this weekend. Dorodnova and Nicholson defeated Rianne Louw and Angela Cook of Oral Roberts. Kuregian teamed up with Piliptchak to win their first doubles match.

Also victorious were the teams of Osborn-Shulte and Watson-Nicole Lagerstrom.

Next week, the Cats travel to Baltimore for the National Clay Court Championships. Bietau looked at this weekend's tournament as a learning tool for the Cats.

"We looked at this tournament as a chance to learn, both for the players and the coaches. Right now, what we've found out is that we have a lot of work still to do," Bietau said.

"What happens in the next month or so is really going to be critical for the team over the next year. How they handle this information is really what determines of they get better or not."

This weekend, the 1995 Little Apple Folklife Art and Craft Festival provided food, art and entertainment for all ages.

The 19th-annual festival was sponsored by the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department.

This year, about 20,000 visitors attended the two-day event, Jim Colley, recreation superintendent and folklife coordinator, said.

About 170 exhibitors from all over the nation displayed and sold handmade arts and crafts.

Don Hartke, Wichita, was selling small wood and floral items. He said he had been to about 24 festivals this year.

"I like Manhattan's festival real well because it is very well-organized and well-promoted," he said.

Dona Lee Golden of Omaha, Neb., exhibited her prints in the juried art tent. She attended last year's event and said she wanted to come back.

"I've had pretty good sales this year," she said.

The folklife area of the festival featured people demonstrating historical ways of life, including a mountain man and cowboy reenactment, and a medieval village, Colley said.

Even limestone post carving was represented in the folklife area, demonstrated by George Welling.

"We try to show people what those guys went through to make fences to tame the land for farming," he said.

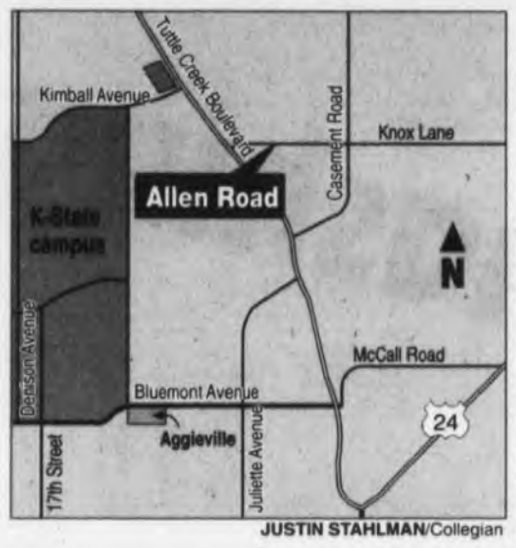
This was the first year the folklife festival included a Native American pow wow. The pow wow had about 85 dancers, some from as far away as Texas. Colley said it was successful for its first year.

"I really enjoyed having the pow wow this year," said Manhattan resident Julie Skinner, who attends the event every year. "I thought it added a lot."

Crafts and activities were not the only things that attracted the large audience.

"The food is the real reason I go, and it's all delightful," Skinner said.

Colley said there were about 24 food vendors, many of them serving ethnic food.



"We've had a number of the food vendors tell us that they'd sold more food Saturday than at any other event," he said. "The turkey legs sold out in the first day, and the guy had to go get more."

Two stages provided music and entertainment throughout the two days. Among the artists who performed on the main stage were bands the Barn Burners, a blues band, and Mainstreet, a band that plays popular oldies.

The Entertainment Stage II had a puppet theater, zoo exhibit, 1800s fashion show and Swedish dancers from Lindsborg.

There were also many activities for children, such as pony rides and sand art.

Allen Road to be closed

JUSTIN STAHLMAN/Collegian

Parts of Allen Road will be closed until April because of construction.

The road and base work will be completely replaced, and a storm sewer will be added. Manhattan received a Community Development Block Grant of $305,000 from the state of Kansas. The city was required to match the grant with $305,000. Additionally, the City Commission set aside $370,000 for the storm sewer.

Students get view of prairie, wildlife

Karrin Thomas

A clear, sunny morning welcomed five students to the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area Saturday.

Although 25 people had signed up for the 2.8-mile hike, which was sponsored by the Union Program Council, at 9:30 a.m., Guide Dean Hargett and four students started up the trail.

The Konza Prairie, which is south of Manhattan, covers an 8,616-acre area of natural tallgrass prairie.

The tour began in the bottomlands, where part of the land is planted and plowed.

Like the prairie of long ago, where lightning strikes would cause fires, periodic burnings keep trees from growing on the prairie and increase the diversity of grasses, Hargett said.

Some of the research on the Konza Prairie involves periodic burnings of certain areas, he said.

Hargett said the erosion of layers of limestone and shale formed the characteristic stepped sides of the hills on the prairie.

The group viewed a block of cottonwood limestone and different types of grasses that grow on the prairie.

The hike's steepest ascent was up the long side of one of the hills, but the climb rewarded the hikers with a panoramic view of the prairie for miles around.

"When we were on top of that hill, I was so impressed," Marny Burke,

Marching Band, chorus members benefit from fundraiser

MUSIC RUN

▶ Donations can be given to the K-State Department of Music. Please indicate which group the donation is for.

James Dierking
staff reporter

More than 200 students raised money for the K-State Department of Music by walking and running at the R.J. Christian Track Sunday afternoon.

"It all goes back to the students," Frank Tracz, director of bands, said.

Members of the K-State Marching Band and K-State Chorus gathered pledges during the last several weeks and had one hour to complete their laps.

"It's meant as a fundraiser for equipment, trips and anything else that needs to keep the band going," Tracz said.

The band and chorus sponsor the fundraiser together, but the money collected by students is used independently for each organization.

"Last year, we made $8,000 to $10,000, and I can pinpoint where every penny of that money was spent," Tracz said.

Participants could run or walk around the track and were paid according to how many laps they finished.

"I really care about the music programs and want to see them grow," Susan Ridgway, senior in music education, said.

"It's fun and easy, and everyone can be involved so everyone can have a part in the future of the programs."

Erin O'Neil, sophomore in preveterinary medicine and agriculture, walked 12 laps around the track.

"I felt that my participation would help raise funds for the band, which would further add to my education," O'Neil said.

Manhattan in need of alterna-paper

COLUMN

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

This column will probably come off as sounding weird coming from a Collegian writer (and an ardent Collegian supporter who loves his editor and has absolutely no problems with any Collegian policy whatsoever), but what the hell do I care?

What this town needs is not some fancy, rejuvenated live music scene, not some two-bit, rickety parking garage and not the dissolution of Student Senate, but a burgeoning alternative newspaper/magazine scene.

If you don't already read Pitch, a weekly Kansas City area alterna-paper, you need to. It offers some funny insights, a rundown of fun events happening here, in Lawrence and in K.C.

More importantly, it offers an outsider's, albeit liberal, opinion on important issues (If you don't like the Kansas City Star, read Pitch.)

Manhattan doesn't have anything close to that caliber of an alterna-paper, but I'm not suggesting we need something like Pitch.

Some of you are probably saying, "Well, we have the Greek Times."

I'm going to address that issue by not addressing it.

We also have the Manhattan Free Press, but it's hardly liberal enough to warrant the title "alterna-paper."

On campus, we have Meta-'zine. A lot of students don't know anything about Meta-'zine and would prefer not knowing anything about Meta-'zine. Can I blame them?

Well, partly.

Although I think Meta-'zine lacks many profound elements (tasteful photographs, decent graphic design, actual interesting writing), it has the general idea.

Of course, last year's Student Senate didn't find it necessarily appropriate to give it any money.

But Meta-'zine asked Senate (or more appropriately "the man") for money, thus toppling it from the status of an alterna-paper.

To be alternative, you have to buck the system. You can't worry about eating and paying the bills if you have to get your message out on the streets. Those material things just don't matter.

Vladimir Lenin started out handing pamphlets to passersby on the street, and look how far it got him. (Writer's note: the last sentence has been completely made up for dramatic effect.)

Now that I've made my point, or lack thereof, let's talk about getting started.

First, you need to pick a name. Not anything with the word "Times" in it — too damn stuffy. Go to Wal-Mart and walk down the aisles to look for brand names.

You take that brand name and add the name of one of K-State's administrators, and you'll get some great alterna-names: "Pepto-Wefald," "Ultra Tide Krause" and "Gummi-Rawson."

Now, choose a slant: liberal-political, liberal-artsy, liberal-intellectual or liberal-liberal. Gather some writers (good ones) and artists and voila, your first issue is off and rolling.

If this column doesn't incite some poor souls to begin a paper, I guess our last refuge is the College of Engineering's newsletter, Critical Angle.

After reading that, I'm critically wounded.

Bank IV buyout leaves loan repayment unclear

▶ Boatmen's Bancshares Inc. is acquiring Fourth Financial Corp. K-State students received 12 percent of their loans from Bank IV, which is owned by Fourth Financial and Boatmen's.

Brent Johnson
staff reporter

Students who have loans through Bank IV could possibly see a change in whom they pay their money back to in the future.

On Aug. 25, Boatmen's Bancshares Inc. announced plans to acquire Fourth Financial Corp. for $1.2 billion.

Fourth Financial, which owns Bank IV, has $7.5 million in assets and is the largest bank in Kansas. Fourth Financial also owns more than 140 offices in Kansas and Oklahoma.

The K-State Office of Student Financial Assistance said loans from both Boatmen's and Bank IV accounted for 12 percent of all student loans at K-State during the 1994-95 school year.

How Bank IV users will be affected by this still remains unclear. For students, a common concern is student loans.

Heather Cotsworth, junior in secondary education, said she received some information from Bank IV about her student loan. Although she is unsure whether the information was concerning the merger, the letter said that if for any reason the bank is sold, all agreements with her student loan will remain permanent.

Brandi Brubaker, senior in elementary education, said she has banked with Bank IV for about three years. She also has a student loan through Bank IV.

Brubaker said she didn't even know Boatmen's had plans to merge with Fourth Financial.

"It's news to me," she said. "I plan to go back to my bank and get some information."

Officials at Boatmen's aren't releasing any information concerning the future of the merger.

"I would advise any students who have a loan through Bank IV to contact them to find out where they will be making repayments on their loan in the future," said Larry Moeder, director of Student Financial Assistance.

At this time, officials are unsure of the future of all banking options, including student loans.

"As for the future, it's just to early to tell," said Brent Thompson, director of marketing for Bank IV. "We just haven't had any discussions on how we're going to handle anything of that nature."

Boatmen's, which is worth $33.4 billion in assets, controls more than 500 offices in nine states.

The merger would make Boatmen's the largest banking company in the Midwest, with offices in Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and New Mexico.

"We currently don't do a whole lot of business with Kansas State," Jean Dennis, marketing officer for Boatmen's said.

Claudia Russell, student loan marketing representative for Commerce Bank, said that as a marketing representative, she doesn't believe that the Boatmen's merger would take any business from Commerce.

Although shareholders and regulators are making final decisions concerning the merger, it will be a few months before any changes are seen.

"We won't be seeing the old banners and signs going down and the new banners and signs coming up for some time," Anand Desai, assistant professor of finance, said.

Male bonding focus of workshop

Nikola Zytkow
staff reporter

Helping men understand how their gender-role socialization has affected their relationships is the focus of a workshop that begins today at the K-State Student Union.

"Traditionally, males end up being socialized in a way that emphasizes independence and emotional inexpressiveness," said Mark Hurst, intern at University Counseling Services. "These socialized characteristics cause problems that run deep."

There is an apparent need for this kind of workshop, John Robertson, licensed psychologist, said.

Relationship concerns are among the most common reasons male and female students come to Counseling Services, he said.

The workshop will focus on the importance of developing romantic relationships, as well as strong male-to-male friendships.

"Men really have a tough time developing strong friendships because of homophobia," Hurst said.

Men also have a difficult time sharing deeper issues with each other for fear of showing vulnerability, Hurst said.

"Usually, men have not found in adulthood the kind of male friends they had growing up," Hurst said.

"They find themselves competing with other men in society, which prevents them from forming these sort of friendships," he said.

The qualities that were instilled in men since they were boys may be helpful in the competitive work force, but when it comes to intimate relationships, they cause problems, Hurst said.

"Socialization impacts us in subtle ways," he said. "Nobody is free of socialization."

The workshop is limited to 10 to 12 participants. Anyone wishing to sign up needs to contact Counseling Services.

"We're looking for men who are in relationships who would like to enhance those or men who are struggling with building relationships," Hurst said.

Hurst said he hopes the men at the workshop will walk away from the experience with a better sense of how they relate to others, more skills on how to enhance their relationships and create new ones, and a better understanding of how their socialization affects their behavior today.

The six-session workshop, scheduled from 3:30 to 5 p.m. today in Union 203, will be led by Hurst and Robertson.

There is a $10 fee for participants.

Other workshops Counseling Services is sponsoring this semester will address career-decision making, eating disorders, 10 keys to constructing self-esteem and women in relationships.

There are limits to how many can participate, and workshops usually fill up quickly, so interested students should contact Counseling Services as soon as possible, Hurst said.

Families sue after neighbors' homes crumble in landslide

Associated Press

OLATHE — Two families who live near two houses that collapsed and slid down a hill in an Overland Park subdivision have sued several builders and developers.

The couples, Dana and Mike Hughes and Debra and Michael Little, filed suit Friday in Johnson County District Court. They allege the defendants were aware of structural problems but never warned that the hillside was unsuitable for home building.

In May, two of their neighbors' homes in the Turnberry subdivision crumbled down the hill following heavy rains. Since then, engineers warned the Littles and the Hughes that their houses could also slide down the hill unless repairs were made.

The lawsuit wants the builders, developers and engineers to pay for those repairs. It alleges poor quality fill material containing rocks and debris was deposited on the hillside before homes were built.

"These people have basically had their lives taken away from them," Scott Beeler, the plaintiffs' attorney, said.

H & S Builders, which owns a vacant tract on the hill, joined the two families in suing Friday.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

ALCOHOL

Others said if the policy is going to be enforced, it should also be enforced in the Dev Nelson Press Box and all areas of the parking lot.

The enforcement of the alcohol policy might cause more students and alumni to sneak sneak alcohol into the game, alumnus Greg Debauche said.

"If there is no alcohol at a tailgate party, there is no tailgate. If there is no tailgate, then we can't get people here. We'll just have to bring the beer in," Debauche said.

Although some students and alumni said they were upset, others said they were happy to hear the University is starting to enforce the law.

"I think it's great. I don't care for the alcohol advertisements or scholarship support from the alcohol industry," alumna Tamie Preston said.

Mixed feelings about the policy were also common, Kathy Leonard, Computing and Network Services, said.

"I have mixed feelings about it. The state law should be enforced. I would rather have people in the parking lot drinking rather than driving and drinking," Leonard said.

Some said they were relieved the law is finally being enforced but it will be hard to enforce now.

"I think this should have been the policy years ago. Tailgating was encouraged last year, so it will be very hard to enforce. I don't have a problem with drinking before the game because there will be time to sober up during the game, but I think it will be hard to enforce the law after promoting tailgating," said Evan Leonard, payroll manager in human resources and management.

shot at the exact hall choice they wanted," Yoder said. "A number had made friends here and were able to move into their permanent space with their Marlatt Hall roommate. By waiting a while, some of them were able to find doubly vacant rooms."

Yoder said the housing vacancies were filled quickly to accommodate the students.

"It was not an administrative process that brought them here or kept them here it was a lack of space, and once that opened up, they were moved out," Yoder said.

Several of the students would have been content to remain in Marlatt, Yoder said.

"It ended up being kind of a nice, quiet floor, and some would have been content to stay, though that's not probably true of all of them," he said. "However, there were staffing issues, and the fourth floor is used as year-round guest housing, so this was never approached as a permanent arrangement."

sophomore in pre-journalism, said. "I thought it would be flatter."

One of the Konza's herd of buffalo, which appeared as brown dots on the green hills near the horizon, was spotted by the hikers.

"I really wanted to see the buffalo up close," Sandeep Bajaj, graduate student in computer science, said.

The group also saw six wild turkeys at the side of the path.

The trail took about an hour and a half to complete. The trail has numbered stops and a trail guide for use in conjunction with them and takes about an hour and a half to complete.

A docent program is available for a more in-depth tour. Anyone interested in a guided tour should contact the Division of Biology, Hargett said.

The 4.7 and 6.1-mile hikes are also open to the public, although they have no numbered stops.

"I think I'll try the longer trails on my own now, " Abhijiti Joshi, graduate student in mechanical engineering, said.

The Konza Prairie is owned by the Nature Conservancy and operated by the Division of Biology for the purpose of long-term ecological research.

ness into the music," Berry said. "I don't like people to always know what's going to happen yet. I think that's our general mindset."

Coolerspoon was the only other Manhattan band that made it into the contest. It was nice for a change after playing in local bars for the past year, Shon Chapman, bass player for the band, said.

"It was cool to go play for people who wanted to hear good music," he said.

Chapman, sophomore undecided, said he thought the audience size was good but thought there would have been more of a response had the bands been outside.

"I think we lost a lot of people who would have driven by and heard the music," he said.

Coolerspoon didn't place in the top three, but Chapman said the band hopes to have some new gigs after the Opus show.

"Obviously, we wanted to put our name out," he said. "Winning wasn't our No. 1 priority — we really just wanted to get our name out there.

"We just got our demo tape, and we've got a gig lined up in just about every bar in Aggieville. Our goal is to get out and about and get regional exposure."

Dr. Crusty from Topeka took the second-place prize of $100. Because of the first-place tie, there was no third-place winner.

▶ COMPUTERS

Sleuths find evidence in e-mail

Associated Press

SEATTLE — Computer sleuth John Jessen knows what e-mail lurks in the heart of America's workplace, and it's not a pretty sight.

Stupid jokes. Love notes. Sexist slurs. Breached confidences. All are in a day's work as Jessen dredges computer files for electronic embarrassments thought to be long gone by their authors.

Electronic mail has revolutionized how corporations communicate, allowing workers to connect with far-flung colleagues in an efficient and often freewheeling forum.

It might be less freewheeling if people knew how many deleted e-mail messages are actually saved in their computer systems. They can pile up like little time bombs until someone like Jessen arrives, carrying a court order and a stack of blank memory cartridges.

"Can you really delete e-mail? Sure," Jessen said. "Does it happen as a common practice? No."

Jessen is the founder of Electronic Evidence Discovery Inc., a Seattle company that since 1987 has been going after computer evidence in civil lawsuits.

It's a specialized field, to be sure. Jessen's only full-time competitor is Computer Forensics Inc., another Seattle firm started by one of his former employees, Joan Feldman.

Business is booming for both of them.

The nation's estimated 25 million to 40 million users of e-mail are growing more comfortable — some say careless — with the medium. And more attorneys are recognizing e-mail's potential as a source of unguarded information about the companies they are suing.

"People are very candid talking around the coffee machine," said attorney Michael Patrick in Palo Alto, Calif. "They seem to behave the same way on the computer system.

"They think they're speaking confidentially, so they're off the cuff. They're very often insulting. What they don't realize is it's all being recorded, and often those recordings are stored for a very long time. When you send a message, you lose control over where it goes."

Los Angeles police officer Laurence Powell learned that lesson after the Rodney King beating in 1991. "Oops!" began a message that Powell typed into his squad car's computer. "I haven't beaten anyone this bad in a long time."

This year, an Air Force pilot's profane e-mail account of Capt. Scott O'Grady's rescue in Bosnia was made available on the Internet, much to the Pentagon's chagrin.

"Pray for the U.N. leadership to get a clue and let us blow these bastards back into the stone age," Capt. Scott Zobrist wrote of the Bosnian Serbs.

Air Force officials said Zobrist, stationed with O'Grady in Italy, sent the e-mail to a few military friends, never suspecting it would be forwarded, and forwarded again, until it was posted on the Internet for anyone to see.

Jessen has his own collection of e-mail tales.

"Hi David," began one message Jessen retrieved from the files of a company that had fired his client. "Please destroy the evidence on the (case) you and I talked about today. Thx, Laura."

David's breezy response, titled "Evidence Destroyed," was equally incriminating: "Hi Laura. Ack yr msg. And taken care of. Aloha David."

Many workers think their e-mail is private. It's not. Federal law allows employers to monitor employees' e-mail, and even if they don't, e-mail is fair game in lawsuits. When someone sues a company, the rules of discovery demand that the company produce all relevant business records.

"The fact that they live in a computer rather than a file cabinet doesn't make any difference to the court," Feldman, at Computer Forensics, said.

Fear of lawsuits may take the fun out of electronic mail. But Feldman, for one, thinks it's time this form of business communication became more businesslike.

As she trolls for naughty bits to help her clients, she is struck by the banality of most e-mail.

"A lot of it is kind of juvenile, pointless," Feldman said. "It's cyber-chatter. Some people seem to have too much time at work."

Crane acrobatics

Les Heywood and Keith Mohan, construction workers at Farrell Library, hang a new flag on the boom of a 240-foot crane the library Monday afternoon. The flag that originally hung at there was stolen this weekend. It is unknown who took the flag, which was hanging at 198 feet when it was stolen.

Flag stolen from crane

The U.S. flag on top of a crane at Farrell Library, was stolen over the weekend. The crane is used by the Law Co., a company working on the library.

The Federal Aviation Administration requires any object without lights to be lower than 200 feet when not in use. The crane was fixed at 198 feet when the flag was removed. The Law Co. has replaced the flag.

Jews observe new year

Jennifer Burdoo
staff writer

Across town, 60 people in a tiny room murmured in Hebrew and prayed together at the synagogue.

"Tekiah. . . ."
"Devarim. . . ."
"T'ruah. . . ."

There is no rabbi. There is no cantor to chant the words of the Bible. The place of prayer can barely be recognized as a synagogue from the outside, but the Jewish community is there.

Sunday and Monday the Manhattan Jewish Congregation came out en masse to pray on Rosh Hashana, the Jewish new year.

"There were a lot of new people there yesterday," Jan Galitzer, president of the synagogue, said.

For many Jews, the High Holy Days are the only time they attend the synagogue, but the congregation members agree Judaism is meaningful to their lives.

"It's important to me to do something," Seth Galitzer, senior in computer science, said.

Rosh Hashana means "Head of the Year" in Hebrew, or the beginning of the Jewish year.

The marks the beginning of "The 10 Days of Repentance," which are the holiest days in

● See NEW YEAR Page 12

▶ Rosh Hashana

The beginning of the Jewish year by most people's reckoning. Rosh Hashana marks the beginning of the Days of Awe, which culminate with Yom Kippur.

Yom Kippur

The Day of Atonement, on which Jews fast and pray for their forgiveness for things done in the last year, and which they may do in the next year. Yom Kippur begins at sundown with Kol Nidre, which absolves the congregates of any sin incurred by having broken contracts, intentionally on unintentionally. Most of the day is spent reciting the Al Chet (begging forgiveness for sins in general) and the Viduy (begging forgiveness for specific sins), and singing praise to Ha-Shem in the song 'Avinu Malkeinu' (Our Father, Our King), as well as reciting the Amidah, including the longest possible additions of the liturgical cycle. The melodies of Yom Kippur are considered by many to be the most beautiful of the Jewish liturgical year, and many non-Jews attend Kol Nidre just to listen to the singing.

Amidah

The central prayer in Judaism, repeated three times daily. The Amidah originally consisted of 18 Brachot strung together, hence its other name — the Shmonei Esrei, meaning literally, the Eighteen. The Amidah contains variations for special occasions like Shabbat and Yomim Tovim, and is repeated aloud when there is a Minyan present.

▶ APPLIED SCIENCE

Center to become college

Chris May
staff reporter

The Manhattan Technical Center is trying to become a technical college so it can offer an associate of applied science degree.

An agreement with K-State might make the change possible.

"We are in the process of working with Kansas State to offer an associate of applied science degree through the Manhattan Technical Center," Kim Kickhaefer, placement adviser for the center, said.

The associate's degrees will be awarded through the center and not K-State. According to the Kansas Board of Regents' mission, regents schools cannot offer associate's degrees.

The center offers a certificate based on a specific technical training skill and an associate of applied science degree through Cloud County Community College.

Classes toward associate's degrees are offered on the center's campus by CCCC, Duane Dunn, assistant director for the center, said.

The course includes 62 college credit hours — the completion of the Manhattan Technical Center program, which takes 30 hours, nine hours of core courses and 23 hours of electives.

Students who do not go through the CCCC associate's program receive certificates in their area, which usually takes nine months to get, Dunn said.

The change would mean technical students could take non-

Rec Complex lacks day care

Jennifer Taylor
staff reporter

The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex was rated No. 1 in the Big 8 after its $7.4 million renovation, but two schools offer a special service that K-State doesn't.

The University of Nebraska and the University of Colorado both offer a day care for mothers and fathers who use the schools' sports complexes.

Four students are researching the possibility of opening a day-care center at the Rec Complex.

The research project is an assignment from a Social Work Practice 3 class that Jennifer Jackson, Michelle Mace, Linda Bledsoe and Cheryl Martin, all seniors in social work, are enrolled in.

The assignment is to implement a community service project; however, the students said they are simply researching how a day care could work.

"We aren't out to change the world, we're out to make a change for the community," Jackson said.

Raydon Robel, director of the Rec Complex, said people bring up day care every day, whether it is in the suggestion box or in person.

"Last year a presentation was made to the Rec Council with regard to a day care in the Rec Complex. The Student Senate didn't act on it, and the Rec Council said the bottom line was the University provides day care as a whole, not just at specific buildings," Robel said.

The students project calls for a day care that allows 10-25 children at a time, depending on the size of the room and fire codes. Parents would be charged $1.50 or $2 an hour.

"It would be a win-win situation to have day care in the Rec. The Rec would make money, and the students who needed it would be getting their money's worth,"

K-State-Salina student dies Saturday

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

A memorial service will be today for a K-State-Salina student who died Saturday.

Thirty-seven-year-old Vicki Tittle Penn of Assaria, died at a Salina hospital.

She was studying geographical information survey at K-State-Salina.

Penn was born Aug. 18, 1958, in Frankfurt, Germany. She was married to Philip Penn, who survives. She is also survived by her two children, Travis and Amanda Penn.

Penn was a 1976 graduate of Chapman High School. She was a member of First United Methodist Church in Salina, the Assaria Fire Department and the Assaria Jaycees.

Penn is also survived by her parents, the Rev. Omer and Koletta Tittle, Manhattan; one brother, Lance Tittle, Tonganoxie; three sisters, including her twin Cindi McCaleb, Salina, Christi Meier, Salina and Robin Gaschler, Blue Springs, Mo.; and her grandmother, Verniece Langham, Oklahoma City.

Services will be at 10 a.m. today at First United Methodist Church in Salina with the Rev. Paul Mugler officiating. Burial will be in the Assaria Cemetery.

Memorials may be given to the Amanda and Travis Penn Educational Trust and left in care of the funeral home.

TWO KILLED, OTHERS WOUNDED IN OLATHE HIGH FOOTBALL FEUD

OLATHE (AP)— Police officers screened cars and patrolled the grounds of Olathe North High School Monday, one day after a football feud blew up in a shooting that killed a student and another man.

Four other people were wounded in Sunday night's shooting, two seriously, but police said both were expected to survive.

A 17-year-old student from rival Shawnee Mission North High School was arrested late Sunday, but he had not been charged with a crime Monday afternoon.

Authorities blamed the violence on a confrontation between groups of Olathe North and Shawnee Mission North students and friends, and said it began with a fight at Friday night's football game between the schools.

Police estimated 40 to 50 people had gathered in the school parking lot when one person began shooting from a car with a small-caliber handgun.

Dead were Wilson Montenegro, 15, an Olathe North sophomore, and Jerrell Frazier, 19, a resident of Olathe but not a student, police Lt. Joe Pruett said.

Ryan Spornitz, 18, an Olathe North senior, was in serious condition at Overland Park Regional Medical Center with a gunshot wound to the back. Johnny Bruce, 23, of Olathe, was in critical condition at the University of Kansas Medical Center after surgery for a stomach gunshot wound.

Two other Olathe North students, both boys, were treated at hospitals for minor gunshot wounds and released.

At the high school Monday, the district began the day by telling students exactly what happened, and counselors stood by to discuss the violence with students.

Several students declined to talk to a reporter. But Linda Booth, a school district spokeswoman, said few who went to Sunday night's confrontation would have expected guns.

"Ninety-nine percent of those kids showed up there to verbally go back and forth, and maybe a few blows are made," Booth said. "Most of those kids were just there for a look."

Police broke up a brawl at Friday's game, which was won by Olathe North. Two boys were arrested for drunk and disorderly conduct and for carrying a knife, Pruett said.

Friends of the Olathe North victims said they think the Shawnee Mission students went to Olathe North on Sunday to continue the fight.

"We got in a big fight, but I guess they didn't get enough then," Nick Brummel, an Olathe North senior, told the Kansas City Star. "They came back."

EPA FUNDS MINORITY PROGRAM

WICHITA (AP) — A program to raise environmental awareness among low-income and minority residents is being developed by Friends University and some area activists.

The effort is being paid for by a $20,000 grant from the Environmental Protection Agency.

Organizers are seeking minority residents and people who live in lower-income areas to attend a free Citizen's Environmental Academy.

The idea is to raise awareness about environmental issues, particularly those that can affect health, and help residents investigate potential problems and work to correct them.

Alan Maccarone, director of environmental studies at Friends University, said residents may wonder whether it's safe to eat the fish in the Arkansas River or to live near a high-voltage power line. This is an example of the types of issues that will be discussed.

"They may want to know what is the likelihood that my child will develop cancer or leukemia," he said. "We are hoping they will bring their problems to us."

14-YEAR-OLD SHOT IN OTTAWA

OTTAWA (AP) — A 14-year-old girl was shot and killed Sunday night when she was caught between two groups of teenagers arguing, Police Chief Jeff Herrman said.

The victim was identified as Stephanie Perez.

The shooting occurred in an apartment at 8:22 p.m.

The young girl was an innocent victim, said Herrman. She got caught between two groups in an argument, he said.

At least six teenagers, all males, are in custody, Herrman said. A small caliber gun was recovered.

HERINGTON MAN KILLED SUNDAY

HERINGTON (AP) — Authorities were investigating whether the shooting death of a Herington man at a farmhouse northwest of town was in self-defense.

Eric "Rick" Foust, 26, was shot to death early Sunday when he went to the house and fought with another man, Dickinson County Sheriff Curt Bennett said.

A woman and a man were questioned and released, the sheriff said Monday.

KSU POLICE DEPARTMENT

SATURDAY, AUGUST 23

At 12:03 a.m., a staff member at Ford Hall reported a suspicious man hanging around between Ford and Boyd halls. The man kept trying to get women to let him go up to their rooms with them. Officers responded and found the subject with a friend. The officers spoke to them and asked them to leave campus and not return or they would be arrested for trespassing. Both subjects were soldiers at Fort Riley.

At 12:34 a.m., Joseph E. Gibbs Jr. was arrested for DUI and transported to Riley County Jail.

At 12:54 a.m., an officer made a traffic stop and found the two male subjects were juveniles. They were brought to the police station, and their parents were called. The juveniles were from out of town and visiting their sisters at K-State. A report was filed on curfew violation. One subject was released to his sister, and the other was released to his friend with his mother's permission.

At 3:16 a.m., officers responded to Ford Hall for a domestic disturbance. Everything was OK.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

SATURDAY, AUGUST 23

At 11:24 a.m., Mark Lundin, 1100 Jacobs Court, reported the burglary of a David White survey transmitter, a tripod and a Milwaukee handsaw. Loss was $1,400.

At 12:35 p.m., Verlyn Jabson, 1010 Bluemont, Apt. 1, reported the theft of five Super Nintendo game cartridges. Loss was $160. Also, John Rolf reported the theft of a Game Boy and cartridges. Loss was $230.

At 9:27 p.m., Timothy P. Gillette, 1015 Sunset Ave., was issued a notice to appear for MIP.

User fees could alter Lafene's operations

James Dierking
staff reporter

Students could lose services or have to pay increased fees if Lafene Health Center suffers more cuts, the administrative director of Lafene said Monday night on KSDB-FM 91.9's "A Purple Affair."

Last fall, Student Senate passed a $10-per-person cut in student health fees, making the fee for full-time students $70 per semester.

Senate is now debating more cuts and possibly making the health fee a user fee.

User fees are paid only by the students that use services.

"Going that direction would basically put us into the private sector arena, which means we'd have to operate more like a business," Lannie Zweimiller, administrative director of Lafene, said.

"We don't like to operate like that. We like to take care of everyone," he said.

If changes in the fee are made, a decision would have to be made concerning what services to continue, he said.

"Depending on what direction it goes, we'll have to decide, with the help of the students, what services the students want from Lafene Health Center," Zweimiller said.

Callers to "Purple Affair" were supportive of the fee.

"I don't agree that $70 is too expensive to pay," a caller said.

"I'd rather pay the $70 than have to pay every time I have to go see a doctor."

Tax case handed to Kansas Supreme Court

Associated Press

TOPEKA — Revenue Secretary John D. LaFaver Monday told a legislative study committee that the case of the single taxpayer soon will be in the hands of the Kansas Supreme Court.

"We are preparing our appeal to the Supreme Court," LaFaver said tothe interim Committee on Assessment and Taxation. "I'm very hopeful within the next several weeks an appeal will be made."

The lawsuit was filed by Eric Peden, an attorney and former Johnson County resident who now lives in Kansas City, Mo.

Last year, Shawnee County District Judge Matthew Dowd ruled the state's income-tax law was unconstitutional because single taxpayers were forced to pay different, higher rates in each income-tax bracket than married taxpayers.

Dowd first denied certification of the class and denied a motion to assume jurisdiction over the plaintiff's income tax refund claims.

But Dowd last month reversed himself on both issues, certifying the class to allow all individuals who have paid income tax to the state to be plaintiffs in the lawsuit.

The court defined the class as all unmarried persons subject to Kansas state income taxation, at a rate in excess of the highest rate charged to married individuals filing joint returns, for one or more of the tax years 1988 through the present.

LaFaver told the committee that he does not know if the class includes married people filing separately, however.

Dowd also took jurisdiction over refund claims, ignoring case law that required taxpayers to exhaust administrative remedies, LaFaver said.

"The court did not indicate why it reversed its earlier ruling on refunds jurisdiction," LaFaver said.

"The court also did not elaborate on how it would issue refunds or who would calculate the refund amounts."

Dowd, in his 1994 ruling, said there is little justification for the different tax rates.

The tax rate for married people is 3.5 percent for couples with taxable income up to $30,000; 6.25 percent for those with combined incomes up to $60,000, and 6.45 percent for those with earnings more than that.

For single taxpayers, the rate is 4.4 percent for those who earn up to $20,000; 7.5 percent for those who earn up to $30,000 and 7.75 percent for those who earn more than $30,000.

▶ COURTNEY LOVE AVOIDS JAIL FOR ASSAULT

EPHRATA, Wash. (AP) — Courtney Love, who pleaded guilty Monday to assaulting a singer in another band, avoided jail by agreeing to take courses in controlling her temper.

Grant County District Judge Rich Fitterer suspended Love's 1-year sentence on the condition she refrain from violence for two years and take anger management classes.

"Fame is a responsibility ... to your family and fans, and you need to attend these classes so there isn't any future tragedy," Fitterer said to Love.

He also ordered her to pay a $150 fine and $285 in court costs.

Love, who carried her 3-year-old daughter Frances Bean Cobain, into the courtroom, said "Yes, your honor," when Fitterer asked if she agreed to the sentence and fine.

A crowd of about 45 fans packed the upstairs courtroom in the old Grant County Courthouse.

Kathleen Hannah of the group Bikini Kill accused Love of hitting her on the head during the Lollapalooza Festival at the Gorge amphitheater near George last July 4.

Love, 31, is the lead singer for Hole and widow of Nirvana lead singer Kurt Cobain, who committed suicide last year.

Religious commitments deserve consideration

As the year progresses, there will be plenty of opportunities for professors to show students this simple courtesy.

Life is full of choices. But a choice that students should not be forced to make is one between classes and following the religion of their preference.

As the Jewish 10 Days of Repentance begins today, some concern has been expressed about class scheduling being in conflict with religious practices.

KSU Hillel, the Jewish student organization, is urging professors to schedule major quizzes, exams or assignments around the dates of this holiday.

If this isn't possible, then Hillel wishes professors would consider allowing students of the Jewish faith extra time to make up required work.

This is a valid consideration for professors to think about. For many students, religion is an important part of their lives.

These students would hold religious growth to have equal, if not more, importance to academic growth.

To want all required work in classes scheduled around every religious holiday observed by every student on campus is quite far-fetched.

However, it is a very reasonable request to ask for more time to work around these dates in order to observe religious holidays.

As the year progresses, there will be plenty of opportunities for professors to show students this simple courtesy.

When these teachers are approached with a request of this nature, they should realize it is not out of disrespect or apathy toward the class.

In the students' eyes, they are answering to a higher power and being true to their faith.

That is the sort of personal commitment that no one should be asked to put behind worldly concerns.

Union panders to non-smokers

On one hand, smoking is cool. It looks cool. Many people smoke. A cigarette is a great prop.

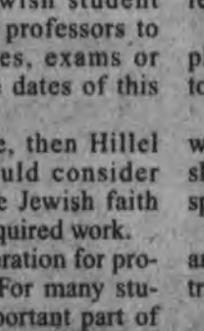
On the other hand, smoking is disgusting. It stains your teeth. A smoker's romantic options are limited to other smokers, or people who don't mind if you taste like an ashtray when they kiss you.



In the end, an individual's decision about smoking is a matter of personal taste, health considerations, and, in many cases, severe addiction.

Lately, lots of people have decided smoking is disgusting. This is the intended result of the massive, and well-intentioned, propaganda campaigns we've been subjected to for the last 20 years.

Unfortunately, many of these non-smokers have recently looked around and said, "Hey! There are a lot more of us than there are of them!" And friends, in a democracy, that spells trouble.

The benign, well-intentioned move toward banning smoking in places where non-smokers have to go has turned into a huge, malevolent, legislating beast that has no regard for issues of personal freedom or even common sense.

Laws in faraway, dimly-imagined East-Coast states that ban smoking in public parks are one extreme example, but we don't have to stretch our brains that far to see the insidious nature of the beast. We can find it right here at home, in our glorious K-State Student Union.

COLUMN

JASON HAMILTON

Several years ago, when people still puffed freely in the Union, some people got together and said, "Hey! No more of that in our Union!"

The debate was heated, but the day was won by the anti-smoking alliance, mostly due to the fact that smoke was damaging the Union.

Union administrators told us, for smoking in the Union to be an option, a new, well-ventilated smoking area would have to be built.

(That causes me to wonder if there are any plans to build one, since they are about to use student money to refurbish and expand the Union. I don't think there are. Asking people involved in the expansion project, I mostly got an "uhhh, what?" response.)

All of that's OK. Smokers shouldn't be clogging up the air non-smokers have to breathe, and that's what they claim was going on the Union.

The truly senseless and outrageous thing that happened was the Union refused to sell tobacco. I suppose the people running the Union did not want to be perceived as encouraging a bad habit.

Let us take a moment to reflect on the fact that, as bad as smoking is for one's health, smoking is a personal choice. Let's not forget the that anti-smoking movement is a fashion, not some sort of religious or ethical issue.

If the Union really wants to fail to encourage bad habits, it should rip out all the video games, stop selling candy bars, smash every damn television in the building and, for heaven's sake, stop selling beer.

I'm in favor of the Union providing beer, television and video games. I merely wonder why these things are available, and tobacco isn't.

Let us take another moment to remember that the Union does not get tax payer money.

It's only source of income are student fees, and whatever monies it can draw in through normal capitalist methods, like, say, selling tobacco.

Does the Union administration really believe some student is not going to start smoking (or, ha ha, is going to quit) just because the Union doesn't have tobacco?

No, the smokers of our campus, instead of spending an outrageous amount of money on tobacco at the Union, are spending outrageous amounts of money at convenience stores near campus.

"Let's not forget that the anti-smoking movement is a fashion, not some sort of religious or ethical issue."
JASON HAMILTON

Let us pause one final time to think on that outrageous amount of money.

If the Union was reachieving that money, couldn't our student fees that go to the Union be a little lower?

The only explanation I can think of is some folks in charge of the Union are more concerned with their institution's image than with the finances of the students who own it.

The Union is pandering to the anti-smoking fashion, and we are literally paying for it.

University ignores needs of non-trads

In the last several decades, the face of American universities has been changing.

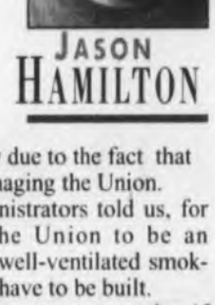
In addition to greater numbers of minority students, the number of non-traditional students is on the rise.

This increase in non-traditional students means new needs have to be met. Universities can no longer cater solely to single, childless, students in the 18-22 age range.

One thing many non-trads need help with is child care. Without this they are prevented from engaging in many of the activities that other students take for granted.

The most glaring example of this is our new multi-million dollar Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.



Currently, students who are parents must find someone else to watch their children if they want to use the Rec.

Cheryl Martin, senior in social work and criminal justice, is working with others on their way to get this problem rectified.

"Our main concern is that all students provide a service to the Rec through payment of fees, and at this time the Rec is not capable of providing service to all students," she said.

"We're looking to make it fair for all students, because not all students are able to use it. Students with children under 14 are not able to use it," Martin said.

The simplest solution is to provide a short-term day-care center in the Rec.

COLUMN

LACH FRANQUEMONT

Parents could bring children there for a couple of hours while they worked out.

Raydon Robel, director of recreational services, has several problems with this plan.

Robel says there was a needs assessment done last year and not enough need was found.

"These programs have to go back to the students as a whole," he said.

Exactly, Mr. Robel — the programs you offer at the Rec do have to go back to the students as a whole. We all pay fees on the Rec, and we should all have equal chance to use it.

I would question this needs assessment, as well. Where was it conducted, the residence halls?

Chuck Allen, junior in elementary and secondary education, collected more than 600 signatures on a petition last year to have a day-care center put in the Rec.

In addition, Allen has talked to quite a few groups about the proposed plan including faculty and staff members.

He said there is almost universal consensus that the plan would be a good one.

When talking to Robel, he kept stressing the cost of the program. When pushed for the actual cost, however, he couldn't name one and admitted a cost estimate had never actually been done.

Allen, though, has done comparison studies of similar programs at the University of Nebraska and the University of Colorado.

Allen said a program at the Rec would initially cost roughly $25,000 and the one at Nebraska is breaking-even in cost.

Allen also suggested ways the cost could be kept down at K-State.

One would be to run it as a co-op with free time given for time volunteered by the parents to help out. Another method would be to give class credit to people in early childhood studies.

Another of Robel's objections was the lack of a proper place at the Rec. Again, Allen has this one figured out.

There is a room that is slotted for table tennis, but room for table-tennis already exists.

This proposed table-tennis room would meet all state codes for a day-care center.

The fact of the matter is that this is a good plan. Why there is so much official opposition to it, I can't figure out.

In last Wednesday's Mortar Board forum, Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said the University is working to transform the campus to accommodate non-traditional students.

Ideas like this one would be a step in the right direction.

Non-traditional students can no longer be treated as if they don't exist.

They are just as important a group as any other, and their needs need to be taken into account.

▶ JACOBS WHINES

Editor,

Every Monday I read the Collegian, and one thought goes through my mind: What a lucky man Kevyn Jacobs is.

After all, isn't it everyone's dream to have a public forum where they can complain about how bad life treats them? I would love to be able to write a half-page column every time my roommate and I don't see eye-to-eye, or every time I have problems in my relationships with the opposite sex. I think I speak for a majority of the student body when I say that we are sick and tired of hearing Jacobs whine about how unfair the world is to him.

I would like to stay a little more informed about issues such as Bosnia and the upcoming presidential election. The staff at the Collegian, however, feels it is more important for me to listen to one student express his belief that the world is pissing in his corn flakes every morning.

If Kevyn Jacobs is that insecure about himself, he should find some other way of dealing with it. Shoving his sob stories in our faces once a week is doing nothing more than taking attention away from real news. (Although I would never actually use the term "real news" to describe any aspect of the Collegian.) Kevyn, life sucks sometimes, and we all have our crosses to bear.

■ Sigma Nu-Chi Omega event brings greeks together for philanthropy

It was a brisk Sunday morning with the sound of music and Gregorian chant filling the air from the always peaceful Memorial Stadium.

This was not a religious event. It was the sound of the eighth-annual Sigma Nu-Chi Omega pledge games.

"This is our philanthropy event which benefits the Red Cross of Manhattan," Tyson Needham, Sigma Nu pledge games chair, said.

Heather Knedlik, Chi-O pledge games chair, said it was a great way for new members to meet others.

"This is the largest philanthropy event on campus, the most participated, and last year we raised the most money for a philanthropy," she said.

Needham said there are three ways of raising money. They include entry fees, T-shirt sales and a booth in the K-State Student Union for Mr. and Miss Pledge Games.

Last year the games raised $5,300, Knedlik said.

"The purpose of these games are to get all pledges together so they can meet each other and have a good time," she said.

The events were a softball throw, broom toss, balloon toss, tug-of-war and four different running relay events.

This is a chance for non-greek students to see greeks portrayed in a positive light and see that they give back to the community in a positive way, Needham said.

"Each house is given a coach to support, cheer and keep track of who is participating in an event and when that event is taking place. The coaches are members from Sigma Nu or Chi-O," he said.

All of the coaches said their jobs are fun because the whole K-State pledge class is together and they get to work as a team of greeks.

Rafael Vitolas, Sigma Sigma Sigma coach, said he was just hanging out with his team. Then some of the women asked him to watch their coats and one just hung her sunglasses on his shirt.

"I did have to give a pep talk to one girl who did not want to run in her event. And I got her motivated," he said.

Jill Taylor, Delta Upsilon coach, said this is a good philanthropy and a lot of money is raised for the Red Cross.

"The DU's are good guys, and they are real excited," she said as she watched from her seat in the stadium.

Mike Goodnow, Pi Beta Phi coach, said getting all the greeks together is a great experience.

"It is like one big family out here. And the Pi Phi's are doing a good job — they are having lots of fun," he said as he watched the Pi Phis in their tug-of-war match.

The participants seemed to enjoy the activities.

"These games are awesome, and they kick ass. Everyone is so spirited," Joy Robbins, Alpha Chi Omega new member, said as she cheered for one of her sisters in the sorority softball throw.

Lindsay Dibbern, Alpha Delta Pi new member, said this is one of the first things she has done in her house as she gets ready for tug-of-war.

"This is a good way to bring unity among the greek community," Eric DeYoe, Phi Kappa Tau new member said, as he watched Phi Tau tug-of-war team pull themselves to a victory over Phi Delta Theta. Phi Tau later fell to Pi Kappa Alpha.

Steve Sommerkamp, Pi Kappa Phi new member said he likes the idea of having pledge games because of the experience.

"Pledges get out and meet everybody by having us all here," he said.

Stacy Miller, Kappa Kappa Gamma new member, said the games were cool because all the pledges from all the houses can come together.

"It is real fun to see all the guys come out and support each other," Mike Carter, Delta Chi new member, said.

Even if someone does really bad everyone still cheers for them, Danielle Gowing, Alpha Chi new member, said as she watches the Lambda Chi Alpha's relay team.

This was a good bonding time for the pledge classes, it brought our pledge class closer together, Brian Glaves, DU new member, said.

"This is a good excuse to get crazy and kick some ass competing," Kari House, Sigma Kappa new member, said as she screamed watching their relay team.

The games are a neat way to get all the pledges together, it is not just one-

Maddux brings quality, class to game of baseball

COLUMN

SHANE McCORMICK

Earlier this summer, a friend of mine called to see if I wanted to go to Colorado for a week and try and catch a Colorado Rockies game. I was a little hesitant at first, but when he told me who they would be playing that week, I immediately said yes.

The Rockies were scheduled to play the Atlanta Braves in a three-game series. I have been a Braves fan for many years.

We went to the second game of the series, which of course the Braves won. But we decided to stay an extra day and get tickets to the last game of the series. Our reason was simple. Greg Maddux was pitching for the Braves.

At the time I might not have noticed it, but I was watching the greatest pitcher to ever play the game.

I know there are some of you that are jumping out of your seats right now, astonished I could make such a statement. Some of you might think Maddux isn't as good as former pitchers Cy Young, Bob Gibson or Sandy Koufax.

You're right, he isn't as good. He's better than them or any other pitchers to play the game.

Let's take a look at what Maddux has done just this year.

After last Thursday night's victory over the New York Mets, Maddux improved his league-leading record to 18-2. In fact, Maddux leads or is in the top two of every category for starting pitchers in the National League.

Maddux leads the entire league in earned runs allowed with a 1.68 average. The closest person to Maddux is at a 2.62 average. He's No. 2 in innings pitched with over 204 innings. He leads the league in complete games with 10. He also leads the league in shutouts with three.

Maddux is trying to become the first pitcher since Walter Johnson in 1918-19 to have an ERA less than 1.80 in two consecutive seasons. Last year, his ERA was 1.56; this year, it's at 1.68. I think he will reach it.

During the past four years, his winning percentage has been .708. That is better than the prime years of great pitchers such as Bob Gibson, Bob Feller, Tom Seaver or Jim Palmer.

What's even more impressive is that Maddux has pitched all of his home games at Wrigley Field in Chicago and Fulton County Stadium in Atlanta. Those two parks are notorious for being a launching pad for opposing hitters.

Oh, and by the way, did I mention that he has won three Cy Young awards in a row? And will win another this year? Not only can Maddux pitch, but he can field, too. He has already won five Golden Glove awards and a sixth is sure to be on its way this year.

So how can a man who is 6 feet tall and 170 pounds be such a dominating pitcher?

Two reasons. First, he is one of the best students of the game. He constantly studies his opponents, and his own pitching style, looking for improvements. He knows where and where not to pitch his opponents.

Secondly, he has incredible movement and location of his pitches. There are few pitchers who can move the ball around the plate exactly where they want it to be. He's constantly thinking two to three pitches ahead. He sets his opponents up. That's how Maddux can get away with throwing a fastball that is never clocked over 86-87 mph. Every pitch he throws seems to always move away from the center of the plate.

If you didn't know much about Maddux's accomplishments, that would be just fine with Maddux. He doesn't desire all of the fame or recognition so many athletes today desire. In fact, Maddux doesn't even have a single major endorsement deal. Maddux would rather keep quiet and go on with his business.

If you haven't had a chance to see Maddux pitch, I suggest you watch some of the playoffs, You'll see Maddux at his best, under pressure. Maddux is a class-act on and off the field; it would be a shame if you never saw the best pitcher ever to play the game.

K-State/Ft. Riley rugby sweeps Springfield 20-18, 36-12

Shana Newell
staff writer

While most K-State fans were tailgating outside Wagner Field Saturday afternoon in anticipation of the football game, the K-State Men's Rugby Club was tearing up the field at Tuttle Creek Pond Area.

A small bit of team history was made that afternoon while the Wildcats were forced to delay the matches for forty-five minutes.

The cause of the delay? The referee failed to show.

"This is the first time I've ever heard of the club, or anyone, having to wait for a ref," Jimmy Scritchfield, freshman, undecided, said.

The club was able to get the match started with a temporary referee and played the entire first half without an official referee. The late-comer finally arrived during halftime, and the rest of the match proceeded without interruption.

K-State faced Springfield Rugby Club in a two-game match series. The Cats fought bitterly to win the first match 20-18. After regrouping, the Cats were able to trample Springfield 36-12 in the second match of the afternoon.

The Springfield club led 10-0 going into halftime of the first game, but the Cats rallied to score four trys in the second half and held their opponents to a mere eight points more, marking a victory in the books.

Springfield is one of the tougher teams K-State will play, Tim Harold, senior in theatrical arts and secondary education, said.

"We're both among the upper-echelon teams," Harold said. "And it always seems to be a blowout when we play them. When we go down there they beat us, and when they come up here, we usually beat them."

Because of that, and because both teams are part of the same union, Springfield vs. K-State has become a rivalry that is looked forward to each season by both teams.

That rivalry showed on the field as club members were caught up in the high emotion of the game, Harold said.

"For some strange reason, they really pull out the stops on both teams," he said.

K-State was able to field most of its players in the match. The A-side team, or the more experienced team, played in the first match while the B-side team, made up primarily of new players, was responsible for the win in the second, he said.

"We're trying to get the new players adjusted to the game so that they can play in the A-side games," Brandon Derks, junior in graphic design, said.

"We really had a lot of guys that were able to play and just get some experience under their belts. It was a great experience for everyone," Derks said.

Derks said the progress of the team is showing.

"We've really improved," Derks said. "And the dedication is really there this year."

Next weekend the club will be host to Emporia State and Central Missouri State.

"These have been close games the past few years," Derks said. "They will be good matches."

K-State will meet their opponents without the aid of Scritchfield and Derks. The two tried out for and were given positions on the Heart of America Select-Side team and will be in Texas for a tournament next weekend.

MARLOWE CASE POSPONED

The outcome of K-State strong safety Chuck Marlowe's preliminary hearing will not be out for two more weeks. The hearing has been moved to 9 a.m. Oct. 11 at the Riley County Courthouse.

Judge Jerry L. Mershon postponed the hearing because the county attorney has had little preparation time to organize the case.

Marlowe has been charged with aggravated assault of a law enforcement officer, aggravated battery of a law enforcement officer, aggravated assault of an unidentified person and criminal damage to property.

The charges stem from an alleged incident which took place Aug. 13 of this year.

Marlowe, a senior from Youngstown, Ohio, is an all-American and Jim Thorpe Award candidate who leads the K-State secondary. He received first-team all-Big 8 honors from the league coaches and second-team honors from the Associated Press in 1994.

Tennis team departs for Clay Court Nationals

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

Before playing a tennis match on clay, most players would need at least two or three practices on it in order to get used to it.

But the K-State trio of Karina Kuregian, Yana Dorodnova and Lena Piliptchak won't need to work the kinks out before the National Clay Court Championships begin tomorrow in Baltimore.

Because, in the words of K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau, Kuregian (from Armenia) grew up on clay and Dorodnova (from Russia) and Piliptchak (from Ukraine) play a clay-court game even when they're on the hard courts on campus.

In the first of the four college grand slams, Kuregian will be seeded seventh in the main singles draw, sophomores Dinah Watson and Dorodnova start qualifying today for the main singles draw and Piliptchak and Watson will start qualifying for doubles.

Kuregian, seen as the leader of the Wildcats before the season, had a tough weekend, going 1-2 at the Travelers Express Invitational.

After splitting her first two matches, Kuregian lost to Dorodnova 6-4, 6-2.

"She just didn't play very well," Bietau said. "She played better against Yana on Sunday, and if she had played at that level on Saturday, she would have won the match against (Mary Beth) Maggert of Purdue."

Kuregian is adept at playing on the clay, so she could have a successful weekend in Baltimore.

"Moving on the clay is not a problem for her," Bietau said. "She grew up on it and she has a game that is very effective on it."

Getting back on her natural surface might do a lot of good for Kuregian, Bietau said.

"Karina will have to play a lot better to get out of the first round," Bietau said. "But the nice thing is that we know she's capable of doing that."

On the slower surface, there are fewer less serve-and-volley and more long rallies, so staying fresh will be hard, especially when it will require five wins in three days to win the title.

"On the clay, the points are longer," Bietau said.

"The clay slows the ball down, and the points are longer, so endurance is possibly more of a factor because of that. The balls are a little harder to put away on clay."

Piliptchak and Dorodonova, who each went 2-1 in singles last weekend, are sophomores, but both are in their first season at K-State. Bietau said the adjustment process is going smoothly.

"They're adjusting OK," Bietau said. "Both of them are playing a little bit of the clay-court tennis on the hard court, and they haven't fully adjusted their game to the hard courts. But that doesn't happen overnight."

Bietau said K-State's performance on Sunday made him optimistic for this week.

"Mentally, the team was just sharper on Sunday," he said. "So it's a typical early-season type of thing, it's the first tournament, and we got in and learned some things."

Since the draws for the tournament haven't been released yet, Bietau couldn't say how K-State will do.

"It's a little difficult to predict right now because we don't know who they're playing," Bietau said.

"Based on results this weekend, Yana has the best chance, but any of them who play well could advance."

The Cats left late Monday afternoon, giving the players little practice on the clay. But Bietau said K-State's experience will be a big benefit in that area.

"We're flying in there tonight (Monday), and we play tomorrow (today) so they don't have much time to practice," Bietau said. "But because of their familiarity on the surface, it's a little easier to do this."

Rec

Bledsoe said.

The biggest obstacle the students have run into while researching this project is liability.

"Liability will take a long time to figure out, but it isn't impossible," Mace said.

Two examples are Colorado and Nebraska," Mace said.

A day-care would be beneficial because all students pay for the Rec, but not all students can use the complex, Mace said.

"It's almost impossible now for moms and dads without child care to work-out there because children under 14 have to stay in certain places," Mace said.

"Nobody wants to work out while supervising children. That's why a day care would be beneficial," Bledsoe said.

A day care could also increase jobs on campus and offer an opportunity for students earning a degree in child care, Mace said.

"There are enough departments that have to do volunteer work so working at a day care could be sufficient," Jackson said.

K-State students pay $30.25 a semester for the Rec Complex, and $20 of that goes to pay off the bond.

"With up to 35,000 people a year using the Rec, you would think a day-care could be started," Jackson said.

K-State had a day care at the Rec Complex in 1974, but it didn't work.

"Things were really different in 1974. Back then, mothers stayed home," Bledsoe said.

The group will research the day care throughout the semester and in an ideal situation it would be implemented, but for now it is only research.

Students interested in helping with the project can contact Cheryl Martin at 539-5555.

▶ CAMPUS CHILD CARE

Day care gives parents options

Camille Wood
staff reporter

Small children attend K-State's campus in a variety of ways.

The Early Childhood Lab, the Child Development Center and the Hoeflin Stone House cater to K-State students who have children.

■ The Child Development Center

Children attending the Child Development Center must be a child of a K-State student, faculty or staff.

The non-profit, local agency provides care for children between 1 and 12 years-old.

Lorna Ford, director of CDC, said nearly 187 children are enrolled in the program and 20 children are on a waiting list to get in.

"There are usually 10-20 on the waiting list," Ford said. "It's first come, first serve."

Parents that are students have priority over faculty and staff during enrollment, Ford said. Also, children enrolled with siblings have priority.

However, K-State students need to think a semester ahead when planning to enroll their child into CDC, she said.

"If they're going to school in January, they need to think about enrolling their child now," Ford said.

A waiting list exists because the Kansas State Department of Health and Environment regulates the ratio of staff-to-children, she said.

An average fee for toddlers age 1 to 2-1/2 is anywhere from $315 to $420 a month, with a staff-to-child ratio of 1-to-5.

The cost for first-grade through sixth-grade students is between $117 and $233 a month, with a 1-to-16 ratio.

Parents are charged varying rates depending on their income, the age of the child, whether services are full or part-time, the amount of time they are watched and how many bus rides they require each day.

Each academic year, the CDC writes a proposal to the Student Governing Association to receive allocated money for its facility to help ease the burden on low-income parents.

Nearly 100 parents were eligible for a monthly allotment of about $100, or less. The Student Governing Association awarded $60,000 through the Educational Opportunity Fund. The EOF serves as a child-care scholarship, Ford said.

"Parents don't see the money, but it offers them a lower rate to pay for part of the services," Ford said.

CHILD CARE

▶ For more info about child care, call Lorna Ford at the CDC, 539-1806. For information about ECL, call Mary DeLuccie at 532-1475. And for information about Stone House child care, contact Louellen West at 537-0713.

■ The Early Childhood Lab

Behind Justin Hall, the Early Childhood Lab meets the community's needs for educating a combination of 44 typically and atypically developing children between ages 3 and 5.

"There are few places for them to go," said Mary Deluccie, assistant professor and director of early childhood programs for the School of Family Studies and Human Services.

Children who attend the lab often have autism, are blind, in walkers or have other special needs.

Children that fall into these categories and are between ages 3 and 5 are receiving these provisions of services at ECL in collaboration with Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, which pays for this program and Head Start, she said.

"The primary goal of teaching and research is very different from the Child Development Center, KSU, at 200 Jardine Terrace which services nearly 200 children," DeLuccie said.

The lab employs early childhood teachers with a degree in Special Education to give professional training to the children.

DeLuccie said the lab is open three hours a day, every Monday through Thursday, with a fee of $7.50 per hour.

"We expect the children to be there everyday so we can learn from them," DeLuccie said.

While children are in the lab, their social interaction, cognitive and emotional behavior, relationships, language, physical and motor skills and other characteristics are studied.

Therapy is given to children in the form of an activity so individual children with special needs are not singled out, and everyone plays and learns in a group setting, DeLuccie said.

■ The Hoeflin Stone House

Full-time day care is offered from 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday at Hoeflin Stone House. Fees are based on a sliding scale according to income.

Stone House is available to 30 children of diversified gender and ages, from 18-months-old to 5-years-old.

"Our reason for being is to be a teaching and training facility. We're teaching students in ECE," Louellen West, program director, said.

The diversity of the children in Stone House helps early childhood education students from K-State gain experience with children gradually, until they're ready to teach five hours a week for the entire semester, she said.

"We try to keep a balance so students have a varied population to work with," West said.

When parents or guardians enroll their child, they need to know the limitations.

Employees inform them of the child diversification slots, so there aren't any surprises when their child is not chosen as part of the group.

When a slot becomes available and the selection process begins, they give priority to children whose parents work full-time, or are occupied outside the home, West said.

"But, age and sex (of the children) are the top priority," West said. "When we have an opening, we fill the slots with a child we don't already have."

Watching the interaction between girls and boys of different ages helps ECE students in learning about the gradual developments and stages they go through, DeLuccie said.

▶ PARENTING

Children an issue in classrooms

Rachelle Harkness
staff reporter

Parents who take their children to class with them might be raising some eyebrows and stirring up some fundamental questions.

Is the college classroom a place for children?

"I don't see it bothering anybody. If the students have a problem with it, then they can get up and leave," Gerald "G.B." Benton, senior in sociology, said.

Greg Meyer, junior in civil engineering, said he has had a bad experience with children in the classroom.

"I was taking a calculus test in Cardwell 101. We sat every other seat, and the kid was between his old man and me. He had a coloring book, but he kept moving around and yapping to his dad every once in a while, and it distracted the crap out of me," Meyer said.

However, Lori McDonald, senior in criminology, said she does not have a problem with her child in class.

"My son is 4 years old, and I feel as though it's all right to bring him to class. Also, he's mature enough to know that when momma is in class, she needs to take notes, and he needs to color or something," McDonald said.

Benton said his son is not rowdy and doesn't bother anybody.

"If he acts up, I just take him out of the room," he said.

But whether the child is acting up or behaving well, it still places an extra body in the classroom, which can be damaging.

"If a class is full, then their child is taking up a seat that some other student paid for. A college class is no place for a child. When they get their high school diploma and they've paid for college, then they can go," Lynn Balthrop, junior in marketing, said.

As a parent, Kelly Coulson, senior in animal science, said she empathizes with parents who bring their children to class.

"As a parent, I completely understand the problem with having children and not having any place to go with them, but the college classroom is a place for higher education. In most cases, children distract from that learning process," Coulson said.

Betsy Barrett, assistant professor in hotel restaurant and institution management and dietetics, said single moms attend her class, but haven't brought their children to class. However, she wouldn't mind as long as they didn't bother her or her other students.

"She has to take care of her child, and she has to go to class, so I don't mind as long as the child is well-behaved," Barrett said.

Several day care facilities are available for students, but often the cost is beyond a student's budget and sometimes finding a last-minute babysitter is impossible.

"If Jordan is running a temperature at the last minute, he can't go to the babysitter, but I can't always miss class to stay home with him. If he feels okay, I just bring him with me," McDonald said.

▶ BLEEDING KANSAS

Historians hope to preserve home

Associated Press

TOPEKA — John Ritchie, an Indiana farmer, arrived with his family at the banks of the Kansas River when Topeka was only six log huts and a few tents and Kansas — Bleeding Kansas — was a battlefield.

The battle was about slavery, and there was no doubt where John Ritchie stood.

He once shot and killed a pro-slavery deputy who dared cross his doorstep. His home was a stop on the Underground Railroad, spiriting runaway slaves north to Canada.

And much of his home still stands.

If a local group realizes its hope, the house will be restored. Americans will have another shrine, just off the Interstate, and perhaps one of those blue roadside signs with their glimpses of forgotten history.

A retired Topeka minister, who is also a history buff and an engineer, the Rev. Richard Taylor, said he believes the Ritchie home is a relic of an era in the nation's past that surely deserves a shrine, and he is leading the effort to preserve it.

Its native limestone walls are covered with tan stucco, and its roof and interior are in disrepair, but it's still deemed relatively solid.

"This is where a pioneer family ate and lived and slept," Taylor said. "Everyone who visits the restored house will be excited about Kansas territorial history."

Local historians say the house was built in 1856. That was one year after Ritchie arrived in Topeka just after passage of the Kansas-Nebraska Act. That act allowed popular sovereignty to decide whether slavery should be allowed in Kansas, which had been a free state.

Impassioned Northerners, such as Ritchie, flocked to Kansas to tip the election their way, and thousands of the opposite persuasion arrived from Missouri and points south. In a wild and violent election, the pro-slave forces won.

But the antislavery forces refused to concede and set up a provisional free-state government in Topeka. The federal government denounced it. Chaos followed.

Some historians regard the open conflict that erupted here in May of 1856, the year John Ritchie built his home, as the first blows of the Civil War. By October, 200 people had died in Bleeding Kansas.

The Ritchie house has been deserted for years, the property of a Topeka law firm that once rented its space. The city even issued a demolition order in a development proposal several years ago, but it was postponed so the home survived.

Taylor had tried to persuade local nonprofit groups to take over the property and use it for office space. That failed. Now his goal is to see it restored simply for the sake of history.

"I'd like to see Shawnee County turn it into a museum," he says. "We're just fortunate that it's still here."

Taylor has pledges from the Ritchie family of $8,000, which would be enough, he believes, to patch the roof. Restoration would require some work because through the years, new floor boards, plaster and window frames have been added.

Despite years of not being used, the house is in good shape, Taylor said. "It's so solid, it isn't going anywhere."

Its builder apparently was an equally sturdy sort.

Ritchie arrived from Indiana in April 1855 with his wife, 4-year-old son and infant daughter. Local historians believe the family suffered through a harsh winter before he built his home.

Scarcely had he finished the job when he was sent to jail for several months in 1856 for his antislavery-guerrilla activities. The territorial governor pardoned him the following March, and in 1859 Ritchie served in the convention that drafted the Kansas Constitution.

▶ DIGITAL TECHNOLOGY

Cellular phones may disrupt pacemakers

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Cellular telephone companies and the federal government are looking into how some digital cellular telephones can interfere with cardiac pacemakers, cardiac defibrillators and hearing aids.

Investigators in Italy, Switzerland and Australia have found certain digital cellular phones can disrupt a pacemaker's signal if held too close to the chest. Last year, the findings were confirmed by doctors in the United States, where 132,000 pacemakers are implanted annually.

In Great Britain, advocates for the deaf have been warning that operating digital cellulars within a few feet of someone wearing a hearing aid can produce a loud buzz in both devices, even if the phone is on standby.

A University of Oklahoma research center formed by cellular companies began looking at that problem from an engineering perspective this summer, along with the potential problems with pacemakers and defibrillators, and the Food and Drug Administration is evaluating all three as well. Potential solutions range from design modifications to new labeling.

So far, there are no known reports of serious health effects when pacemakers meet digital phones. But the FDA advises that pacemaker wearers avoid bringing a digital cellular telephone within 2 inches of the chest.

"In the pacemaker-dependent population, it is a potentially dramatic situation if the pacemaker is inhibited and does not produce the shock when the patient requires it," said Don Witters, an FDA physicist and biomedical engineer.

An FDA laboratory hopes to release its pacemaker findings before year's end, Witters said.

The lab recently began investigating interference with hearing aids and implantable defibrillators, which are surgically placed in the abdomen to shock a fluttering, nonpumping heart back into a strong beat.

Parallel to engineering studies are hospital investigations underwritten by Wireless Technology Research, a five-year cellular research program paid for by an industry trust. Cardiologists will observe as patients hold operating cellular phones against their ears and then directly over their chests, WTR chairman George Carlo, said. Results are due in January.

In addition, WTR will fund a hospital study of cellphones and defibrillators.

Meanwhile, Medtronic Inc., the world's largest developer and manufacturer of cardiac pacemakers, has put its engineers to work on better shielding, representative Dick Reid said. The suburban Minneapolis firm, which says 2 million of its devices have been implanted worldwide since 1961, has more than 40 percent of the U.S. market.

The company normally advises a 6-inch separation between portable cellulars and a pacemaker, Reid said.

▶ CRIME

1994 Kansas law puts more sex offenders behind bars

TOPEKA — Nearly one Kansas inmate in four is imprisoned for a sex offense, compared with a national average of one in seven, Department of Corrections officials have confirmed.

According to a national publication, only Utah and Washington have as high a rate of sex offenders in prison as Kansas. By contrast, of those incarcerated in Texas and Florida, only one in 10 is classed as a sex offender.

On June 30, 1995, a sex crime was the most serious offense for which 1,499, or 22 percent, of the Kansas penal system's 6,926 inmates were doing time, Bill Miskell, Corrections Department representative, said.

He also said if inmates convicted of more serious crimes — such as murder and kidnapping — were included who also had been convicted of sex offenses, the percentage would be even higher.

"It is up over the past 10 years," Miskell said. "I think what you've got is a legislative policy decision that the presumed sentence for sex offenses is incarceration."

Sen. Tim Emert, R-Independence, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said he agreed.

"The Legislature has adopted the philosophy that we don't lock up a lot of people for property crimes that a lot of other states would, and we use that bed space for those who have committed crimes against people," Emert said.

The 1994 Legislature passed a Sexual Predator Act, which provides that sexual offenders believed to represent a continuing danger to society may be transferred to the custody of the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services upon release from prison.

R.E.M. audience rocks Riverport (well, sort of ...)

contributing writer

The audience at the R.E.M. concert was as fickle as a kid on a Life cereal commercial, going from a sea of lethargy one minute to a pumped-up screaming mass the next.

Radiohead opened the show at the Riverport Amphitheater in St. Louis Sept. 23. The band played a strong set, but the crowd was another story.

Out on the tarp-covered lawn, nobody was standing up. Maybe it was different closer to the stage, but the crowd's lack of enthusiasm was a disappointment.

Even during "Creep," only four sporadically placed people stood up to dance.

But the first beat of "What's the frequency, Kenneth?" brought everyone to their feet — except for two pregnant women sitting in chairs.

The one who was eight months along said the two of them were at the concert with their husbands.

"Pregnant women enjoy music too," she said. "Besides, someone has to make sure our drunk husbands make it home."

Even though the band looked like a miniaturized puppet show from the lawn, it was R.E.M., and it was great being there.

Someone nearby in the crowd summed the feeling up with these sentences.

"I don't even care that I can't see their faces. It's live music, and you can't beat it."

Glowing images of embers, smoke rings, household appliances, waif-like models, pulsating spots and x-rays were projected on a giant screen behind the stage.

Michael Stipe was a fitting centerpiece at his microphone stand as he belted out an amazing performance.

It didn't matter that he wasn't jumping from one side of the stage to the other like a psychotic pinball. The quality of his singing was exceptional — very forceful, giving the concert an energetic pulse that kept the crowd moving despite the cold weather.

Commenting on the cold, Stipe went off about the night's temperature during a break between songs.

"Do you like my jacket? I'm wearing it because it's very fucking cold here," he said.

While Stipe wore a jacket, a lot of concert goers hit the beverage stands to warm themselves with a little alcohol.

For almost two hours, the barrage of R.E.M. songs included "Everybody Hurts," "Man on the Moon," "Losing My Religion" and "Pop Song 89," as well as Stipe's self-professed favorite "Half a World Away."

Besides the songs from their previous albums, members played selections from "Monster" and three songs that had yet to be released.

Introducing most selections with a little background before they were played, Stipe said that the influence for "Try Not to Breathe" came from an elderly person whose breathing was about the only thing he or she still had control over.

R.E.M. also played "The One I Love," a song Stipe said the band had only played six times in the last seven years.

After ending their act with "Star 69," the band was brought back to the stage for an encore. The show concluded with a slow song that erupted into "It's the End of the World as We Know It (and I Feel Fine)," leaving the crowd screaming as the stage lights went off.

Russian TV host taken off the air

Associated Press

MOSCOW — He's dour. He's dull. And now he's off the air.

Russian Public Television canceled writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn's talk show, a 15-minute Monday night monologue scathingly critical of post-Soviet Russia and the people who run it.

The Nobel laureate's wife, Natalia, said Monday the cancellation reeked of Soviet times, when Solzhenitsyn was persecuted and imprisoned as a dissident, then forced into exile.

She said a message left on Solzhenitsyn's answering machine told Russia's most revered living writer the network was pulling the plug.

"He wasn't even allowed to say goodbye to his audience," she said.

She linked the cancellation to the beginning of a fierce election campaign for Dec. 17 parliamentary elections.

"RPT is getting rid of broadcasts criticizing the government. Naturally, the first to go, as happened 30 years ago, was Solzhenitsyn," she said.

In fact, it was the second political program taken off the air in a matter of days.

On Friday, the network took the public-affairs program "Versions" off the air because its host had what a network spokesman called an unsuitable approach to the Russian political landscape.

A network official told the ITAR-Tass news agency that at least 10 political shows were being canceled to make way for campaign programming. The anonymous official said Solzhenitsyn's cancellation had nothing to do with personality or political convictions.

"A Meeting With Alexander Solzhenitsyn" has been on the air for a year, since shortly after its cranky, contrarian star returned to his homeland after 20 years in exile, most of it at a secluded estate in Vermont.

In a land mired in political apathy — and enamored of imported soap operas — the popularity of the show is debatable. Ratings are not yet the life-or-death science they are in the United States.

Solzhenitsyn's thick books — stunning achievements that garnered him the 1970 Nobel Prize for literature and the wrath of Soviet authorities — are no longer widely read, and the 76-year-old writer commands no obvious political following.

But his wife said the TV show had a nationwide audience.

"We get letters from thousands of viewers," she told ITAR-Tass.

A scathing attack on the show — and Solzhenitsyn's politics of nostalgia and nationalism — in the newspaper Izvestia said the writer's diatribes on the failures of post-Soviet Russia fall on deaf ears.

"There are ups and downs in politics and in literature," Konstantin Kedrov wrote in Friday's paper.

"Moses said just three words — 'Free my people' — to the Pharaoh, and it changed history. Moses said even more to the people he led out of the desert. But people stopped listening. Solzhenitsyn had the same fate."

6 Defendants go on trial

Associated Press

RACINE, Wis. — Three years after the battered body of a paper mill worker was pulled from a pulp vat, a 50-pound weight tied around his neck, six co-workers go on trial today in what prosecutors say is a case of union thuggery.

Prosecutors contend the six defendants — angry because Thomas Monfils had tipped off police about a planned theft of electrical cord from the mill — confronted their union brother with a tape-recording of the call, bludgeoned him and tossed him into the vat.

Monfils' body was found the next day after the two-story vat of mud-like pulp was drained. A doctor testified that the 35-year-old man suffered a skull fracture, broken jaw and broken ribs and drowned in the pulp slurry.

Charged with being a party to first-degree murder are Rey Moore, 48; Keith Kutska, 44; Mike Hirn, 25; Michael L. Johnson, 47; Dale Basten, 53; and Mike Piaskowski, 46. Conviction carries a mandatory sentence of life in prison.

All are members of the Paperworkers Union, which represents about 1,100 employees at the James River Corp. mill in Green Bay.

Prosecutors paint a picture of brutal intimidation in the workplace and a code of silence among union brothers.

Monfils had told police Kutska planned to steal a piece of electrical cord to use at his barn. Kutska, with the help of a lawyer, obtained a copy of the anonymous call under the state open-records law.

The 1992 slaying prompted passage of what is known as the Monfils Law, which forbids the release of anonymous calls.

Royce Finne, Kutska's lawyer, said prosecutors are missing a key piece of the puzzle — who did the actual killing.

"Basically, what the district attorney is doing is legal football — tackle them all and hope one has the ball," Finne said. "It is a scary idea to me to try and send someone to prison for first-degree murder that you know they didn't commit."

District Attorney John Zakowski's case is built on circumstantial evidence. No witnesses to the crime have come forward.

Dodie Verstrate, a woman who befriended Kutska when he helped her husband pour concrete at their home in 1994, testified at a preliminary hearing in April that Kutska told her, "I am the one that killed Tom Monfils."

The woman said Kutska told her the killers' only mistake was throwing Monfils in the wrong vat; the right vat would have left him in pieces.

Factory workers have testified they saw the six defendants near the paper machine where Monfils worked shortly before he disappeared.

One worker, David Wiener, who is now serving a 10-year prison sentence in the shooting death of his brother, testified he saw Johnson and Basten crouched over, carrying something heavy near a pulp vat the day Monfils disappeared. Wiener said he was unable to see what they were carrying.

Jury selection will be in Racine because of heavy publicity surrounding the case. Once a jury is selected, it will be taken to Green Bay to hear testimony.

"I have seen my son floating in a pond of water so many times in my dreams. I have seen people fishing him out," said Monfils' 60-year-old mother, Joan. "This is terrible. Terrible. It is not going to end when the judge pounds his gavel at the end of the trial."

▶ NORWAY CRACKS DOWN ON DRUNKEN DRIVING

OSLO, Norway (AP) — It doesn't pay to drink and drive in Norway.

A 30-year-old Norwegian had been sentenced to three weeks for drunken driving, so his pals gave him a spirited send-off.

The next morning, the man drove himself to Ilseng prison, where a guard smelled alcohol on his breath and found him legally drunk again, the Hamar Dagblad newspaper reported Monday.

The man was also driving without a license, which was revoked as part of his sentence.

"Of all the nerve," prison director Roger Larsen said to the newspaper.

"In my 26 years at the Ilseng work camp, I haven't seen the likes of it."

A person is legally drunk in Norway if the blood alcohol level is more than .05 percent. The level for most American states is twice that.

Under Norway's standards, roughly one pint of beer puts an average male over the limit. A first offense carries a three-week jail sentence or a fine equal to one month's pay, and loss of driving privileges.

As soon as he gets out of jail, the man, whose name was not released, faces another trial and a return engagement at Ilseng.

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

echnical courses that count toward their associate's degrees at K-State.

The K-State program students will be able to take math, social sciences, speech and electives that normally they wouldn't be able to take, Dunn said.

The courses that will be offered through K-State will allow students to get a more rounded education that will carry on into their future, Dunn said.

"This will give the students a better opportunity for advancement later on," Dunn said.

Another advantage of the program for students would include financial aid options through the center to cover classes at the center as well as classes at K-State, Bill Berry, center director, said.

The students will be choosing from a college catalog, Kickhaefer said.

The students who have started through Cloud County will be able to transfer their credit toward the associate's degree offered through the center, Kickhaefer said.

Although this is in the planning stage and nothing has been signed by either K-State or the center, if everything goes according to schedule, students could be able to take classes from K-State starting July 1, Dunn said.

For all practical purposes, students would be taking the classes starting in August because that is when their semester starts, Berry said.

The first step for the Technical Center is to submit an application to the local board of education. The local board will in return vote on the application, and then it will be sent to the Kansas Board of Education.

It then goes onto the Kansas Legislature where it will eventually end up in the Governor's hands. Once signed by the governor it would become official, Berry said.

The local board of education is voting on the center's application on Oct. 4. The administrators at the center are hoping to have the application signed by the governor by April 1996.

Cost for the classes at K-State will be paid at the center, which will in turn be paid to K-State. The way the plans look now, students will be paying by the credit hour for their classes at K-State, Berry said.

The cost would include a fee for the class as well as a student fee for priviledges such as using the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and the K-State Student Union, Berry said.

There will not be a break in tuition fees for the students. The Manhattan Technical Center students will pay what K-State students pay.

Judaism. The 10 days culminate with Yom Kippur, The Day of Atonement, when Jews fast and pray for forgiveness of their sins of the past year. All of these together are referred to as the High Holy Days.

About 20 K-State students belong to B'nai B'rith Hillel, the campus Jewish organization.

The organization's faculty adviser David Margolies, associate professor of entomology, was actively recruiting new members while at the synagogue.

Joshua Galitzer, freshman in architecture and a member of Hillel, blew the shofar Monday morning.

The shofar, a ram's horn that has been hollowed and straightened, is blown on the High Holy Days to call Jews to pray for forgiveness of their sins. Its use comes from the legend that Abraham, about to sacrifice his son, Isaac, was stopped by God and sacrificed a ram instead. Since then, the shofar has been used as an early form of military bugle as well as in modern religious ceremonies.

Another token of Rosh Hashannah is the apples dipped in honey that are eaten to symbolize the hope for a happy, sweet new year.

According to the Jewish community's newsletter "Chai Lights," apples were originally served because they were the first fruit to be harvested in the fall.

The Manhattan Jewish Congregation consists of about 30 families and is growing.

There are now more than 20 children under the age of 6 in the group, Jan Galitzer said.

The congregation may be small but works together as a large family.

"Look at it this way," Margolies said. "We all share the responsibility."

Bracha
Hebrew for blessing.

Minyan
A quorum of ten adult Jews (male by Orthodox standards of Halacha) necessary to the recitation of public prayers such as the Mourner's Kaddish.

Ha-Shem
Traditional Jewish way of avoiding accidental desecration of God's name. It is also used in writings because it is considered sacrilegious to erase or in any other way destroy the Tetragrammaton, and using 'Ha-Shem' circumvents any problems.

Ha-Shem literally means 'the name' and thus circumvents many of the problems associated with writing or saying the Tetragrammaton. Other names are used in place of Ha-Shem during prayer.

Spencer Gardner, DU new member, said he also enjoyed the games even though he was eliminated from the Simon Says event.

"It is a good time, and Delta Upsilon rocked," he said.

Yet as the rain clouds started to form, the day was coming to a close with the DUs not rocking as much as they would have liked.

Mr. Pledge Games was awarded to Delta Chi new member Steve Levesque. Miss Pledge Games was awarded to Alpha Chi new member Lisa Griffiths.

The spirit award went to the Alpha Chis and the Sigma Phi Epsilon pledge classes.

The overall winners for the days events for the sororities are Kappa Alpha Theta in third place, Delta Delta Delta in second place and the Alpha Chis took home the big trophy.

As for the fraternities, Lambda Chi Alpha was third, SAEs came in second and Tau Kappa Epsilon was the big winner.

Program to raise awareness

Associated Press

WICHITA — A program to raise environmental awareness among low-income and minority residents is being developed by Friends University and some area activists.

The effort is being paid for by a $20,000 grant from the Environmental Protection Agency.

Organizers are seeking minority residents and people who live in lower-income areas to attend a free Citizen's Environmental Academy.

The idea is to raise awareness about environmental issues, particularly those that can affect health, and help residents investigate potential problems and work to correct them.

Alan Maccarone, director of environmental studies at Friends University, said residents may wonder whether it's safe to eat the fish in the Arkansas River or to live near a high-voltage power line. This is an example of the types of issues that will be discussed.

"They may want to know what is the likelihood that my child will develop cancer or leukemia," he said. "We are hoping they will bring their problems to us."

Participants will be asked to attend eight classes, once a week beginning Oct. 18. During the next six months, they will identify issues they are interested in learning more about. Organizers will help find people to answer their questions.

Joe Pajor, who works for the city but is organizing the program on his own time, compares the citizen's academy to programs in which companies reduce the risk of pollution by reducing their use of toxic chemicals.

The aim of the academy is preventing sickness. Reducing exposure to lead, radon and other chemicals should reduce the risk of illness, he said.

According to a 1985 report by the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, the eight southeastern states that have the largest percentage of black residents were repositories for 75 percent of the nation's hazardous waste.

That may contribute to the higher cancer deaths among minorities, said Selena Mendy, of the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law in Washington.

Lawsuit accuses manufacturer of snooping

Associated Press

HOUSTON — A lawsuit accuses attorneys for a breast implant manufacturer of hiring a private investigator and a former prostitute to snoop on at least eight implant recipients now suing Baxter Healthcare Inc.

The women are among 11 plaintiffs awaiting a November trial on their claims that Baxter-made implants seriously impaired their health.

Attorney Richard Mithoff, in documents filed last week, accuses Baxter lawyers of going to improper and illegal extremes in an effort to cast doubts on the women's injuries.

A spokeswoman at Baxter's Deerfield, Ill., offices denied any wrongdoing.

"Baxter has only authorized appropriate means of conducting surveillance," Mary Thomas said. "We would never condone inappropriate means of surveillance."

The lawsuit said defense investigators resorted to surveillance photographs and videotapes of the women, their spouses and children.

Sheryl D. Berry of New Mexico expanded her lawsuit against Baxter Thursday, accusing the company of invading her privacy and inflicting emotional distress.

Mithoff says Baxter attorneys hired a former prostitute to travel to New Mexico and pose as a patient of chiropractor Jerry Smalling, who is Berry's husband. The lawsuit alleges the scheme was to obtain privileged communication between husband and wife.

Thomas said Baxter authorized no such surveillance.

State District Judge Michael Schneider, who is overseeing the breast-implant claims, ruled plaintiffs' lawyers may take depositions from the private investigator and the former prostitute.

Controllers' jobs to be eased out

Associated Press

FORT WORTH, Texas — The Federal Aviation Administration is moving toward easing air traffic controllers out of the picture and allowing airlines and pilots to set their routes, according to published reports.

Under the plan, air traffic controllers would cease to be lords of the skies and become more like angels, intervening only when necessary to prevent collisions.

The plan was first reported Sept. 18 by the Los Angeles Times. The Dallas Morning News carried additional details in a story Sunday.

Called Free Flight, the proposal would use computers and satellites to enable pilots to abandon the crowded, one-lane airways that now serve as the nation's airborne arteries.

Proponents said aviation would be safer and delays could virtually disappear, saving airlines an estimated $3.5 billion a year.

Opponents, including the nation's leading pilots' and air traffic controllers' unions, argued that skies already are chaotic and could get worse if controllers are no longer in charge.

But with air traffic predicted to jump by 60 percent in the next decade to 800 million passengers a year, scarcely anyone in the industry questions the need for changes.

During the past 12 months, outdated radar and computer equipment used to guide jetliners cruising at high altitudes has faltered or failed a dozen times.

"Free Flight is elegantly simple in concept and infinitely complex in terms of getting there," said Lane Speck, the FAA's director of air traffic rules and procedures. "The main goal at every step is to make sure it is safe."

Tests have shown that airlines can shave minutes from their schedules by setting their own courses on some long-distance flights. The main requirement is that it be done at high altitudes and not within 200 miles of the intended destination.

Wildcat workouts are making students' hearts pump.

"If they like it, they'll get involved and stay with it," said Sarah Forsyth, assistant director of fitness and aquatics with Recreational Services.

Aerobic exercise sessions are offered 38 times a week at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex in the new multi-purpose room.

"There are different kinds to meet different needs," Forsyth said.

There are sessions featuring traditional aerobics, step aerobics, interval training, combo training and toning.

They are structured exercise sessions that go on a variety of times during the week, Forsyth said.

Special events are sponsored monthly to encourage more participation.

The new participants are typically those who have never done aerobics, non-traditional students and men, Forsyth said.

"It's a good place to meet people and find out if you like aerobics," said Laura Schaaff, senior in nutrition and exercise science and aerobics instructor.

Special events are a change of pace for regular participants and encourage people who might not usually participate, Forsyth said.

The special events are part of the Natural High Program sponsored by the National Intramural Recreational Sports Association. The program's purpose is to encourage people to make healthy life decisions, Forsyth said.

September's special event was "Spirit Stepping." Participants were asked to wear purple and white, and some of the exercise routines were done to music of the K-State Marching Band.

"It's a fun time for everyone," Schaaff said.

Aerobic exercise can improve health, self-esteem and give a person more energy and allows a person to exercise with others, Bishop said.

Foreign official visits to discuss wheat trade

Sarah Edwards
staff reporter

In an effort to increase wheat trade between Jordan and the United States, the U.S. Wheat Associates sponsored the visit of Adel Al-Kodah, Jordan's minister of supply and trade, to K-State Tuesday.

The minister's trip will also include visits to Houston and Washington, D.C. The purpose of his visit, sponsored by the Kansas Wheat Commission, was to show him technology and experiments involving wheat production and encourage him to buy Kansas wheat.

He was particularly impressed with the wheat-breeding program at Throckmorton Plant Center. The minister said Jordan might send people to help with research in the program.

"We hope that there will be a good cooperation between Kansas State University and Jordan University. We will take the benefits from such research bearing in mind that Jordan depends so much on grain food in producing cereals, which fluctuate from year to year," Al-Kodah said.

Richard Prior, Regional Director for the U.S. Wheat Associates Middle East/East Africa branch, said the purpose of this program is to encourage Jordan to buy more wheat.

Jordan wants more loans so it doesn't have to raise wheat prices during a sensitive time. Wheat prices have doubled, and the government of Jordan said they want to keep them down. Because of the signing of the peace agreements with Israel, some Jordanians are upset, and an increase in wheat prices could cause a lot of unrest, Prior said.

"I mentioned before that the purpose is to see the development of American experiments in many technical fields, and I would like

▶ STUDENT SENATE

Senators question allocations

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

Although two student senators expressed interest in reconsidering the allocations bills passed last week, only one of the bills might be reconsidered.

Alpha Phi Alpha was allocated $1,694.80 for its annual step show on Nov. 4, and the agriculture competition teams were allocated $15,000 from the competition team accounts Thursday.

Both allocations were moved special orders, which means they were scheduled for first readings and would have been voted on this week. Because the bills were moved special orders, the bills were voted on last Thursday.

The ag competition teams allocation was moved special orders because representatives from the teams said they were already competing and needed the money. No reason was given why the Alpha Phi Alpha allocation was moved special orders.

"Those really didn't have any need to be moved special orders," Jennifer Higerd, arts and sciences senator, said.

Although Higerd was not at the meeting, she said she did not think all the issues concerning both allocations had been aired during last Thursday's meeting.

"I think there're some more issues that need to be raised," Higerd said.

Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator, is trying to get the Alpha Phi Alpha allocation reconsidered because the fraternity is a social fraternity, and Student Senate did not usually fund social fraternities.

Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said it would be like giving money to the Pi Phi house.

Allocations Committee Chairman Chris Avila said he thought there was a misunderstanding with the Alpha Phi Alpha allocation.

Alpha Phi Alpha's step show is a fundraiser for scholarships, charity and community service projects and used as a recruiting tool for the University, Reggie McGowan, the groups's adviser, said.

McGowan said the fraternity had not asked for funds from Senate in the past, but the step show had been expanded and needed more funding.

McGowan said Alpha Phi Alpha was not strictly a social fraternity, and other similar organizations had received funding from Senate in the past.

LeDoux said the reason he wanted to have the Alpha Phi Alpha allocation reconsidered is so he can change his vote.

"I want to change my vote," LeDoux said. "I feel that I have cast an uninformed vote."

Other senators want to reconsider the bill because issues were not brought up during the meeting.

"I suppose this wouldn't have happened if we hadn't railroaded this," he said. "It's our own system coming back to bite us."

How Senate could legally bring up the bills for reconsideration would be a decision of the Senate Chairman, he said.

"I had four senators come to me and express concern," John Potter, Senate chairman, said.

Those four senators said they thought they were voting for an academic fraternity and not a social fraternity, he said.

"On Thursday night, during the period to approve the minutes, a couple of senators will ask to change their votes," Potter said.

Other senators might move to reconsider the bill. Because both allocations bills were moved special orders, the senators said they felt they had not had time to do enough research.

"Since I have had four senators approach me, I have not sent this bill on to President Peterson," Potter said.

Potter sent the rest of the legislation, including the agriculture compe-

Peterson recovering, quick-return hopeful

Lisa Elliott

It won't be long before he's back.

That's what Student Body President Jeff Peterson said Tuesday night.

Peterson had surgery Tuesday morning for the infected pressure sore that forced him to enter Wesley Medical Center more than a week ago.

"I'm doing good," Peterson said.

Peterson now faces four weeks of recovery before he can return to campus and resume his responsibilities.

"Hopefully, the next four weeks will go fast," he said. "I definitely miss Manhattan, campus and the Union."

Peterson

Peterson said he felt he was lucky Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, and Jenni Cheatham, chief of staff, have been able to take over many of his campus responsibilities.

"I know he's doing a good job," Peterson said. "I know my being gone puts a big workload on them."

He said he has been in constant contact with Finkeldei and student government since he was admitted to the hospital.

"I was really lucky that they were able to spend an incredible amount of time here that first week," Peterson said. "That was nice."

Finkeldei and Cheatham spend a lot of time in Wichita with Peterson figuring out how the office would be run and how the duties would be divided during Peterson's absence.

"They won't be able to spend as much time down here in the next few weeks," Peterson said.

PLEDGE HAZING RESULTS IN KU DELTA CHI CHAPTER SUSPENSION

The University of Kansas has indefinitely suspended Delta Chi fraternity for an August hazing incident that sent two pledges to the hospital, the university announced Tuesday.

"We think the actions we have taken are reasonable and responsible and prudent," David Ambler, vice chancellor for student affairs, said.

But the mother of one of the hazing victims said the suspension is a joke.

"It's the funniest thing I've ever heard," said Carol Hines, mother of Delta Chi member Nate Hines of Kearny, Neb. "It makes you wonder if they are all alumni of the fraternity."

The suspension bars Delta Chi from using the name of the university or its facilities and from participation in university-sponsored activities. The fraternity must also complete a 13-point sanctions plan.

Braden Hopkins, Delta Chi president, said the sanctions were hard, but appropriate.

"The punishment fits the crime," he said.

Steven Bossart, director of alumni services at Delta Chi's headquarters in Iowa City, Iowa, said the university sanctions were fair and rehabilitative.

"It's positive for the guys," Bossart said.

The international fraternity announced Sept. 14 it was placing the KU chapter under a two-year alumni conservatorship and was beginning fraternity expulsion proceedings against four Delta Chi unnamed members.

Ambler said the university was unable to prosecute them because the university's jurisdiction on personal behavior stopped at the edge of campus.

He also said the university wouldn't pursue charges through the Douglas County District Attorney's office, even though hazing is a Class B Misdemeanor in Kansas and carries a maximum $1,000 fine or six-month jail term.

"That's up to the individual or the fraternity," he said.

Amber said his concern was salvaging a fraternity that has been a valuable contributor to the university for 72 years.

"We believe that fraternity life makes a positive contribution overall to individual and to campus life," he said. "Any group can have a year or two when it has problems."

Hopkins said being suspended would make it difficult to recruit new members but the fraternity would survive.

"We've been a strong group of guys, and we'll pull through," he said.

Delta Chi can petition for reinstatement of its privileges after one year.

But Carol Hines isn't so sure.

"Not much is really going to change," she said. "How could this ever be fair to Nate and Adam?"

GREEK PRESIDENTS ELIMINATE HAZING THROUGH EDUCATION

Kansas University fraternity and sorority presidents have responded to Delta Chi's suspension by resolving to eliminate hazing as a greek tradition.

"We are in the midst of changing old traditions that were no good," Matt Jennings, Phi Delta Theta president, said.

"This system has to evolve," Carey Stuckey, Kappa Alpha Theta president, said. "We are entering a new environment, and we need to change with it."

Education and communication are the keys to preventing hazing, chapter presidents said.

"We discuss with our pledges possible scenarios that shouldn't happen and tell them what they should do if they do occur," Kyle Cooper, Sigma Alpha Epsilon president, said.

Alan Stearns, Delta Upsilon president, said his fraternity promoted house unity instead of pledge unity.

House unity builds trust, removes animosities between members and creates an environment that doesn't allow hazing, Stearns said.

Phi Delta Theta has gotten parents and alumni more involved in the life of the fraternity as a way to discourage hazing, Jennings said.

Other houses, like Kappa Alpha Theta, are having initiation ceremonies earlier in the fall so pledges become official members of their houses sooner.

All greek houses are required to follow anti-hazing rules set by the university, their national headquarters and often their insurance companies. As a result, most KU fraternities and sororities now have student risk-management officers who oversee their houses' compliance.

But changing traditions isn't easy.

"It's always a battle," Cooper said. "There are people who move with you and those that resist."

The chapter presidents are encouraged by the progress that is being made.

"There are a lot of houses doing good and presidents trying to make changes," Stearns said.

"We've come a long way," Jennings said.

Students learn that HIV and STDs are easily transmitted

"We need to be aware of the effect that AIDS had on African Americans because one dies every 20 hours of an AIDS-related death."

JAWWAS ABDULHAAQ
SOPHOMORE IN POLITICAL SCIENCE AND PRESIDENT OF BLACK STUDENT UNION

Tonya Bobbitt
staff reporter

Glitter represented sexually transmitted diseases at a Black Student Union meeting last night.

Members of SHAPE — STDs HIV AIDS peer education — shocked the audience by shaking audience members' hands and secretly passing glitter throughout the room. The easy transmission of the glitter represented the spread of STDs and how people are unaware that they are carriers.

"Anything is better than nothing," Shannon Yust, senior in psychology and SHAPE member, said explaining protection of any kind is important because people are so unaware of STDs.

Jawwad Abdulhaqq, sophomore in political science and president of BSU, said BSU wanted to have a workshop about AIDS awareness.

"We need to be aware of the effect that AIDS have on African Americans because one dies every 20 hours of an AIDS-related death," Abdulhaqq said.

SHAPE member Reese Barberio-Johnson, senior in secondary education in English, said AIDS is a problem because people do not realize the disease happens to everyone and not just unlucky people.

"AIDS is non-discriminant," Barberio-Johnson said. "It's not who you are, but what you do."

Yust said all students must be aware of AIDS and other STDs, and people shouldn't be ashamed of getting treated because many things are curable. He also said that STDs are very common.

"One out of every 250 college students is infected with the HIV virus," Yust said.

SHAPE worked in conjunction with BSU to help inform African Americans about their risks in catching the virus, especially African American women.

AIDS is the No. 1 killer of black women, according to the Center of Disease Control.

Of the 441,528 reported AIDS-diagnosed patients, 146,283 are African Americans. They represent more than 30 percent of the total AIDS population, according to CDC. Of those, 110,958 African American men and 31,821 African American women are infected with AIDS.

SHAPE also used a banana and condom to educate audience members about AIDS awareness and protection. Two people from the audience demonstrated how to put on a condom and how to properly take it off.

DeAngelo Strickland, junior on construction science, said the demonstration was helpful because many men do not know the proper procedures of handling a condom.

"It's scary out there with these diseases," Strickland said. "I really learned a lot — especially about how important it is to remove a condom properly."

At the end of the meeting SHAPE handed out two types of condoms, lubricated condoms and non-lubricated kissing condoms, which are used for oral intercourse.

Federal aid given to dietetic students

Rachelle Harkness
staff reporter

A federal grant of nearly $200,000 from the U.S. Department of Education will allow students to train in dietetics at 39 sites across the state.

Students who cannot pack up and move to Manhattan will finally have the opportunity to become registered dietitians.

Kansas and Missouri are two of the first states across the nation that have access to this new program.

"I think it's a great opportunity for students who want to better themselves and don't have the resources to move to Manhattan to complete a degree," Christy Clem, senior in human ecology, said.

The integrated services digital network, or ISDN, will allow things to flow much faster and create better communication between students and teachers.

"ISDN uses digital signals instead of sound waves to send voice, video and computer data over existing copper phone wires. It runs seven times faster than modems, and it is available in the Southwestern Bell Telephone area," Dr. Judy Miller, professor and head hotel restaurant institution management and dietetics, said.

Teachers and students will be able to communicate effectively through this new program.

"A teacher can relate and act directly with them," Miller said.

Not only are there 39 TELENET locations throughout the state, but students can also communicate in their own home if they purchase the necessary equipment.

The sites will be equipped with desktop video conferencing units, which consist of a desktop personal computer and PictureTel unit. A PictureTel unit is like a TV camera mounted on the computer to provide two-way audio and video.

The curriculum consists of 130 hours, which include 43 professional courses and 900 hours of supervised practicum.

K-State dietetics faculty members and other members of the faculty will be helping with the courses.

The courses will begin in January. There are some areas that still need to be worked out, but the staff plans to have it completed this semester.

The grant provides a total of $198,877 for three years, and the federal funding will be matched with K-State funds.

Al-Kodah visited with University President Jon Wefald. He was interested in having his son attend the University to pursue a graduate degree in business or economics. Al-Kodah said K-State was the most beautiful university he had seen.

William Richter, Assistant Provost for International Programs, served as an intermediary between the University and Kansas Wheat. He said he felt the visit went well.

"It was helpful for him to see the University and to meet with President Wefald and with other University officials," Richter said.

Aggieville project detracts funds from campus

President Wefald needs to take another look at the needs of this campus before approving the plaza walkway as part of the list.

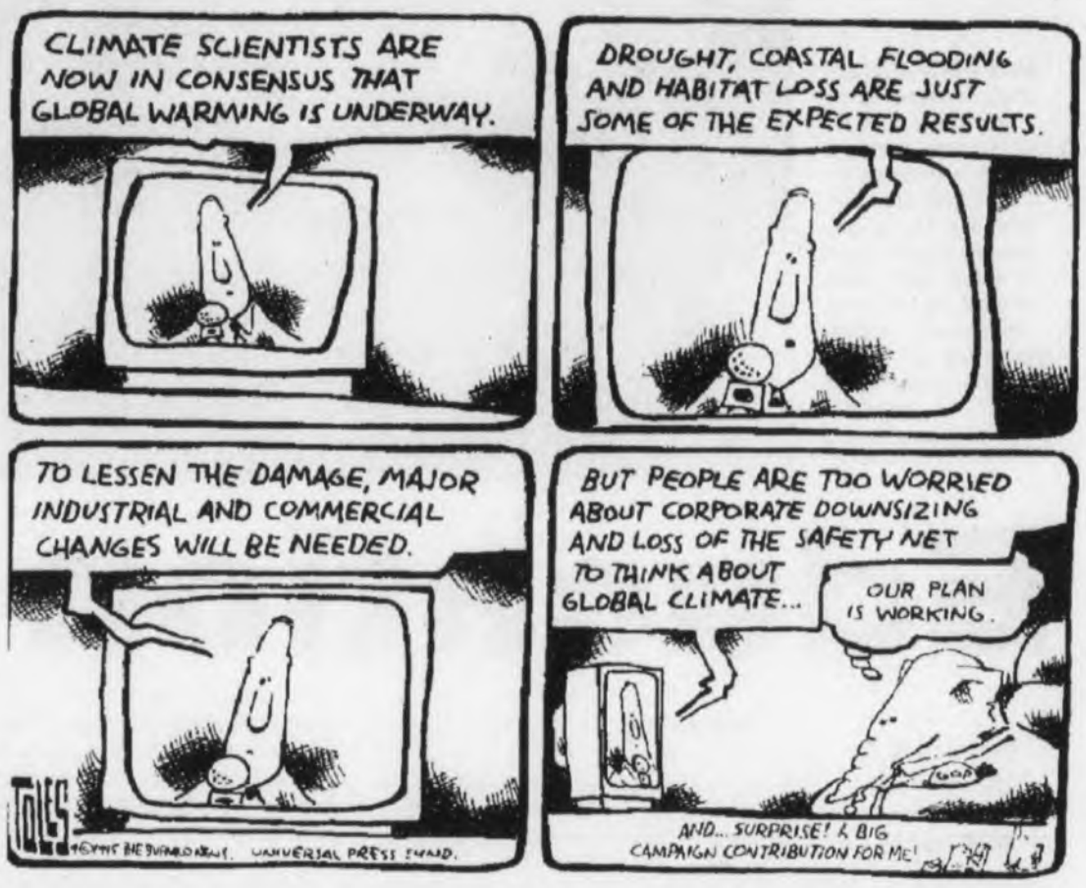
The creation of a community plaza walkway in Aggieville has been recommended as a city improvement funded by the City/University enhancement fund.

The walkway, on Moro Street from North Manhattan Avenue to 12th Street, could close parts of Aggieville to traffic permanently or during the evenings and weekends.

Student Senate's Government Relations Committee recommended the community plaza, along with five other projects, as a use of the University's annexation taxes. The money in the fund comes from taxes raised on campus and is used for projects that benefit both the community and K-State.

The five other projects are well researched and directly correlate to the staff, faculty and students of this University. However, a plaza walkway was not researched by the committee. If it helps anybody, it only directly benefits the Aggieville Business Association and only indirectly reaches into the K-State community.



Taxes from this campus should be used to benefit the K-State community. In the past, the committee has done an excellent job recommending projects that directly helped both the community and K-State.

President Wefald needs to take another look at the needs of this campus before approving the plaza walkway as part of the list.

Another project could be found that would directly benefit the University or the tax money could be used to speed the completion of already proposed projects.

Rather than spending the money on an Aggieville project, use the money collected on campus for the University.

KADY GUYTON

This is Banned Book Week, the 14th-annual celebration of the First Amendment and people's right to read. Let's hear it for the K-State Student Union Bookstore and the Manhattan Public Library, which have both set up a display featuring banned books.

I went over to the Union Bookstore to see the display and chatted with book manager Linda Wiemers. She told me about some books that have been banned across the country and in Kansas.

Wiemers loaned me a copy of "The Banned Books Resource Guide," which contains lists of all the books that have been banned in 1994-95 and books that have been banned or challenged in the past.

I was surprised at some of the books considered dangerous by other people. "The Diary of Anne Frank," "Huckleberry Finn" and "The American Heritage Dictionary" (offensive words) are but a few of the books that have managed to tick off someone over the years.

One of the "Where's Waldo?" picture books is also being challenged because of a picture of a topless woman in one of the illustrations.

Most of the books were challenged or removed on grounds of obscenity or because they contained filthy material. Many people said disrespect of religion or writing about the occult is potentially damaging.

"Zen Buddhism: Selected Writings" was challenged in Canton, Mich., because it detailed the teachings of Buddhism in a way that might make the reader embrace its teachings and become a Buddhist.

I don't know. Maybe cracking down on Satanic cults and white-supremacist militia members is the wrong way to go. We should just lock up all those dangerous Zen Buddhists. Why didn't anyone think of this before?

Looking through this publication, I realized some of my favorite books have been banned or challenged at one time or another.

I seem to have read a lot of damaging material over the years — whether I'm the worse for it is up to you to decide.

People who feel the need to decide the information the rest of us see make me wonder. My gut reaction is to ask them who the hell died and made them Big Brother ("1984" was also a banned book).

I know they mean well, but what are they teaching their children about the big picture — that censorship is wrong unless you do it? The First Amendment only applies when you have something to say?

Holbrook Jackson said, "Fear of corrupting the mind of the younger generation is the loftiest form of cowardice." There's a lot of truth to that, and it should be considered before anyone tries to censor anything.

A bit of information could be important to potential book-banners out there: As soon as anyone tries to get a book removed, the libraries can't keep it on the shelf.

I've read several books just because they were banned at one time or another. "Catcher In the Rye" and "Annie On My Mind" are two such books.

"Annie On My Mind" is now making the rounds of the Olathe school district, where some well-meaning individuals are exercising their right to protest. I hope this book makes it through and back on library shelves, but somehow I doubt it. Books about lesbians have never flown too far in Kansas.

Banned Book Week is a good idea that raises awareness and gives us a chance to appreciate the First Amendment, long may she reign. So in closing, I leave you with this thought:

"Did you ever hear anyone say, 'That work had better be banned because I might read it and it might be very damaging to me?'" — Holbrook Jackson.

▶ BEER BAN USELESS

Editor,

The new effort to ban alcohol at KSU Stadium mystifies me. If alcohol is banned in the parking lot, then ban it from the press box and luxury suites as well.

Are the University and athletic departments saying that someone who only contributes $300 a year and buys two season tickets must obey the law while someone in a luxury suite who contributes $30,000 a year and buys 10-15 season tickets can disobey it?

Why not concentrate your efforts on people who are a) underage and b) acting irresponsibly (i.e. openly drunk and disruptive).

I do tailgate at the games, but I do not consume alcohol. I like to be able to remember all the great Wildcat victories.

However, I see no reason to prohibit responsible adults from having a drink before a Cats' game if they so choose.

I assume the citations discussed in the articles regarding the new policy will include a fine?

Is this some new revenue-generating scheme now that we have 35,000 people at the games vs. the 10,000 people of a few years ago?

You want to really improve things at the stadium? Put in more portable toilets so my son and I don't have to wait in line for 15 minutes with all of the folks you're "preventing" from consuming alcohol.

▶ NIX REC CHILD CARE

Editor,

OK. Let me get this straight: We pay a mere $30 per semester to use a top-notch recreational facility, and we still have people whining about the needs of non-traditional students?

A student with a child can use the facilities in every way that a student without a child can.

If people want to come back to school after having children, then it should be their responsibility to see that the child is taken care of.

After all, this is an institution of learning and not a baby-sitting colony. Even so, the University already offers services for child care.

I'm not saying that it wouldn't be nice, but let's face the facts. The Rec is nice enough already.

Why can't we just enjoy having the No. 1 facility in the Big 8 and leave well enough alone?

If improvements can be made, I think that they should be geared to the entire body of people who use the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and not just one group. What's next, special basketball gymnasiums for people under 5 feet tall?

Originality preserves taste, ethics

Trends, as they occur in America, have various effects and durations depending on our fascination with them.

We doggedly watch Hollywood and other entertaiment industries to supply us with new ways of thinking and living.

In fact, America has been criticized for many years by other countries in the national community for being led by the nose regarding popular trends.

As America's influence abroad grows stronger, the youth of other nations, such as Japan, become eager to adopt prevalent trends.

When Quentin Tarantino's film "Pulp Fiction" won awards at film festivals and became one of the rare movies to move from the underground to marquees across the country, it was heralded as a movement in the motion-picture industry.

However, as a new onslaught of movies churn out of Hollywood, a question must be asked: Are the portrayals of violence and other factors within the movie purposeful, or are they just present for shock?

For those who haven't seen the movie, "Pulp Fiction" is a film that deals with the transition of a genre in American literature onto the screen. The scenes present in the movie are gritty and sometimes shocking, but they serve the general purpose of fulfilling what a pulp novel is — a book depicting the graphic side of humanity.

Although some might criticize Tarantino for such material, all one has to do is study films he has been a part of in the past, such as "Reservoir Dogs" and "Killing Zoe" to see that his hallmark exists within the shocking side of life.

The problem that grows out of such artists is a dismissal by the general public of content in movies that does not serve a greater purpose.

COLUMN

JUSTIN WILD

The gratuitous sex and violence that can be seen in many pictures deserves some condemnation, but the problem with simply condemning it is that it doesn't answer the question of why it exists.

America is no longer a chiefly literary society.

This year's Academy Awards named "Forrest Gump" as the best picture made during the year. However, as any avid moviegoer can see, pictures such as "Quiz Show" and "The Shawshank Redemption" have far more content and quality acting than "Forrest Gump."

Gump was voted Best Picture because it had a simple plot and a simple character whom anyone could follow and appreciate.

Movies such as "Quiz Show" are literate because of the intricacies within the dialogue and plot.

Other movies have such simple plots you could probably find a copy of the script on the shelves of Waldenbooks.

Basic plots and mindless violence in movies don't cause an individual to think; rather, the only need is to suck up the sensory input with a straw.

You don't have to wonder why Steven Seagal or Jean-Claude Van Damme breaks someone's leg because that's just what they do.

One has to analyze why Ralph Fiennes beats his Jewish maid in "Schindler's List." One also has to think about why the characters in "Reservoir Dogs" end up facing one another in a shootout.

Because of the instant sensations of television, we haven't been trained to think about our actions or the consequences to them; therefore, why should we think about what fictional characters do?

Not all the people who watch movies think about why they watch them, but I guarantee the people making movies do think about why America lines up to watch explosions and sex.

No one has to think about the slam-bang action sequences that hit so frequently that they become commonplace.

As long as audiences continue to walk through the bland fields of Hollywood without looking at what has been sown, our national intellect will remain dull.

There are individuals who continue to give acclaim to deserving pictures, but they are, unfortunately, in the minority.

As more lackluster movies are churned out, I hope we will all come to respect the endeavors of original artists. Taste and strong ethics are not extinct as long as intellect exists.

▶ HUMAN SERVICES

Fair offers students opportunities for jobs

Becky Sheridan
staff reporter

Information about social services will be available at the Human Services Opportunity Fair Thursday at the K-State Student Union.

"There will be about 30 agencies, mostly from Manhattan and Junction City, participating," said Olivia Collins, assistant professor of family studies and human services. "Most will be recruiting for volunteers or internships, and some for part- or full-time jobs."

Collins, who is also the coordinator of the fair, said the fair evolved from students needing to learn more about social-service organizations.

Tables will be set up in the ballrooms with additional information about each organization.

At least one person from each agency will be available at each table so students can get personalized information in addition to the printed material, Collins said.

Collins said there will also be informal 15-minute mock interviews in the Konza Room throughout the day.

"People need to know how to present themselves and how to carry themselves with confidence," said Wini Schaedle, certified diabetes educator, clinical nurse specialist at Memorial Hospital and fair interviewer. "It's my job to help them by critiquing them — not by criticizing them."

Students can sign up for an interview time outside Justin Hall 316. Participants should report to the check-in table at the Union prior to their interviews, Collins said.

Beryl Adams, executive director of the Riley County Chapter of the American Red Cross and fair interviewer, said she encourages as many people as possible to take advantage of the interviews.

"The more experience we have sitting one-on-one with someone, the more assurance it gives us," Adams said. "How we come across and the positive image we give out is very important because it lets prospective employers know who we are and that we can fit into their organization."

This is the first year the Department of Human Ecology has done something like this, but Collins said she feels it is a good opportunity for everyone.

"I think the fair could be beneficial to anyone, not just students," she said. "Anyone who comes will get great feedback from someone with experience and a lot of involvement in the community."

The Department of Human Ecology, in conjunction with the National Rural Families Conference, will sponsor the fair from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the K, S and U ballrooms in the Union.

The department also worked in cooperation with Career and Employment Services.

City commission misses deadline

Cori Cornelison
staff reporter

The city commission did not meet its deadline to hire an auditor to trace the financial history of the Rehabilitation Loan Trust Fund.

The city has spent about $800 on audit proposal requests but did not receive any responses by the Sept. 20 deadline. The audit requests were mailed and faxed to 21 accounting firms and advertised in area newspapers Sept. 12.

The city has received about six calls from prospective bidders for the audit, Curt Wood, director of finance, said.

The Rehabilitation Trust Fund contains money from sales of land through the urban renewal program. The fund is supposed to be spent to assist projects and services in low to moderate income areas in the city.

Some members of the South Manhattan Neighborhood Association have argued the money should have been used in their neighborhood because a lot of the land sold was in the south Manhattan area. They requested that the commission find out where the money has been spent through an audit.

The allocations being questioned date back to the 1980s. The city keeps records for five years. The audit would cost a minimum of $12,000 because some of the documents would have to be reconstructed.

The city commission voted Sept. 5 to hire an auditor.

City commissioners agreed to set up a pre-bid meeting to request quotes from auditors at a meeting Tuesday.

Commissioner Sydney Carlin said she spoke with the Municipal Accounting Office that suggested the city exchange ideas at a pre-bid meeting.

Commissioner Steve Hall said he also spoke with an accounting firm, which agreed to draft another proposal for free and might be willing to come to the meeting.

The intention of the pre-bid meeting will be for all accounting firms interested in bidding on the project, to exchange ideas so commissioners will have a more defined scope of the project Mayor Edith Stunkel said.

The date for the meeting has not been set.

In other business, Hall asked commissioners once again how much land the city owns that is undeveloped.

He said he has been requesting how much land the city has for two years.

Wood said he did not know how much land was available but would check into it.

Carlin said she would like to see a map of city-owned property.

Levi ads stir debate, theft

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The ad campaign for Levi's new line of khakis seems aimed at the crowbar-and-brick crowd.

Levi Strauss & Co. began putting actual pairs of the $50 pants in its bus shelter ads in New York City and San Francisco this week, and it fully expects people will break through the plastic panels to steal them.

In fact, the company is so sure people will stoop to vandalism to get at the pants that it designed the ads for pre- and post-theft presentation.

If the khakis are still there, the ad copy reads, "Nice Pants." Once the pants disappear, an outline of the khakis remains with the words, "Apparently they were very nice pants."

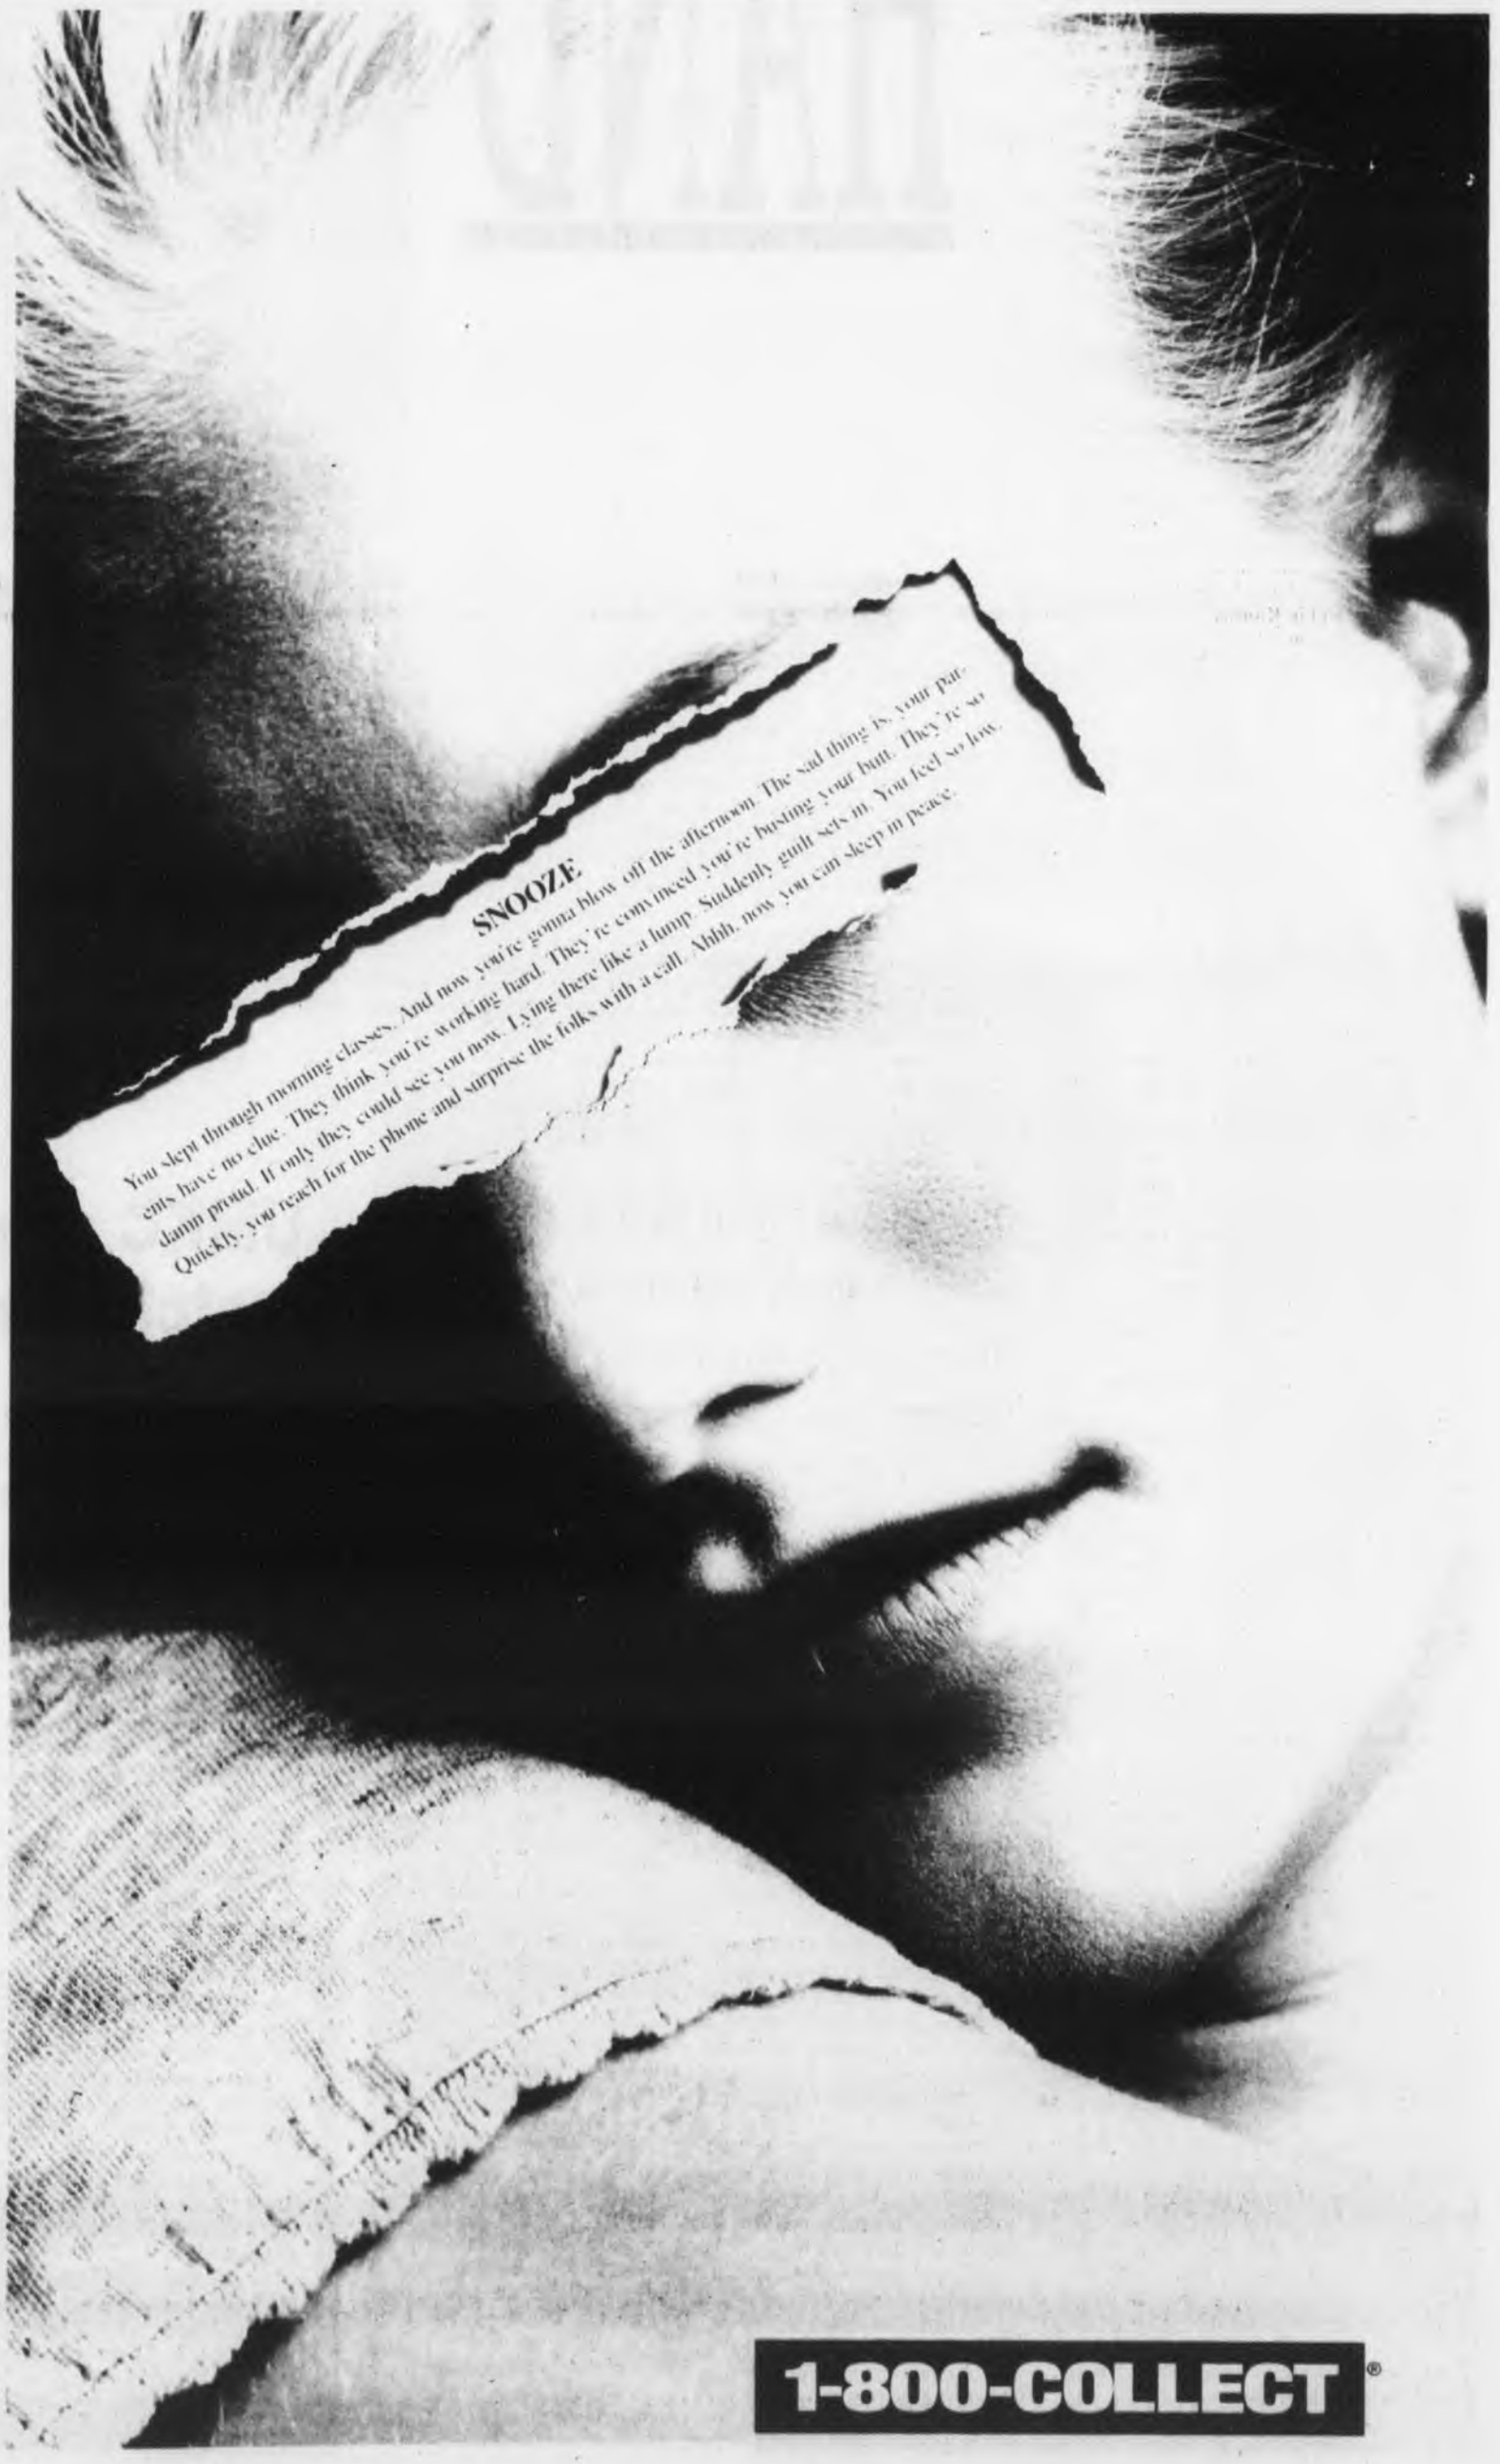
Mayor Rudolph Giuliani was not amused at the thought of New Yorkers shopping with crowbars on city streets. He said the ads were a terrible mistake — exactly the wrong message to be teaching to people.

But the mayor was sending just the message Levi's wanted: free publicity.

"The thought did cross our mind that some pairs might be stolen," said Brad Williams, senior marketing specialist with the San Francisco-based company. "But we think that adds to the talk value of the ads."

The pants appeared this week in New York City and San Francisco, in between the same hard plastic panels used for conventional two-dimensional advertisements. In all, 40 New York bus shelters had a pair of Dockers.

By Tuesday morning, at least one pair of pants was already gone from the West Coast, and the New York Post said several pairs were missing there.



"We factored the vandalism into their contract," said Doug Watts, a vice president at Gannett Outdoor Advertising, which rented the ad space in New York. Gannett charged Levi's an extra fee, anticipating the replacement of shattered plastic ($300 a sheet) and twisted panel boxes ($2,000 apiece).

The New York Police Department was taking a harder line: Anyone caught pant-napping could be charged with vandalism and theft.

The 'Minister of Defense' gets his long-awaited chance to walk the walk

It's early in the second quarter, and it's already 35-0, K-State over Akron. Reserves constitute most of the players on the field now for the Wildcats, and all suspense and excitement of the game is already gone. It's a snoozer in every sense of the word...

I am startled by a tap on my shoulder.

A man whom I have never laid eyes on stands emotionless and says, "Mr. Stewart, come with me."

COLUMN

TODD STEWART

Aroused by curiosity, I obediently follow. As we descend the press box elevator, he pulls something out of his jacket and says, again in the most emotionless, dry voice, "You'll need this."

What he hands me causes momentary disbelief. He hands me a deep purple Wildcat football jersey bearing the number 44 and the name "STEWART."

As the elevator reaches the bottom floor and the doors open, another man is waiting for me. He hands me a pair of size 30 gray and purple football pants, a pair of size 12 astroturf football cleats and a helmet.

"Dress in there," he says pointing to a worn-down supply closet. "You have two minutes."

Ninety-three seconds later, I emerge from the closet, fully dressed in the holy Cat football uniform.

The two men lead me under KSU Stadium to the K-State sideline. Coach Bill Snyder is waiting for me.

"Stewart, I'm sick of hearing you talk and talk. If you can talk the talk, it's time to walk the walk. Thank me later, but I'm giving you your chance."

Snyder turns away and grabs cornerback Joe Gordon as he runs by on his way to the field. Snyder whispers something in his helmet, and Gordon heads for the sideline bench.

"Stewart — you're in for Gordon."

I jog onto the field, fighting the swarm of butterflies in my stomach, and line up at right cornerback.

The crowd of 33,145 stands, goes dead quiet, and not a breath can be heard.

Then out of the back of the crowd, from a face unseen, a voice speaks up.

"STEWART!"

Then the crowd joins in.

"STEWART — STEWART — STEWART."

Linebacker and team captain Percell Gaskins call the play. After he's through, he points to an Akron wideout and says, "Just stay with him."

I line up 10 yards of the line of scrimmage, and the speedy wideout mumbles "rookie" under his breath. The quarterback surveys the defense, and I catch his attention. He's knows I am unproven. He looks at the wideout across from me, and nods. There is no doubt where the ball is going.

He runs 15 yards straight downfield, and I am right with him step for step, then he stops mid-stride, points his hand to the left, then turns right and heads for the sideline.

I am not fooled.

The quarterback releases the pass, and as soon as the ball leaves his hand, I know the pass is up for grabs — and I know I want it more.

I screen the receiver off, and the ball floats to me, hitting me in the numbers, right between the fours. I look up and see nothing but green pasture ahead of me down the sideline.

Fifty yards later, defensive end Nyle Wiren and defensive tackle Tim Colston hoist me on their shoulders in the end zone as the crowd screams hysterically.

"You're the man. You're the man. You're the man," Gaskins yells above the crowd into my left ear. "No one here has anything on you. You need a nickname — The Minister, The Minister of Defense."

And the crowd catches on.

"MINISTER — MINISTER — MINISTER."

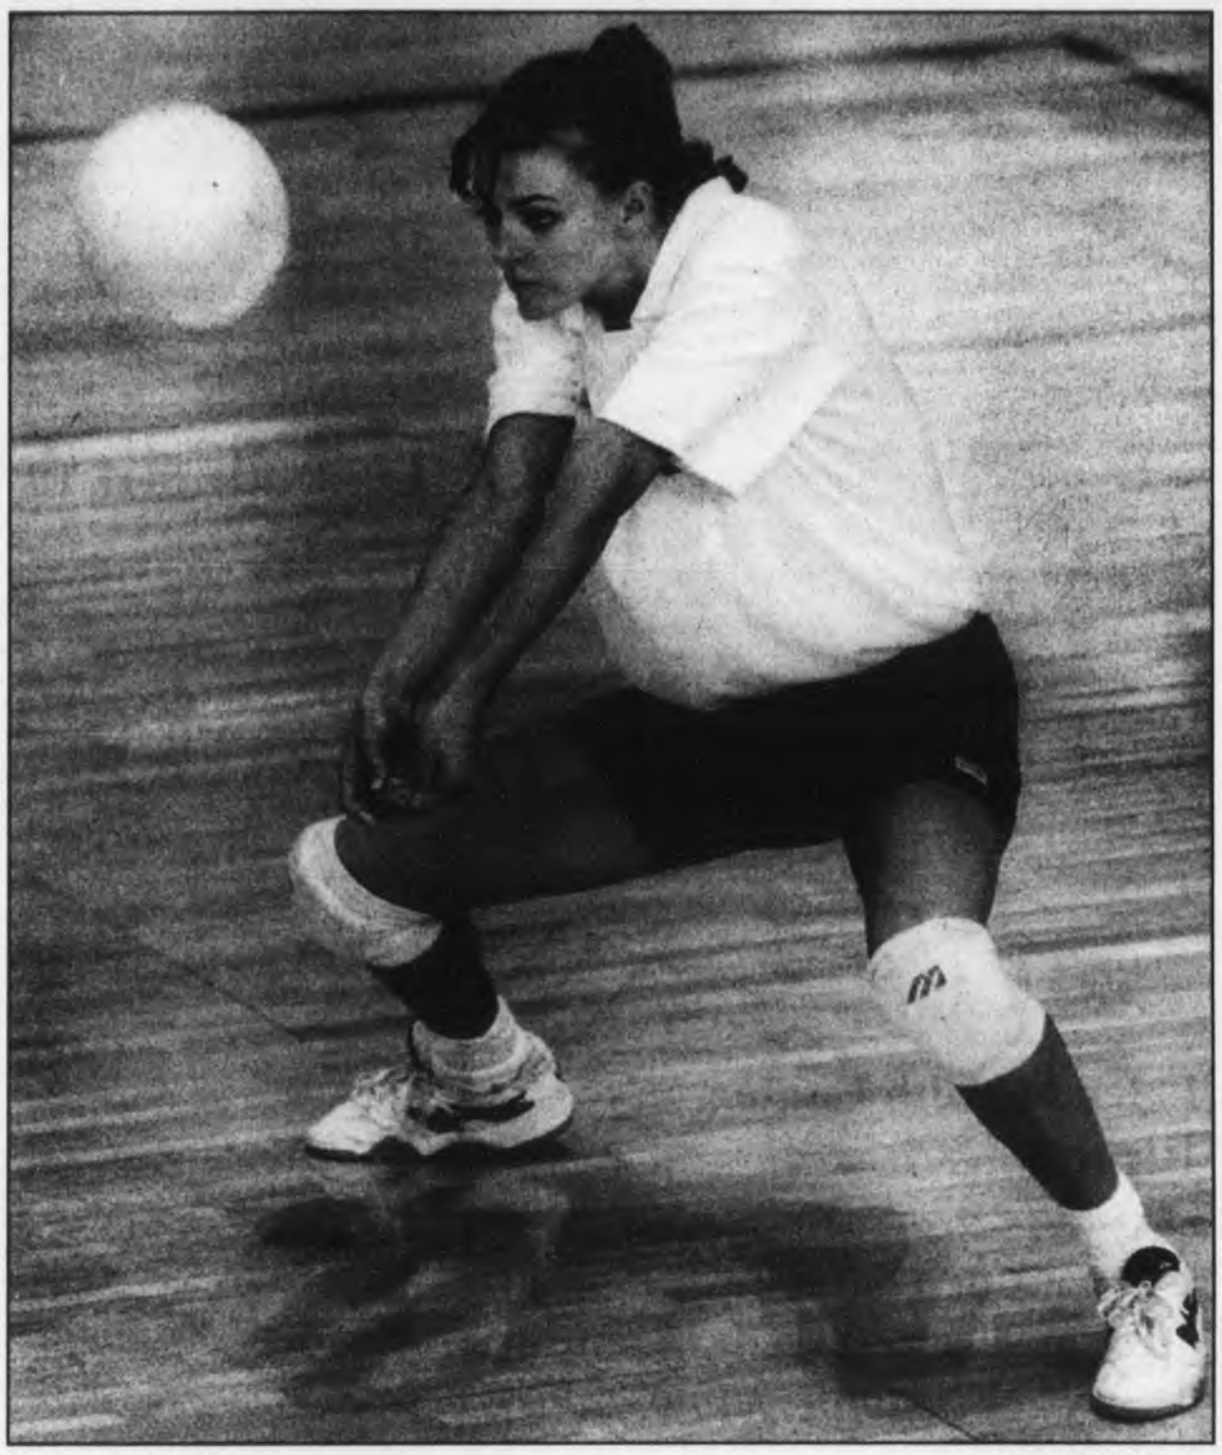
As I walk off the field to the cheers of the crowd, Snyder pulls me aside.

"You've now walked the walk, kid. I'm proud of you. I knew you could do it."

I smile because I know he's right. I can walk the walk.

"And that's your ballgame, folks. Final score, K-State 67, Akron 0."

I am startled again by a tap on my left shoulder.



"Todd, Todd — are you going to the press conference, or are you going to sit here all day?"

"I'm coming. I'm coming."

HELPING HAND

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Jill Dugan came to K-State four years ago and, as a freshman hitter, played on a Wildcat team that managed only seven victories. Heading into tonight's match against UMKC, the 1995 Wildcat volleyball team is 10-2.

Shana Newell
contributing writer

When Jill Dugan arrived in Manhattan four years ago, she found an atmosphere much like that of Grand Island, Neb., her hometown. She also found a Division I volleyball team struggling to win matches.

"I came to K-State because it reminded me of the town I came from. I also knew I could make a difference in the program here," Dugan, senior in kinesiology, said.

And she has made a considerable difference to the program. Although the 1992 Wildcats managed to win only seven games, Dugan led the team in block solos with 31. She even tied and then broke the school record for block solos in a game with six at Regis.

Since then, Dugan has become an integral part of the foundation in the rise to success.

That foundation has been built into a solid, tight-knit team within the K-State athletic department, and Dugan enjoys that the most about being a Cat.

"I like the people involved. The coaching staff and the other players are just great," she said. "I think that's why we play together so well, we're so close and we really know each other well."

This season, the 6-0 senior leads the team in solo blocks with seven and has 27 block assists to date.

For her career, she moved ahead of former K-State leader Helen Bundy this weekend when she recorded her 267th block assist. This accomplishment caught Dugan unaware when asked about breaking the record. She was unsure she had broken any record, and was surprised when she was told that she had.

"It would be a great way to wrap up my last year on the team if we made it to the NCAA Championship," Dugan said. "It would be quite a tremendous accomplishment, coming from a team that only won seven games my first year."

The K-State program looks to compete solidly in Big 8 action this year. The team takes the court against Colorado Saturday in its first conference match.

The Buffaloes are ranked 16th in the nation with a 7-4 record on the year.

"There are three ways that match could turn out. We could really beat them and be pumped up and ready to go forward. We could get stomped and look at it as a learning experience," Dugan said.

"Or we could play really well, give them a run for their money, and well, see what happens."

Dugan said she believes with Moore — the team could end up like Northern Michigan, Moore's last coaching assignment.

"They [the Cats] are going to be like Nebraska and will be a contender for a national title," she said. "They will get good recruits, not necessarily because of the great coaching staff, but because they will be K-State. That will be enough to get good talent here."

Snyder's Wildcat defense one of nation's best, statistically, through three non-conference games

Todd Stewart
assistant sports editor

Only three games into the season, and the K-State football team has found itself with one of the top-ranked defenses, statistically, in the Big 8 conference and the nation.

Statistically, the Wildcats lead the conference in scoring defense and are second in the nation, allowing 9.3 points per game. The Cat defense has also given up the fewest yards per game in the Big 8, again second in the country, at 241.3 yards a game. In addition, the Cat rushing defense ranks third in NCAA football.

"We still have improvements to be made," Snyder said. "I think we still need to be better against the run. Our major statistics would indicate that we are pretty good against the run, but again I don't think we have been tested.

"Each week now it's going to get tougher."

Snyder said one of the strengths of the Cat defense three games into the season is the inability of opposing offenses to sustain lengthy drives.

He said the defensive scheme was where the credit belongs.

"I think that's hard to do against us," Snyder said. "That's not issuing a challenge, but I think that's the nature of our defense."

Also ranking high in the nation's statistical rankings is quarterback Matt Miller. Miller's quarterback efficiency of 155.3 is the ninth best in the nation.

Snyder said he looks at quarterback efficiency rankings as a good measure of a quarterback's effectiveness.

"I would like for our quarterback to rank high in that particular category because the efficiency of a quarterback, I think, is important with anything that we do," Snyder said.

Helping Snyder and Miller's cause are sophomore running backs Eric Hickson and Mike Lawrence.

Snyder said even though his young tailbacks are only three games into their first season with significant playing time, there is no timetable for progress.

"There's no particular timetable for them. They're certainly making progress. I'm not disappointed by them all," Snyder said.

"When we get into the Big 8 conference, that certainly will be a better vantage point to judge them by."

Snyder also said Hickson and Lawrence's backups at running back also have the talent to be starters.

"It's not just two," he said. "We probably have four young guys that are very capable of playing that position."

UMKC comes to town for night match against 10-2 Wildcat team

■ Coach Moore's squad takes the Ahearn Fieldhouse court against 2-12 UMKC Roos after winning last weekend's KSU Invitational

Shana Newell

It's an evening of fun at Ahearn Fieldhouse for the K-State Volleyball team as they prepare to take on the University of Missouri, Kansas City.

The Wildcats return to the court tonight after beating the Rice Owls in four games to capture the championship at the KSU Invitational last weekend.

The Kangaroos come to Manhattan with a 2-12 record for the season, hoping for a chance to defeat the Cats. K-State leads the series 23-3.

The Cats plan to improve upon their 10-2 record this evening, their best start since 1984, and they have the ammunition to do so.

Junior middle-blocker Kate DeClerk has been named to all-tournament teams in each of the last three weekends.

She was K-State's nominee for Big 8 Player of the Week, earning that nomination for the fourth consecutive week.

In addition to her tournament MVP award last weekend, DeClerk has earned the American Volleyball Coaches Association Division I National Player of the Week award.

She is the first-ever AVCA Player of the Week for K-State and head coach Jim Moore.

"Kate's playing better volleyball than I've ever seen her play. She's playing really smart, and she's truly becoming one of the top middle blockers around," Moore said.

"I think (the award) is a great honor for her. It says a lot for what she's done and how she's stepped up as a player."

Other Cats enter Ahearn intent to strut their stuff to UMKC. Junior place-set-hitter Yolanda "Toie" Young currently has 105 kills, averaging 3.3 per game. Young is currently fifth on the all-time list at K-State with kills.

Senior hitter Jill Dugan is a key player defensively, leading the Cats with 144 digs so far, with an average of 3.5 digs per game. Dugan also leads the team with seven solo blocks. She moved ahead of former K-State player Helen Bundy this weekend when she topped the all-time block assist chart.

Sophomore setter Devon Ryning is the leading Wildcat setter for the second year in a row. She leads the team with 22 service aces on the year.

Freshman hitter Kim Zschau has been very volatile offensively for the Cats.

She has 120 kills for K-State, third best on the team behind DeClerk and Dugan. Zschau also has 110 digs and 17 block assists on the year.

"UMKC isn't a real big concern," Dugan said.

"We know we're a better team and that we can win. We're just going to go in there, do our job, and look forward to CU on Saturday."

The NCAA has listed K-State 12th in the nation in team blocking. They look to repeat their 1994 number one Big 8 ranking in blocking.

The Cats begin action against the Roos at 7:30 p.m. at Ahearn Fieldhouse.

▶ COMMUNITY SERVICE

Program helps communities

Nikola Zytkow
staff reporter

Studying the needs of a slum area in India and working to establish a market in Paraguay are just two projects K-State students organize through the Community Service Program.

The program places students in Kansas, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Mexico and other international communities.

"The purpose is to provide long, self-sustaining projects that the communities can pick up on," said Shante Moore, senior in political science and Latin American studies. "We initiate the projects, and most of the time, the community takes them over."

Moore and Brian Becker, senior in anthropology and wildlife biology, were two of the 11 students who went to India last summer.

The trip marked the first time the program took students to India, and the team spent a lot of the time investigating the community's problems.

"More than anything else, we were getting the feel for what they expected from us and what their needs were," Becker said.

The team studied Ganeshneigar, a lower-income neighborhood in India. Because of the country's shift to industrialization, migration from the villages to cities had become common. Slum areas grew quickly while the standard of living deteriorated, Becker said.

Open gutters took the place of underground sewage, and running water was not available on a 24-hour basis, Becker said. The team found that housing shortages and the lack of play areas for children made life in Ganeshneigar difficult.

The team developed a questionnaire and talked to the people of Ganeshneigar about their concerns.

Team members were able to speak English with some of the people in the neighborhood, but it also gave them a chance to pick up on the local language, Marati.

The team's status report included suggesting a medical drive, sanitation control, a library book drop, bringing speakers into the community and helping people with job searches.

"We felt that instead of building free housing, it would be better to give people opportunities to develop themselves," Becker said.

The report was given to the Rotary Club, which was the host agency in India.

"How they implement it is up to them," Becker said.

He also said the Community Service Program might return to the same location this summer.

"Next year, we can get some work done," he said.

Patti Bennett, coordinator for the international teams, said the teams involved the communities when deciding what problems to tackle.

"We don't go in there and say 'this is what you need,'" Bennett said.

Communities define their own problems and submit an application to the Community Service Program, which decides to take on a project based on the specificity of its need and how realistic the project is, Bennett said.

However, communities are not the only ones to reap the benefits of this program, Bennett said.

"We'd be fooling ourselves if we thought we're just going down there to 'help them,'" Bennett said. "A lot of times for students, it's a life-changing experience."

Many students involved in the program have never been in charge of anything on this scale, Robert Burns, faculty adviser for the summer teams, said.

"This is an opportunity for the students to do something on their own," Burns said. "I've seen many students grow up during the course of the summer."

Students with cultural and language experience are given preference when applying for the program, Bennett said.

Students chosen for the teams attend a three-credit course the semester before the summer service. The course is designed to help them by providing cultural training, a review of the language, project specifics and health issues.

VOLUNTEERING FOR THE PROGRAM

▶ The Community Service Program is at 51 College Court. The phone number is 532-5701. The application deadline for the international teams is Oct. 13, and the deadline for anyone interested in the Kansas teams is Nov. 1. International team members pay $500 and half the travel costs. The $500 goes directly to the costs of living abroad. Kansas teams are paid for the summer service, but international teams are not.

tition teams allocation to Peterson to be signed.

Brenda Halinski, graduate senator, was looking into bringing the second allocation for the ag competition teams up for reconsideration as well.

The allocation to the ag competition teams left only $6,200 in the competition teams account. At least three other organizations on campus qualify for money from the account.

Finkeldei said Monday that Peterson would not sign either bill because he did not want to squash the debate on the issues.

He said he had spoken with Halinski about her concerns about the ag competition allocation. Tuesday afternoon, Finkeldei said the allocation had been signed.

"If Jeff didn't sign it, it would have defeated the whole purpose of moving it special orders," Finkeldei said Tuesday.

"He signed the ag bill because no one asked him not to," Finkeldei said.

LeDoux had delivered a memo to Finkeldei concerning his opposition to the Alpha Phi Alpha allocation and his plan to move for reconsideration.

"Because we had the written statement from Trent, he didn't sign it," Finkeldei said.

Halinski said she was angry the ag bill had been signed even though Finkeldei knew of her objection and her plan to try and get the bill brought up for reconsideration.

Not only was the bill moved special orders, but the amount the Allocations Committee recommended was changed by an amendment from $10,857.15 to $15,000 because it was discovered there was another $5,200 in the account.

"If I had known they were going to amend the bill, I would never have moved for special orders," Halinski said.

By amending a bill moved special orders, no time was given for the senators to look up past legislation or to contact the other groups who could receive money from the account, she said.

"I thought the ag competition team should have been allocated the $10,800 in the bill," Halinski said. "Then if no one else asked for the funds, they could have asked again in the spring."

Halinski said moving the bill special orders and making the $5,000 amendment made it look like the ag senators were afraid the money would not be available in the spring.

Speech Unlimited has already approached the Allocations Committee about an allocation of $5,000, Halinski said.

"They just passed a bill in Allocations to fund Speech Unlimited $5,000," she said. "Now there is only $1,200 left in the account for anyone else."

The Society for the Advancement of Management, the other organization qualified to get money from the fund, has not submitted a request for funds from the account, and its members have been unavailable for comment.

servers will probably be the people who have to make the technical adjustments to make their servers' Web pages conform to the standards, which are now undefined.

One systems administrator, Patrick Hennessey, senior in electrical engineering, said he is concerned about, but looks forward to, the standardized official K-State Web pages.

"I've been an advocate for standards at the college level for quite some time," he said.

Hennessey, the systems administrator for the Department of Electrical Engineering, helped redesign the College of Engineering's Web pages last year so they were consistent in design and form.

"It appears to me to implement the same look, same feel for the University is like how we've created a same look, same feel for the pages at the College of Engineering," he said.

Hennessey said he supports this policy but is concerned about how the balance between the individuality of colleges' and departments' home pages and the consistency of the University's Web pages will be struck.

"I'm concerned there could eventually be a single, standard structure of hierarchy for the all of the pages," he said. "The potential exists for them to over-standardize."

Despite his concern, Hennessey said he supports having University standards of some kind for official Web pages.

Beth Unger, vice provost for academic research and technology and chairwoman of the Webmaster Committee, said she doesn't believe any changes that will be made to the various official Web pages will be too drastic.

"There will be some changes, mostly at the college level, but we're going to see tremendous variability with those pages, and we should have that variability," she said.

Unger said she appreciates the diversity of the current Web pages.

"I'm fascinated by what I see out there," she said. Unger said the Division of Biology's Web pages were examples of well-designed pages that bring out the best in what is offered by the division.

She also said many other colleges, departments and organizations have Web pages she likes. Unger said the differences in these Web pages are beneficial but Web users should be able to tell they are in K-State's corner of cyberspace.

"I think it's great that these pages are so diverse," she said. "However, people need to be able to recognize they're at K-State when they're at these pages."

Unger said although the guidelines for official Web pages aren't finalized, they will most likely entail some kind of standardized header, a graphic at the top of the page, a footer, another graphic at the bottom of the page, as well as some kind of logo.

Hennessey said he has also been concerned with the way he was informed about what the Webmaster Committee was planning to do. Even though he is a systems administrator for a department, he found out about the committee's direction in a Collegian story.

"I thought that was inappropriate that I had to find out that way," Hennessey said. "In my opinion, they should have come up with a draft document about what they were planning to do and made that available rather than use the Collegian article.

"Before they formed the committee, they should have informed the sys admins," he said.

Hennessey said he hopes to attend Webmaster Committee meetings so he can learn more about the upcoming policy changes.

Unger said she hopes to have student input into the committee's decisions.

"We need everyone's help," she said.

Although the committee meetings are open, they aren't necessarily forums for discussion with the committee, Unger said. She said she is looking to find ways to get more outside input into the committee.

"We hope to have channels for them to do that," she said. "We'll gladly communicate back."

The distinction between official and unofficial Web pages is not yet clear to all systems administrators. One Web server within the K-State domain that may or may not be considered an official page is that of the E-Collegian, the Web version of the Collegian.

Some are concerned that if the E-Collegian is considered to be an official Web page of the University by the Webmaster Committee, the design and content of the E-Collegian could become subject to the approval of the committee.

"We should be allowed to put whatever we want on there, within the law," said Kelly Campbell, junior in computer science and Student Publications Inc. systems administrator. "It should be just like the Collegian."

"I'm curious about what they're going to try to do," he said.

Campbell, who supports having standards for official Web pages, isn't too worried about whether the E-Collegian will become a point of contention.

"They might not make us do anything," he said. "I'm not really too concerned right now."

Jeanette Harold, computer information specialist and systems administrator for the College of Business Administration, said she isn't overly concerned about the upcoming changes either.

"All we do is change things so any changes that will be made will be nothing out of the ordinary for us," she said. "That's our life."

Mind hungry?

Haven't read a novel since high school? Don't know what's good to read? We asked several K-State students what their favorite books were and why. Each student gave a brief synopsis of the book. Due to space constraints, we could only publish a few of the reviews. To read the rest, check out the E-Collegian at (http://www.spub.ksu.edu/).

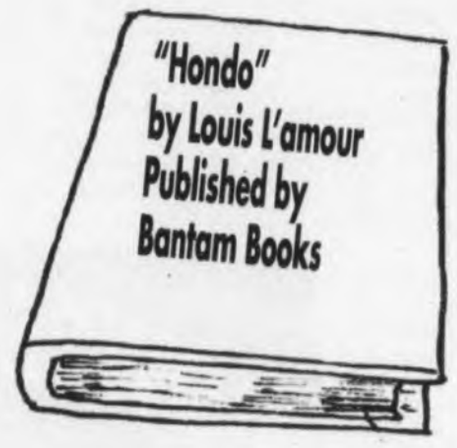
Jason Davis, senior in geology, said this book is about a desert planet that has huge worms on it. The worms produce a spice the whole universe needs to run. The main character is Paul Atreidies, who overthrows the baron in charge of the planet. Once he has accomplished this, he begins to change the desert planet.

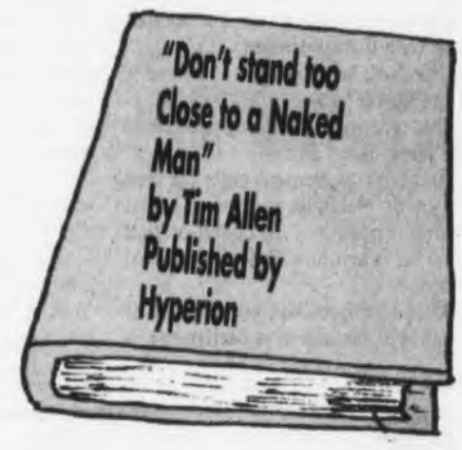


This book is the first in a series of books by Herbert. There is also a movie version of the story.

Laura Sleichter, sophomore in landscape architecture, said this book helped her look at things from a new perspective.

"I needed to work on drawing sketches better, and this book helped me," Sleichter said.

The book emphasizes seeing what is actually there and not what you think is supposed to be there, Sleichter said. It attempts to get people to look at things in a more abstract manner and use the right side of the brain to accomplish this.



"This is your basic Louis L'amour book. There is a lonely guy that saves everyone and gets the girl and the ranch at the end," Ethan Erickson, junior in business management, said.

The lonely guy in this story is Hondo, an army scout traveling the desert with his dog. He runs into a woman and her son who have been deserted. The Indians are on the warpath, so he tries to get the woman to come with him. She refuses, and Hondo leaves her behind. The woman's son befriends the Indian chief, who decides the boy needs a father.

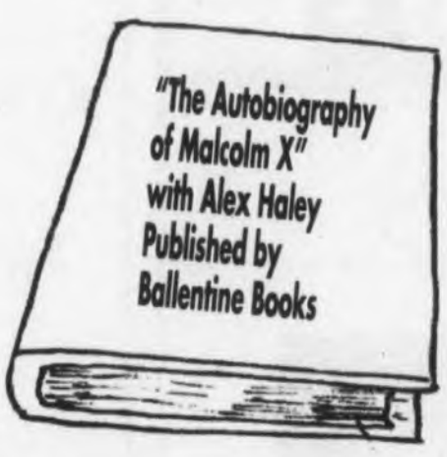
Meanwhile, Hondo meets the woman's husband at the army base. Hondo does not realize this is her husband until he shoots the man and sees the family picture. In the end, Hondo winds up returning to the woman and her son.

"It's just a simple book. I like stories about the old West," Erickson said.

Both Bench Currie, sophomore in elementary education, and Kevin McCune, junior in accounting, said they enjoyed reading this book.

"It talked about real life, but in a humorous form," McCune said.

Allen talks about his beginnings in stand-up comedy, using a lot of his own experiences as material. Currie said Allen uses his real name, Timothy Allen Dick, and his childhood as material, as well as the differences in men and women and married life, McCune said.



"I like Tim Allen, and that is why I read the book. I watch his show and his stand-up comedy," Currie said.

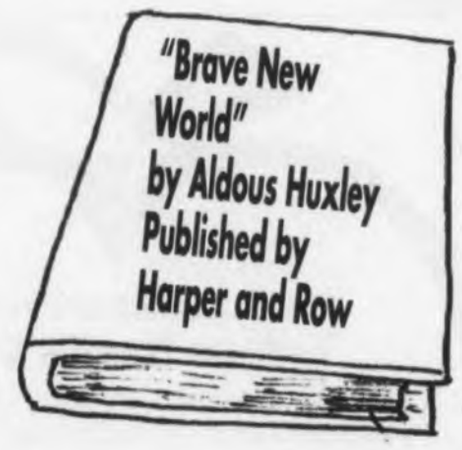
Lori Godfrey, junior in accounting, said this is one of her favorite books. The story is about a group of kids who are afraid of a clown who is really a monster and kills children. They go down into the sewer system to kill the clown, and they think the job is completed. Thirty years later, the clown resurfaces, and the kids, now successful adults, return to the town to fight the clown.

"Stephen King is my favorite author. I guess the clown in this story sticks in my mind because it is not something that is usually scary," Godfrey said.

"Sometimes when I am falling asleep at night, the clown sticks in my mind."

"People either a) know nothing about Malcolm X, or b) have preconceived notions about what he stood for," John Foust, senior in dietetics, said.

The "Autobiography of Malcolm X" tells the story of his life and the holy aspects of his life. The book is written from an interview with Malcolm X by Alex Haley. Malcolm X talks about all the different experiences influencing his life and actions.



"Most history classes don't mention him or briefly cover a small part of his life," Foust said. "This book not only talks about Malcolm X's past and what he stood for, but it also teaches us a lesson about ourselves. It gives us a different outlook on history and America."

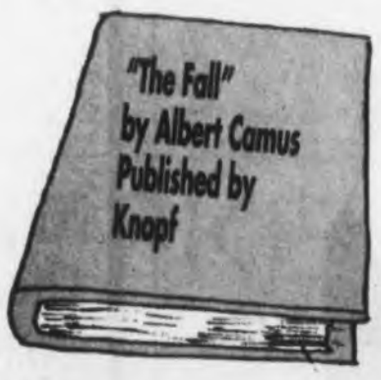
Rush Limbaugh's book examines the views of certain people on various social issues and points out inconsistencies, Steve Young, senior in journalism and mass communications, said.

Limbaugh uses a number of personal experiences in his book to illustrate these inconsistencies. He gives an example of a time he tried to donate money to an AIDS group. The organization refused the money. Young said that made Limbaugh realize organizations are not always concerned with fighting the disease but with advancing their own views.

"I listened to his radio program some, and was interested in what issues he would talk about and how he would address them," Young said.

Nick Pedersen, freshman in electrical engineering, and Mario Dippolito, freshman in mechanical engineering, both said "Brave New World" was one of their favorite books.

It is a futuristic science-fiction novel. The book addresses the dangerous trends in society. Everybody's job in society is predetermined, and everything is controlled by birth control and genetics.

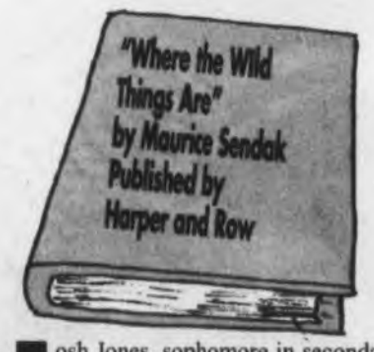


The main character in the story is a man from the outside who disagrees with the society. The people are synthetically happy on drugs, and there is no culture. The main character tries to convince the people they are slaves, but he is unable to accomplish this. He eventually kills himself because he can no longer withstand the pressures of this society.

"This is not just a useless novel. It is a novel about something that could actually happen," Dippolito said.

Liz Miller, sophomore in history education, said this book gives readers a lot of behind-the-scenes looks at George Bush's climb through politics. The book also describes Barbara Bush's childhood and her experiences. Miller said the primary focus of the book is her life after marrying George Bush. Barbara Bush describes the 1988 presidential campaign against Michael Dukakis and the '92 campaign against Bill Clinton.

"She sees the good in all people and has a more Christian outlook," Miller said. "I liked this book because it was a history of their lives. It was really interesting and funny."



"The reason that this is my favorite book is because it changed my thinking on why I do things. What are my reasons behind doing good things?" Rinav Mehta, senior in civil engineering, said.

Mehta said the book is about a man who reflects upon his actions, which look sincere to other people. After looking back at them, he realizes these actions were only for self-satisfaction. For example, if he saw a blind person trying to cross the street, he would run over there and help him. After getting across the street, the main character would bow to the blind man. The blind man would not be able to see this, but other people in the area would.

This story is about a scientist who creates a monster, and it is a favorite of Meghan Mueseler, sophomore in agricultural economics. The monster Dr. Frankenstein creates leaves the laboratory, tries to become a member of society and discovers society will not accept him. This angers him, and he seeks revenge against his creator for not taking responsibility for him.

"It was an intriguing story because you didn't know what was going to happen next," Mueseler said.

Josh Jones, sophomore in secondary education English, chose this childhood story as one of his favorites. The story is about a little boy named Max who gets in trouble and is sent to his room. While trying to go to sleep, his room turns into a jungle, and his bed turns into a boat. Max floats over to an island where the monsters are. Max plays with them, but eventually he has to go home.

"It should be required reading because Max is an American hero. He got sent to his room, but instead of just staying there, he hopped on his Sealy Posturpedic and went where the wild things are."

Election guidelines set

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Prodded by the United States, Bosnia's warring factions agreed Tuesday on guidelines for elections and a future government for their ethnically divided country, but they remained far apart on how to stop the fighting.

Delegates debated how much power should be given to central authorities in a Bosnian state divided between rebel Serbs and a Muslim-Croat federation.

The Serbs, who want to secede eventually and unite with neighboring Serbia, had opposed a strong central government, while the Muslims, who hope to keep their country intact, wanted to make it as powerful as possible.

President Clinton, in a brief White House news conference, said the agreement will keep Bosnia-Herzegovina as a separate, independent country.

"There is no guarantee of success, but today's agreement moves us closer to the ultimate goal of a genuine peace," Clinton said.

At the U.S. Mission to the United Nations, Assistant Secretary of State Richard Holbrooke said it was one more important step on the road to peace.

"We still have a long and difficult path ahead of us," he said.

Holbrooke said he was still not satisfied with the agreement.

"We can't be satisfied — the war is still going on."

The agreement made no provisions for a cease-fire.

Tuesday's agreement calls for free democratic elections as soon as social conditions permit — a condition that would be determined by international observers.

After elections, the government of Bosnia will consist of a parliament, a collective presidency and a judicial system.

Two-thirds of parliament would be elected from the territory controlled by the Muslim-Croat federation, the other third from Bosnian Serb lands. Any parliamentary actions must have the approval of at least one-third of the votes from each entity.

Left undecided was how many people would make up the collective presidency. As in the the case of the parliament, two-thirds would be elected from the Croat-Muslim federation and the remainder from Serb territory.

The power-sharing formula is enormously complex. Presidential decisions would be taken by majority vote, but if one-third of the group disagrees with a decision and declares it to be destructive of a vital interest, it would be referred to that entity's parliament. If two-thirds of the members of that entity's parliament voted against the action, it would not take effect.

Holbrooke called the formula for presidential decisions one of the most important elements of this agreement.

The agreement also calls for creation of a constitutional court.

The agreement was signed by Foreign Ministers Mate Granic of Croatia, Milan Milutinovic of Serbia, who represented the Bosnian Serbs, and Muhamed Sacirbey of Bosnia.

Sacirbey said the agreement envisaged that there would be elections once basic democratic freedoms are established, refugees are allowed to return to their homes, and after indicted war criminals are extradited for trial.

"Clearly, what we're doing is trying to build the tree of institutions after elections," Sacirbey said.

Earlier, Secretary of State Warren Christopher urged the parties in New York to seize the moment in history to reach a cease-fire. That did not happen.

Teen charged in Olathe shooting

Associated Press

OLATHE — A 17-year-old was charged with murder Tuesday in the shooting deaths of two teenagers and the woundings of four other young men in the aftermath of a feud over a local high-school football game.

A stoic Alfred Williams appeared in Johnson County District Court in an orange jail uniform and was charged with two counts of first-degree murder, four counts of aggravated battery and one count of unlawful possession of a firearm.

Family members of the accused and the victims crowded onto several courtroom benches. The mother of one of the slain young men sobbed.

Williams did not enter a plea and was assigned a public defender. District Judge Robert Jones set bail at $500,000 for Williams, who was being held in the Johnson County Jail.

Williams' next court appearance was set for Oct. 5.

Police said the incident began as taunting and a fistfight between groups of Shawnee Mission North students, Olathe North students and friends at a football game between the two suburban schools Friday night. The groups got into a full-blown feud that erupted in shots from a semiautomatic weapon Sunday night at Olathe North, which won the Friday game.

Williams is a senior at Shawnee Mission North, school spokesperson Michelle Dubay said.

Killed were Wilson Montenegro, 15, an Olathe North sophomore, and Jerrell Frazier, 19, a resident of Olathe but not a student.

Ryan Spornitz, 18, an Olathe North senior, was listed in stable and fair condition Tuesday in Overland Park Regional Medical Center with a gunshot wound to the back.

Johnny Bruce, 23, of Olathe, was listed in serious condition in the University of Kansas Medical Center with a gunshot wound in the stomach.

Two other Olathe North students, both boys, were treated at hospitals for minor gunshot wounds and released.

Roger Nordeen, assistant Johnson County prosecutor, said he was unsure whether more arrests or charges were expected.

Police ruled out gang involvement.

"There's nothing in this that points to gangs. This looks like just a high-school fight that got out of hand," Olathe police Lt. Joe Pruett said.

"This is not a case involving two armed camps having a shootout," Johnson County Prosecutor Paul Morrison said after Tuesday's hearing. "Basically, this was fisticuffs between two groups from rival schools, the kind of thing that's been going on forever.

"The tragic thing about this is that you had somebody bring a gun who wasn't afraid to use it, and that results in tremendous carnage," Morrison said. "What we're more concerned about is there not being further violence and people not doing stupid things over this."

Extra security guards and police officers began patrolling at both schools Monday.

Morrison said police made two arrests Monday near Shawnee Mission North that were unrelated to the Sunday shootings. A 16-year-old Shawnee Mission North student with a gun, and a 17-year-old from Olathe, who is not a student at either school, with a knife and a gun were charged with unlawful possession of weapons, he said.

▶ CENSORSHIP

Irish censors allow Playboy

Associated Press

DUNDALK, Ireland — Government censors have ruled Playboy magazine can be sold in Ireland, overturning a 34-year ban that had sent its fans hopping over the border to Northern Ireland to buy it.

In this town a few miles from the border, the news got some commercial pulses thumping. Gerry and Margaret Molloy said they were eager to sell Playboy in their Dundalk shop, even though some neighbors disapprove.

"They say I'm an idjit, but I'm here to make money. There's a clear demand for the stuff, and it's harmless," said Molloy, noting that other shops had sold Playboy under the counter for years.

The Censorship of Publications Board, which bans a range of periodicals and books from this predominantly Roman Catholic country of 3.5 million, approved Playboy's appeal for distribution rights on Monday. The magazine had been banned from the Irish Republic since 1961, but it could go on sale there as soon as next week.

"We were conscious of the fact that Playboy was very widely available internationally," said board chairman George Birmingham. "The only other country in what could be described as the West that banned it as well as Ireland was Turkey."

The decision drew criticism from women's-rights groups, which said they might challenge the censor's decision in court.

Ex-drummer returns to UFB, big gig to follow

Page Getz
contributing writer

Club Berlin will supply the diggable groovings of one of the ultimate in Manhattan bands, Ultimate Fake Book.

UFB will exhibit the return of its prodigal drummer, Mött Waldmann.

"We're excited to show Manhattan the second coming of Mött," Bill McShane said. "He left on the quest for the heavy-metal torch. Now he's back to pursue the Ultimate-Fake-Book torch," he said.

UFB played this month at Streetside Records. The band has also played beyond the Manhattan city limits, including a gig last week at Knickerbockers, a Lincoln, Neb., club.

UFB is now coasting on the distribution of its first release, "Visitors from the Sky," but the band is anxious to get back to the studio to produce a recording that will reflect the changes in the new dimensions of its more recent material.

"We're really approaching the music on a whole different scale in the songwriting," Nick Colby, bass guitarist, said.

"Before, we would come up with more complex music in these tremendous epics where the melody was sort of a fill in."

ULTIMATE SHOW

▶ Ultimate Fake Book will play at Club Berlin Thursday night. Bring a friend, have a blast and try to make it home in one piece. Call 539-6678 for more information.

In focusing more on constructing a more prevalent melody, UFB had to sacrifice some of its old sound and develop a more dominant vocal thread.

"We're really toning down on the distortion and moving into a more dry, melody-oriented, raw sound," Colby said. "Now we're coming up with the vocals first and letting the music work around it."

"We used to do a lot of screaming," he said. "We're just growing out of it. Our main goal is to find a serious melody, and the music will take care of itself."

UFB is now working with Vince Hayworth, an agent at Midwest Talent in Kansas City who also works with Lawrence's Jack Timberfish.

"It's really helped working with him," Colby said. "He organizes the business side, which none of us want anything to do with."

Beyond the financial burdens of keeping the band alive, UFB concentrates on exploring the new direction in the music.

"It's always changing," Colby said. "Where we go from here, who knows."

Sacrifice Isaac, a Kansas City group, will open the show for UFB.

The band is now touring regionally to promote its second release, "Tough Row to Hoe," on Acme Records.

"If we don't get picked up by a major label by spring, then we'll head for the East and West coasts," Carl Spoon, bass guitarist, said.

Sacrifice Isaac was among 120 bands that recently participated in the Mississippi River Festival in St. Louis.

Independent party plans get boost

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Ross Perot's pledge to build the largest party in the country got an intriguing boost Tuesday as Colin Powell opened the door to becoming its first presidential nominee.

Perot's announcement Monday night that he planned to form an Independence Party that would nominate a 1996 presidential candidate was enough to rattle both major parties, and they scrambled to assess whether the move made it more or less likely Perot himself would enter the race.

Before long, however, they also found themselves grappling with the prospect of some sort of Perot-Powell alliance, as the general-turned-author disclosed that Perot had called him over the weekend to tell him of his plans for a new party.

Asked if he would run as its candidate, Powell said: "Obviously it is something I would consider and he knows I would consider it."

Previously, Powell has said if he decided to run, he would be inclined to do so as a Republican, in part because of the giant hurdles to getting on the ballot as an independent.

Democrats and Republicans alike were left with the question of whether Powell's interest was real, or just part of his effort to sell his new autobiography.

Equally important was whether Perot would build a new party only to allow himself to be eclipsed by Powell — or anyone else.

"Only people in Washington would ask that question," Perot said. "This is not about me."

Little was known about how Perot's Independence Party would be structured, financed and placed on state ballots and how its presidential nominee would be selected.

Perot himself had few details, and said lawyers were working on the structure and budget.

He said it would only run a presidential candidate in 1996 because "we can only do so much at once well."

Perot said the response was overwhelming and more than 3,000 calls an hour were pouring into the headquarters of his United We Stand America organization — the springboard for the new party. But not all UWSA members were happy.

"Perot is doing his own thing," said Deborah Taylor, the elected chairwoman in Ohio. "We knew nothing about it."

For all the uncertainty, this much seemed virtually assured, the 1996 presidential race would be at least a three-way affair, perhaps even more crowded.

"There are either going to be three or four candidates vying in the center where the decisive votes are," said former Connecticut Gov. Lowell Weicker, who is considering an independent bid.

Perot spent Tuesday in day-long meetings at his Dallas office discussing the first hurdle, an Oct. 24 deadline to qualify the new party for the 1996 California ballot.

Five million petitions supporting the effort were being printed Sunday in newspaper ads across the state, and Perot organizers from across the country were converging to help register voters for the new party.

Maine and Ohio come next, because of their 1995 deadlines.

Perot said he would abandon the effort if Congress passed a balanced budget amendment and a litany of campaign and lobbying reforms by Christmas.

But he said he was operating on the assumption they would not.

"If this comes into being, it will be the first party, not a third party," Perot said. "It will be the largest party in the country."

Perot said Powell was just one of several prospective candidates he had spoken to. He declined to name any others.

With Powell atop the ticket, analysts of all stripes agreed the new party could capture a third of the vote or perhaps more. But Times Mirror Center pollster Andrew Kohut asked: "The question is would Perot's ego ever allow it?"

GOP pollster Frank Luntz, who worked for Perot in 1992, predicted it would not.

"I find it very difficult to believe that he would create this without knowing that his people will turn to him first," Luntz said.

Were Perot to run again, Luntz said his research showed the Texan would draw three votes from the Republican candidate for every two votes from Clinton, helping to re-elect the president.

Clinton himself had little to say.

"He'll have to do whatever he wants to do and the American people can make their judgment," Clinton said.

The early GOP front-runner, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, said he was perplexed at Perot's motives.

"I just can't figure this guy out because we're doing all the things he wanted done," Dole said.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich suggested Perot was making a substantial mistake.

"I think third parties are a fantasy of delusion."

Perot begged to differ.

He billed the new party as a home for the two-thirds of Americans who routinely voice displeasure with the two major parties and promised a fund-raising campaign "so our presidential candidate will have the money to run without ever having to make an appeal to special interests."

The Democratic and Republican nominees each get $60 million in taxpayer money for their general election campaigns, but Perot's party would not be eligible.

While Perot insisted he had no interest in being the new party's candidate, some state United We Stand leaders were already talking up the possibility of drafting him.

Such talk complicated efforts to assess the potential of Perot's initiative.

As many as 70 percent of Americans said they are open to the idea of a new party emerging; slightly more than a third said they are inclined to support a third-party candidate.

But if Perot is listed as that candidate, "that number drops down into the high teens," Luntz said.

Weicker applauded Perot's move but said it was highly unlikely he would seek Independence Party backing.

Yet another potential contender, retiring Democratic Sen. Bill Bradley of New Jersey, declined to say whether he would be interested but said Perot's move could be a positive development toward political reform.

Tenderloin's tunes hint of blues, rock

■ Band promotes new release with show

Scott Allen Miller
contributing writer

Put away your exercise machines — Tenderloin is coming to town.

The roadhouse-rock mavens who named themselves after a popular pork sandwich will be playing at the club formerly known as Snookie's Bar tonight.

Don't expect pretty boys with big hair. Don't expect grungy Eddie Vedder-come-latelys, either. Tenderloin is nothing but barbecue-chewin', engine-revvin' tattoo rock.

Listening to these guys could make your girlfriend chew tobacco and put your boyfriend back in jail.

Tenderloin's heavy blend of blues and rockabilly is the result of the places from which musicians hail.

Ernie Locke, vocalist and harpist, blows a harmonica and croons with all the blues of his native Kansas City behind him. John Cutler, bassist, is a Lawrence native.

Guitarist Kirk St. James of Dallas joined the band recently along with ex-Reverend Horton Heat drummer Taz Bentley, another lone-star state native.

This blend of Kansas City and Texas has been poured onto its recently-released Qwest Records album "Bullseye." This is the second Tenderloin album but the first to feature this bluesier line-up.

The new album, which includes a cover version of the ZZ Top song "Heard It On The X,"contains references to kitchens, food and cars.

With Tenderloin's fattening diet and sound, it's no surprise Locke refers to the band as a 1,000-pound-plus all-American rock 'n' roll band.

The band released a seven-inch single titled "Supernatural Bologna" on Sub Pop Records last month. After playing Manhattan, Tenderloin will be touring with Sub Pop's latest buzz bin band, Supersuckers.

The highly influential College Music Journal recently had this to say about Tenderloin: "This we know to be true: Jesus built [Butthole Surfers vocalist] Gibby Haynes' hot rod, but not content to stop there, he probably went on to wax and buff Tenderloin's set of mag-sized wheels."

If you catch Tenderloin tonight, you might just might simonize the jalopy yourself. Or maybe someone will do it for you — if you're lucky.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

■ Soldiers reassigned
to Germany; colors deployed

Gina Buster
staff reporter

A ceremony at Fort Riley Wednesday prepared soldiers for the deployment of the 1st Infantry Division Artillery colors to Wurzberg, Germany.

The deployment of colors is part of the Big Red One headquarters' change and the renaming of a unit in Germany, which are a part of downsizing at the fort.

A unit's colors are a symbol through which soldiers rally around and identify with.

The Big Red One has a long history at Fort Riley. The division was established on May 24, 1917, in Washington D.C., and has been at Fort Riley since 1955.

On Nov. 8, 1990, the Big Red One was deployed to the Middle East in support of Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

During the initial penetration of Iraqi defenses, 1st Infantry Division Artillery controlled the largest artillery preparation since World War II. Twelve cannons and three Multiple Launch Rocket System battalions fired 11,000 rounds in 30 minutes.

Although the Big Red One colors are going to Germany, no soldiers at this time are being deployed to Germany because of downsizing.

About 100 to 150 soldiers will be going to Germany as a part of regular reassignments.

The 1,000 soldiers in the divisions that were deployed Wednesday are either being reassigned to other posts or are filling empty positions at Fort Riley.

Of the 1,000 soldiers in the 1st Infantry Division Artillery, about 500 are being reassigned, Colonel Henry Stratman, commander of the 1st Infantry Division Artillery, said.

Before downsizing began in May, there were seven brigades at Fort Riley. After the downsizing is complete in April 1996, only three brigades will be left.

So far, 50 to 60 percent of the battalion inactivation is complete, Colonel Stratman said.

Fort Riley will lose about 8,000 people from its daylight population because of downsizing.

▶ BOARD OF REGENTS

Bill would appoint student to Regents

Cristina Janney
city-government editor

Student Senate is scheduled to vote tonight on a resolution encouraging Gov. Bill Graves to appoint a student or recent graduate to the Kansas Board of Regents.

The board sets policies and makes recommendations to the Kansas Legislature on tuition and budgets for the six state universities, including K-State.

Members of the board are appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Kansas Senate.

The law does not say a student or recent graduate cannot be appointed to the board, but they typically are not because of the time commitment required to serve a four-year term on the board.

Student Body President Jeff Peterson, who is also the chairman of the Student Advisory Council to the board, sent a letter to Graves earlier this year, asking if he would appoint a student or recent graduate to the board.

The letter was sent on behalf of the council, which is comprised of the student body presidents from the six regents schools.

Graves said he would accept an application from anyone who would be willing to make the time commitment to the board.

"It is important to be sure regents understand what is going on on the campuses," Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said. "I think someone with recent experience on a campus will know better what is going on at our universities."

Finkeldei said a student or recent graduate could bring an understanding of student issues to the board and a vital vote.

K-State President Jon Wefald said he has an open mind about student participation.

"Conceivably, a student or recent graduate would have a real feeling for what actually goes on at the undergraduate level," he said.

However, Wefald said he was concerned about the time commitment required to serve on the board.

"A student's first priority should be to be a good student," Wefald said. "They have to find the right student."

Proposed financial aid cut

The Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee passed Sen. Nancy Kassebaum's bill Tuesday. The Labor Committee Budget Reconciliation Bill would affect the Federal Student Loan program. If passed by Congress the bill would take effect January 1996.

Changes would include:

- A .85 percent charge to all colleges and universities on their federal student loans.
- Interest begins accrueing immediately during the 6-month grace period of federal subsidized loans for new borrowers.
- Cap the direct-lending program at 20 percent of all loans nationwide. The direct-lending program was to replace the Stafford loan program.
- Increase interest rate cap from 9 to 10 percent for parent loans.
- Banks and other lenders will be charged higher fees on their loans and would receive less reimbursement for defaulted loans.
- Guarantee agencies that back student loans would be required to hold defaulted loans longer and would receive reduced payments on defaulted loans.

The entire bill includes 17 changes to the Federal Student Loan program.

Universities charged for loans

James Dierking
staff reporter

Facing opposition from students and administrators, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., pushed a bill earlier this week that charges universities and colleges .85 percent for their student loans.

The Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee passed Kassebaum's bill that would account for $10.8 billion in savings over seven years.

The bill could take money away from other student programs or increase tuition by the 1996-1997 school year.

"We don't want to do anything that would further restrict access to Kansas State University," President Jon Wefald said.

Kassebaum said she did not want lender and guaranty agencies to pay for the entire $10.8 billion.

"The idea was to make it as small as possible and spread it around," Angela Reiff, educational policy research assistant for Kassebaum, said.

K-State receives more than $45 million in student loans and would be charged almost $382,500.

"Almost 70 percent of K-State students receive financial aid of some kind, whether it be loans, grants, scholarships or work study," Larry Moeder, director of financial aid, said.

The money to pay the charge would come from somewhere within the University, but administrators will not speculate about the source.

"We're just going to keep resisting this and not think about where we have to get the $300,000 to $400,000 until we have to," Wefald said.

Originally the bill specified that the charge must not be funded with increases in tuition, although the current draft allows a tuition hike.

According to a letter from Kassebaum, the annual per-student cost would be $20 at K-State.

"The Board of Regents sets the tuition and the legislature approves it," Sue Peterson, assistant to the president for governmental relations, said.

But the regents may not raise tuition because of the legislation.

"Tuition has gone up every year, and there are a number of regents that felt it shouldn't be increased this year, so I think they'll take a pretty hard look at it," Reiff said.

Kassebaum said her main objective was to minimize costs to students.

"There's always the danger of it being passed on to students," Reiff said. "But Sen. Kassebaum felt that it

The rising cost of tuition is forcing some members of Student Governing Association to take a closer look at the level of student privilege fees.

Full-time students pay $216.45 per semester in campus privilege fees, which pay for construction and student services on campus. Privilege fees are paid in addition to the $883 full-time students pay in tuition.

Of those fees, $52.25 is tied to debt retirement or bonds for the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex expansion and renovation, Farrell Library expansion and renovation, and the K-State Student Union enhancement project.

"Most bond issues are too lengthy for the Privilege Fee Committee to review or change," Mark Tomb, Privilege Fee Committee chairman, said.

The Privilege Fee Committee cannot change a bond issue so it does not review them.

More than $100 in fees that are not bonded will be evaluated during this Student Senate session.

A budget resolution passed by Senate requires the organizations with fees up for review to provide the Privilege Fee Committee with information about their services and the effects of user fees on the services.

The Student Publications, fine arts, Lafene Health Center, athletic and Union programming fees are all up for review this year and will be the first fees to be put under scrutiny by Senate.

While the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex fee is not up for review this year, it is under consideration for the user-fee system.

Under a user-fee system, only the students who use a service would pay to support that service. In an optional-fee system, students could pay only for those services they want to regardless of whether they use the services.

"There are some places where the user or optional fees can't be implemented," Tomb said.

User fees are not reasonable for services whose users can't be tracked. Changing a fee to a user fee does not mean the service will be cut, he said. It just means students who use the service will compensate for the segment that does not use it at all, he said.

"Like Lafene, if 12,000 people used it, there's no way it's going to die," Tomb said. "There's quite a few people who don't use the service at all."

Privilege fees on campus

Below is the breakdown of privilege fees on campus. Fees that are up for review this year are marked with asterisks. Fees that are labeled as bonded are bonded fees, which means that they cannot be changed. The Student Senate Privilege Fee Committee has proposed making student health, Student Publications and athletic fees into user fees.

KANSAS TOWNS UNHAPPY WITH PHONE COMPANY, VOICE CONCERNS

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas Corporation Commission agreed to hear all sides of the debate on who should provide telephone service to two west-central Kansas towns where residents rebelled against their present phone company.

The three-member KCC, with little discussion, agreed to hold a comment period in which all parties can present their points of view on who should serve the towns of Bogue and Hill City.

Rural Telephone Service Co. requested a certificate of convenience to provide service to the two communities. The Kansas Supreme Court ruled that cities have the power to determine which company will serve their communities as long as the decision doesn't interfere with intrastate and interstate communications.

The two towns want to discontinue service from United Telephone Co. of Kansas because residents were dissatisfied with its performance.

They have opted for Rural Telephone Service, but that company also must have a certificate of convenience from the KCC before it can provide service. United still has the KCC certificate.

Glenda Cofer, KCC director of utilities, recommended that the commission have a comment period to identify the policy issues before the commission.

"It's important that we have some substantive input," said Commissioner Timothy McKee.

Bogue, a town of about 200 people, and Hill City, with about 2,000 residents, have been battling with United Telephone for years. Both towns are in Graham County.

WRONG TURN PROVES FATAL

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bail was set at $3.5 million for each of three alleged gang members charged with shooting a 3-year-old girl to death as she rode in a car that took a wrong turn down a dead-end street.

Marcos Antonio Luna, 23, Marvin Alejandro Pech, 18, and a 16-year-old who wasn't identified because of his age, were each charged Tuesday with murder and five counts of attempted murder.

Arraignment for Luna and Pech was postponed until Oct. 11 at the request of the defendants

If convicted, they each face 15 years to life in prison.

The 16-year-old is scheduled to be arraigned today. A second 16-year-old, arrested for investigation of murder, was expected to be charged today, authorities said.

Police were still searching for other suspects.

Stephanie Kuhen was killed Sept. 17 when the driver of a car she was riding in mistakenly turned down a gangland street on the way home from a barbecue.

Her 2-year-old brother was shot in the foot and the driver suffered a minor back wound.

Mourners buried Stephanie in a private service Monday. A day earlier, about 200 people attended a public memorial service.

Authorities dropped their case against a 23-year-old gang member arrested last week.

Police Chief Willie Williams called the suspect, Vincent Caldera, one of the most vicious and vile members of the Avenues gang. Caldera was the first person arrested in Stephanie's death, but wasn't identified by witnesses during a lineup.

Soul Asylum

Band's style evolves, members get recognition from music industry, release upbeat album

review and story by Scott Allen Miller

art by Bill Kraai

If you've been near an FM radio lately, you've heard something from Soul Asylum's "Let Your Dim Light Shine."

This album is good news and bad news. The good news is that it sounds a lot like "Grave Dancer's Union," the band's breakthrough album. The bad news is that it sounds a lot like "Grave Dancer's Union."

No new furrows are plowed on this album. No, sir. If you were one of those people whose copy of "Grave Dancer's Union" had permanent residency in your CD tray, you'll probably have the same thing happen with this CD.

Then again, you might have already bought "Let Your Dim Light Shine." If you haven't, do it. You'll love it.

On the other hand, if you thought "Grave Dancer's Union" was too much like a smash-hit package, you won't be too impressed with this album. This album is smiley from the time you press play until it runs out less than an hour later.

Dave Pirner

To be fair, "Let Your Dim Light Shine" does have some differences from "Grave Dancer's Union." This album takes a walk on the mild side with more folkish lyrics, even more sentimentalism and sweet vocal harmonies. Not only might you start singing along with it, but your little siblings might join in and sing backup.

Yes, Soul Asylum is the Bon Jovi of the '90s. Take that to mean whatever you wish.

In seriousness, Soul Asylum does have some of the elements that made Bon Jovi rise to stardom (two-part harmony vocals, catchy lyrics that make sense on the first listen, a cute guitar-playing singer with big hair). Thankfully, Soul Asylum leaves the Spandex, lengthy guitar solos, love songs and explosions out of the mix.

Dave Pirner, who wrote most of the album, might be a more insightful writer than the Jon Bon Jovi/Richie Sambora team, too. The song "String of Pearls" is a descriptive narrative that comes full circle, "Eyes of a Child" is another deeper look at the situation presented in "Livin' On a Prayer," and "I Did My Best" is all about being in the right places for the wrong reasons.

Sterling Campbell

No one gives love a bad name on "Let Your Dim Light Shine."

Soul Asylum is sounding less like fellow Minneapolis musical pioneers Hüsker Dü and the Replacements, and more like the acts formed from those bands, Sugar and Paul Westerberg.

In spite of the edge in the band's sound, folkier elements seem to be just under the surface on this record. Laptop steel and fiddle would go well with tunes like "Tell Me When," "I Did My Best" and "String of Pearls."

Production on this album is clean. The band co-produced this album with Butch Vig, which is hard to believe because the Vig thumbprint does not appear anywhere on the individual instrument sounds as it did on albums by Nirvana, Smashing Pumpkins and Sonic Youth.

Instead, the entire band's sound remains transparent as if Soul Asylum itself were a musical instrument being recorded in the studio.

Overall, Dave Pirner is the best whiner in rock today. If you didn't like their last album, stay away. If you did like "Grave Dancer's Union" (or, for that matter, "Slippery When Wet,") you'll enjoy this album.

Soul Asylum with special guest Matthew Sweet will perform at 7:30 Monday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

The band is touring to support its latest album, "Let Your Dim Light Shine," the follow-up to its breakthrough album "Grave Dancer's Union."

Soul Asylum bassist Karl Mueller, speaking a few weeks ago from his favorite chair in his Minneapolis home, said he feels the album's title is a positive message for tough times.

"There are a lot of things that are negative out there, some bad things, but you have to keep looking forward," he said. "Just do whatever is positive, whether it's playing in a band, going to the Gap for jeans or whatever."

Mueller isn't preaching as much as he is testifying. Soul Asylum was in a dark place a few years ago, frustrated and disappointed at the band's lack of success.

"There were several times where, if we hadn't remained positive, the band wouldn't be here," he said.

Mueller said Soul Asylum took a do-or-die attitude into the recording studio for "Grave Dancer's Union," an album that Mueller said he would be proud of if it had been the band's swan song. The album brought the band the success it had been seeking and then some.

With appearances on "Late Night with David Letterman" and even National Public Radio's "Morning Edition" news program, the band began to gain popularity.

Dan Murphy

But it was the video for the song "Runaway Train," with the pictures and descriptions of missing children, that gained the band such widespread recognition that it became a guest at the White House. Mueller doesn't see the recognition of Soul Asylum by the establishment as anything to be too concerned about.

"That's going to happen to anyone who sells a few records," he said. "Hopefully, it will expose us to a new audience."

In spite of the serious lyrical themes in Soul Asylum's songs, Mueller sees being in the band as something fun to be a part of.

"I'm there to have a good time, and if I don't enjoy it, I wouldn't do it," he said.

Mueller said the band is still fond of its early punk roots. He said some of the earlier songs will get dusted off and played Monday night, but the majority of the night's set will be drawn from "Grave Dancer's Union" and "Let Your Dim Light Shine."

The reasons why Soul Asylum has hung in there long enough to record "Let Your Dim Light Shine" are clear to Mueller.

"We're always in it for ourselves. We never fake things," he said. "You put out a record because you believe in it, and it deserves to be heard."

Soul Asylum, as so many other successful bands before it, has been criticized by some of its early fans for selling out. Mueller characterizes this attitude as a backlash and said it doesn't concern him.

Instead, Mueller is more interested in the opposite reaction.

"What's more important to me is when one of the people who saw us in a club with maybe 40 other people comes up to me backstage and says they're still enjoying our shows," he said. "That really makes my day."

Research projects launched on shuttle

Jennifer Burdoo
staff writer

Several experiments designed and constructed at K-State were launched this morning aboard Space Shuttle Columbia from Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

STS-73 has a seven-person crew, led by Navy Commander Kenneth Bowersox, and will remain in space for nearly 16 days. The crew will work in 12-hour shifts in order to complete all the experiments. Terry Johnson, head of Bioserve Space Technologies at K-State, was in Florida this morning to work with the astronauts.

The K-State experiments include two cancer research and two virus research projects, as well as others. The experiments are run in cooperation with Bioserve Space Technologies.

"One main thing that's going up in this one is tissue culture cells," Heideh Fattaey, director of a K-State laboratory, said.

Fattaey's laboratory researches how an inhibitor halts the growth of both normal and cancerous cells. Cells become more sensitive when calcium in their environment is decreased, she said.

The cell experiment on STS-73 will test to see if the inhibitor halts growth at zero gravity.

"We're all very excited," Fattaey said.

Viruses are also going into orbit, Richard Consigli, professor of virology, said.

Experiments sent up during the past two years studied how virus proteins assembled in low gravity.

The STS-73 experiments were designed by Eric Gillock and Scott Smiley, graduate students in virology.

They will try to discover if low gravity has an effect on the ability of viruses to replicate.

"It's more search instead of research," Smiley said, explaining the researchers have no hypotheses about the results.

Other students involved in the project include Antoine Perchellet, junior in microbiology, and Maria Black, senior in microbiology.

The virology experiments are planned to run during the first three days of the mission.

"Every bit of information helps," Fattaey said. "The more we know, the less we have to fear."

Student Senate displays flawed judgement in using special orders to railroad allocation bills

Senate was so busy trying to jump through hoops to get these bills passed that it forgot about being thorough, fair and just.

It appears the wants of the few are deciding the deeds of the many in Student Senate.

If you haven't been following the recent transactions of Senate, here's the abbreviated minutes.

Last Thursday, Senate moved two allocation bills by special orders.

Special orders bypasses the second reading of a bill and moves the bill onto the Senate floor for consideration.

Alpha Phi Alpha, a K-State fraternity, and the agriculture competition teams were requesting money from Senate. The two groups were requesting money from different accounts.

The Alpha Phi Alpha request for $1,694.80 was passed by a 50-0-0 vote. The ag competition teams' request didn't have such an easy time with the legislative body.

After much debate and a few amendments, the ag competition teams' request had grown from $10,857.15 to $15,000. Now, a bill that has been moved special orders has just been amended.

Special orders doesn't allow any real time for senators to research or communicate with constituents.

Right here lies the first flaw committed by Senate. There was no reason for either bill to be rushed. Debate on the Senate floor argued for the expediency of the ag competition team allocation because of a competition coming up that weekend.

Rushing this bill through special orders didn't matter. Student Body President Jeff Peterson didn't even sign the bill until Tuesday. What was all the rush? That's another story.

After these bills are passed by Senate, senators began questioning whether Senate had done the right thing.

Senators began talking about reconsidering the bills — both bills.

Only the ag competition teams' bill found its way to Wichita for Peterson to sign. The Alpha Phi Alpha bill stayed here in Manhattan because it could be reconsidered.

The ag competition teams' bill slipped through the cracks. Why would one bill be sent to be signed and the other not sent after senators have expressed interests in reconsidering the bills? To put it simply, a double standard exists.

Insert the second flaw committed by Senate right here.

There should be one and only one standard policy for sending or not sending bills to the executive branch to be signed.

Senate was so busy trying to jump through hoops to get these bills passed that it forgot about being thorough, fair and just.

Forget the fact that Senate by-passed one of its own committee's recommendations for the ag competition team funding.

Forget the fact that any other group on campus would not have been able to increase its allocation after the allocations committee had recommended an amount.

Forget the fact that the only defense given of the extra money during debate was that the group really needed the money. Forget the fact that Alpha Phi Alpha was almost blindsided with a move to reconsider its allocation.

Remember that Senate works for us, the students — hence the word "student" in its title.

It doesn't matter if Senate is allocating $1,694.80 or $15,000, it can't rush the job by moving special orders. That's the purpose for spacing out the first and second readings.

Special orders should be treated like silver bullets or the National Guard — only used in case of emergency.

Breast growth poses questions

Matt Hawkins

Scientists are continually experimenting with new ways to improve our lives.

They do this, of course, by first performing their experiments on rats.

This is deemed necessary in order to protect the human population in the (I am afraid I must get technical here) "highly unlikely" event that an experiment using a human subject is struck by lightning, whereby we accidentally cause the creation of (American television will verify this) a Herman Munster, or even worse, a Sen. Bob Packwood.

Therefore, scientists use rats, so when the experiment actually IS struck by lightning (Japanese television will verify this), we now have giant, blood-sucking, man-eating rats with electrodes protruding from their necks, wearing oversized boots, walking around on their hind legs, Zombie-like, with their furry rat-arms sticking straight out in front of them.

This, of course, is nothing to worry about. Congress is full of these creatures.

As a result of thousands of rat experiments and having spent billions of dollars, we can safely say that as proud taxpayers we have, by far, the strongest, healthiest rat population in the world.

One of the latest scientific discoveries, which recently appeared in the journal Science, is a drug that burns fat in rats. (Mice, actually — rats are now on strike because there is an ongoing labor dispute between rats and their laboratory managers, which has disrupted crucial experiments all over the United States but will ultimately be resolved with rats getting paid salaries equal to baseball players.)

This drug is actually a natural substance, a protein called Leptin, and when it is injected daily into Oprah-sized mice, it suppresses the animals' appetites, speeds up their metabolisms and burns off so much body fat that they slim down to Madonna-sized mice, without all the make-up, of course.

The implications of this discovery are truly enormous. This means that if lightning-free human tests are ever successfully completed without creating millions of obese Herman Munsters, we, as normal, fun-loving, junk-food-eating humans, will be able to scarf all the Twinkies we want without ever putting on an ounce of fat!

All I have to say to that is a hearty, "YOU SCIENTISTS ARE A CRAZY BUNCH OF GUYS!"

Any time you think something SOUNDS too good to be true, you can bet your cellulite it IS too good to be true.

That's why I am a firm believer in "It's not nice to fool Mother Nature," a saying that first appeared when I was a kid in a very frightening butter commercial in which Mother Nature, a scary woman in a white gown (who bore a striking resemblance to Sen. Jesse Helms in drag), would cause lightning to strike and turn a margarine salesman into a tub of lard because his margarine tasted like butter.

So it follows that when we eat Twinkies by the truckload and thus end up looking like Marlon Brando, this is Mother Nature's way of saying, "Look, porkbutt, this stuff isn't good for you. You want to end up looking like Marlon Brando?"

COLUMN

BRAD SEABOURN

On the other hand, scientists occasionally come up with something which, at least from the male perspective, is a truly wonderful discovery.

I am referring to experiments which were begun last fall at the Carolinas Medical Center in Charlotte, N.C., and at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor. Scientists at these facilities have discovered a method that uses a woman's own cells to (and again, I am going to have to get technical here) grow her own breasts.

Now, before all you men out there go into sensory overload and choke and blow beer out your nose, let me say that this technique has ONLY been shown to work on laboratory animals. However, there have been numerous reports of thousands of multi-breasted rats running around New York City at this very moment.

But, before this procedure can be used on human test subjects (female, I sincerely hope), scientists have many serious, unanswered questions which must be answered first, such as: "What if the cells don't grow into the proper shape? What if the cells don't stop growing? What if lightning strikes while the cells are growing? What if Sen. Packwood undergoes a sex change and uses these cells to grow breasts — will the cells STILL grow, or will they refuse to grow on the grounds that he might sexually assault himself?"

If this breast-growing process ultimately proves successful, I can see a HUGE market in the male college-student sector.

I base this assessment on the fact that if this technique had been available 20 years ago, you would have seen potted breasts growing all over my dorm room ("Son, what ARE these things?" "That's a breast plant, Mother." "Oh. That's nice.")

Of course, had this process been available back then, it would have altered an entire generation of panty raiders ("Thanks for the panties. Oh, by the way, could I trouble you for a couple of breast cells?")

While these latest scientific discoveries are interesting, I just wish (for obvious personal reasons) that scientists would give some serious effort to developing a product which would completely solve the problem of male pattern baldness.

On rats first, of course.

I simply can't stand the sight of bald rats. They remind me of Packwood.

Kassebaum defends changes in student loan program

It was with no relish that the U.S. Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources undertook the task of changing the student loan program this week in order to produce savings that will allow the the federal government to balance its budget by the year 2002.

I would like to comment on this effort and clarify some inaccurate characterizations which have been made in recent days regarding the effect of the changes on students.

As chairman of the Labor Committee, I was charged with finding approximately $10.8 billion in savings from mandatory spending programs during the next seven years.

While I was reluctant to target the student loan program, it was almost the only mandatory spending program under the jurisdiction of the Labor Committee, and I simply had no other choice but to find the required savings in that program.

The efforts that took place in the Labor Committee this week were to determine exactly how those savings were to be found.

My primary objective in designing the changes was to minimize costs to students.

The plan adopted by the Labor Committee accomplishes that objective by limiting the direct effect on students to only the elimination of the interest subsidy following a student's departure from school.

This would apply to only new borrowers, but not students currently in the system.

Currently, students are given a six-month grace period after they graduate before they are charged interest on their loans.

It is inaccurate and unfair to suggest, as some have, that the plan adopted by the Labor Committee cuts the neediest students out of education. The facts are quite to the contrary.

★ There is nothing in the plan that limits the amount of loan funds available.

★ There is nothing in the plan that limits the ability of a student to qualify for a federal loan.

★ There is nothing in the plan that increases the cost of a loan to a student who is in school.

I will be the first to admit that finding the savings required in the budget was a difficult task, but the plan adopted by the Labor Committee attempted to do so in a manner that keeps the interest of students foremost in mind and that applies spending reductions to everyone involved with student loans.

COLUMN

NANCY KASSEBAUM

Savings are achieved from lenders, Sallie Mae, guaranty agencies, the Department of Education, and institutions of higher education.

One change that has been greeted with concern is the creation of a new origination fee of .85 percent proposed for postsecondary institutions on federally guaranteed student loans.

Some have argued that the origination fee will be passed on to students in the form of higher fees or tuition.

Perhaps that will be the case. Even if it is, the annual per-student cost would be $20 at K-State, for example.

I would contend, however, that there is room for postsecondary institutions to take a hard look at their own cost — just as we are asking everyone else to do.

The plan adopted by the Labor Committee will undoubtedly be changed as it is debated by the full Senate and signed into law, but the bill as it currently stands attempts to find savings in the fairest, most reasonable way under the instruction we were required to meet by the Senate Committee on the Budget.

It would be my hope that next year we can find a more constructive way to handle the reconciliation process.

We should be able to count the committee's discretionary spending reductions as well as any mandatory spending reductions we may make.

Reconciliation is not a new process, but, I believe, it is being used in even more counterproductive ways with numbers shaping policy rather than policy shaping numbers.

Students in today's loan program receive interest-free loans throughout their years in school.

That is a good deal, and under the committee's plan, the student loan program will remain a good deal.

▶ ISSUES ADDRESSED

Editor,

I'm writing to you about a variety of topics that have been in the Collegian lately.

The first issue I'd like to address is about the Lafene Health Center financial situation.

I would much rather pay $70 and then have free use of Lafene when I need it. That way, I know it's paid for and don't have to worry if I don't have money when I get sick.

The second issue is about the series of child care articles that appeared on Sept. 26. One quote stated, "If the students have a problem with it (a child in the classroom), then they can get up and leave."

If someone is paying tuition to go to school, then that person should not be forced out of the classroom by a misbehaving toddler. I can understand if parents cannot afford day care.

But if the child is causing a disruption to one person or the class as a whole, then it is the parent's responsibility.

The third issue is more of a response to what Jason Hamilton wrote in his article, "Union Panders to Non-Smokers."

If some people don't want to have to breathe nauseating, toxic smoke when they get to the K-State Student Union, then that is their right!

Hamilton said that it was senseless and outrageous that the Union does not sell cigarettes. It is possible that the Union does not want to seem hypocritical by selling the tobacco products it is prohibiting.

Lastly, if I had a chance to write a column then I would choose a topic that is less trivial than a debate that has been going on for quite some time now, with neither side changing the other's views.

Tour the town

Manhattan and Fort Riley offer history and excitement to everyone

It is possible to be a tourist in your own town.

With Family Weekend two days away, this might be the perfect opportunity to grab a camera and take the parentals to check out what the area has to offer.

1. Tuttle Creek Reservoir, five miles north of Manhattan, is the second-largest lake in Kansas. It was completed in 1962 and cost $80 million to build. But according to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, it has saved several hundred million dollars in property losses by preventing downstream flood damage.

In summer 1993, the spillway at the reservoir was exposed during 21-days. On July 23, the highest elevation was reached at 1,137.77 feet above sea level. Because the flood-pool level is 1,136 feet, all 18 spillway gates were raised, and the maximum outflow through the spillway was 27 million gallons of water per minute. About 380,000 cubic yards of sediment were removed.

As a result, body and trace fossils from the Permian age are exposed in the spillway rocks, including brachiopods, bryozoans, gastropods and trilobites.

2. The Sunset Zoological Park is home to more than 300 animals. More than 90,000 guests visit the Sunset Zoo each year.

Sunset Zoo has special exhibits of reptiles, birds and mammals. In addition, Sunset Zoo is the only zoo in Kansas with snow leopards, red pandas and cheetahs.

For more information, call 587-2737.

3. Aggieville tends to be the center of life in Manhattan. It provides the opportunity for consumption of a wide range of alcoholic beverages in bars tailoring to all types of crowds.

Alcohol consumption isn't the only activity in the Aggieville. There are also coffee houses, retail stores and movie theaters.

The first business was opened in Aggieville in the 1800s when the location was still a cornfield and K-State was the Kansas State Agricultural College, but by 1912, about a dozen businesses existed, according to a brochure published by the Aggieville Business Association.

Post-game victories might bring a crowd to Aggieville in the 1990s, but according to the same brochure, Aggieville boomed when the troops returned home from World War II in the '40s. By the '60s, hamburgers in Aggieville were six for $1 and the hottest new eating place was Pizza Hut.

4. The Konza Prairie Research Natural Area might be the perfect place for a family hike. It is an 8,616-acre tract of native tallgrass prairie set aside for long-term ecological research containing three main trails. The Nature trail is 2.8 miles long, the Kings Creek Loop is 4.7 miles and the Goodwin Hill Loop is 6.1 miles.

The Konza Prairie has been owned by the Nature Conservancy since 1977, but it is operated by the Division of Biology at K-State. At one time, the area was part of the 10,000-acre Dewey Ranch, acquired by C.P. Dewey and his son, Chauncy, during 1872 to 1926.

To get to the Konza Prairie from K-177 at the east end of the Kansas River Bridge, turn on McDowell Creek Road and drive about five miles. The entrance is on the left. It is open daily from sunrise to sunset. For more information, call 532-6620.

Manhattan isn't the only town with fun places to visit. Fort Riley also has quite a few attractions for those willing to make the short drive west on I-70.

5. The First Territorial Capitol was built in 1855 and reflects a time in Kansas history when slavery was a hot issue. The first legislature to meet in this building was called the Bogus Legislature. It passed Bogus Laws by antislavery Kansans. Most of the legislatures that met for the first session were in fact in favor of slavery and had been elected by Missourians who crossed the border to vote.

For more information call 784-5535.

6. The Custer House is the only double set of surviving officer quarters from Fort Riley's early history. Fort Riley itself was established in 1852 to provide a staging area for the U.S. Army to protect the overland trails. This mission continued after the Civil War as railroad crews laid track westward. The 7th Cavalry Regiment was organized here in the fall of 1866 under the command of LTC George A. Custer.

At the Custer House, it is possible to learn about daily life at the turn of the century for an officer and his family. For more information, call 239-3032.

7. The U.S. Calvary Museum traces the history of Fort Riley, originally named Camp Center. Its name changed to Riley in honor of Major General C. Riley, who led the first military escort along the Santa Fe Trail in 1827. This museum contains general history about the fort, its generals and the wars and conflicts the soldiers have been involved with. For more information, call 239-2737.

8. The 1st Infantry Division Museum tells the history of the Big Red One. It traces the infantry's history from its arrival in France in 1917, through both World Wars, the Vietnam War and on to Desert Storm. This museum contains many artifacts and uniforms. For more information, call 239-2737.

But did they play "Taps" when it came down?

The Collegian reported earlier this week that an American flag was stolen from the top of a 240-foot crane in the Farrell Library construction complex. The replacement flag is also missing. The thieves remain at large as of press time. The idiot(s) who stole this flag are rumored to be in need of a life and could be charged with criminal trespassing and theft if the Law Co., the flag's owners, choose to press charges. If convicted, the suspects would probably face some fines. Republicans aren't too worried about the flag theft as long as the stolen flag doesn't catch fire, in which case the thieves would go to federal prison if the GOP had its way.

To love, honor and impregnate until death do you part

At only $775, they're being touted as the first wedding dresses designed for pregnant brides. Fashion designer Jennie Andrews brought a version of her creation, in white of course, to a fashion show in England last month. "Being unmarried and pregnant is no longer taboo," she said with the aplomb of someone who's never heard of presidential candidate Pat Buchanan. These dresses should go over well down south — as long as the brides remain barefoot through the wedding ceremony.

From State Farm Insurance to state prison

Like a dumb neighbor, State Farm Fire and Casualty gives stuff away to people who don't deserve it and then asks for it back. Lucio Ambroselli took out theft insurance with State Farm on paintings that were hanging in the Vatican Art Museum, offering photos of the paintings as proof of ownership. When he reported the paintings stolen from his home, he collected $410,000 from the insurer. Now Ambroselli has to pay the money back, faces five years in prison and could be fined $250,000. However, the best way to get money out of an insurance company still seems to be marrying a rich old man on the verge of death, the way Anna Nicole Smith did.

Not only does it think on dates, it also talks

It seems the creators of an ad campaign in Brazil pulled a real boner. The campaign involved a man having a conversation with his penis. The man (and his penis, of course) go into a bar. He then tells his penis, named Braulio, that it will have to wear a condom if it comes out. The penis agrees and demands the condom be used soon because an attractive woman is supposedly staring at it. Brazilians were upset, especially guys named Braulio. Imagine how people named Dick, Johnson and Peter have felt all these years.

Predictions revisited before the Big 8 season

Before the start of the college football season, the Collegian sports staff made predictions on how the Big 8 teams would fare this season.

There were the safe predictions, with everyone picking Nebraska to go undefeated, and the interesting predictions, such as picking KU to finish last in the conference.

But a month later, with the official start of the final Big 8 season starting Saturday with Colorado at Oklahoma, I'll look back at my picks and choose which ones are on the right track and which ones aren't.

■ Nebraska (11-0 prediction, now 4-0): The Husker starters haven't been able to break a sweat so far this season with blowout wins over Oklahoma State, Michigan State, Arizona State and Pacific.

They haven't been challenged yet and won't be until K-State visits Lincoln on Oct. 14. Brook Berringer is not only the best backup in the nation, he'll make a better pro quarterback than Tommy Frazier or Chad May.

Their already good chances will get better when Lawrence Phillips is let back on the team sometime next month.

Final thought: Along with Colorado, Nebraska is the class of the conference but not good enough to beat the Buffaloes in Boulder. NU will finish 10-1.

■ Colorado (10-1, 4-0): Colorado is the mild surprise of the early season because of how it's winning. It blitzed two decent teams in Wisconsin and Colorado State, and won the second-best game of the season to date against Texas A&M. (The best was Tennessee's win over Georgia last week.)

Colorado has the second-best quarterback in the conference, Koy Detmer, but his injury will hurt the Buffs.

The game against Nebraska at the end of October will be the game of the year in the Big 8 and will decide which team will have a record of 11-0 and 10-1.

Final thought: So far, Colorado is the most impressive team in the conference. If Detmer comes back at even 80 percent, CU will beat Nebraska and go to the Fiesta Bowl to face Florida State.

■ Oklahoma (7-4, 3-0): OU has labored in its first three games this season, letting San Diego State, Southern Methodist University and North Texas get their hopes up going into halftime.

We'll find out if OU is for real Saturday night against Colorado. An OU victory and the Sooner Nation has reason for optimism; a loss and OU will fight it out with K-State for third in the conference.

Even though Howard Schnellenberger is a seasoned veteran, he's introduced a whole new offense and has a redshirt freshman in Eric Moore to run it.

Final thought: OU isn't good enough to beat CU or Nebraska but might be able to steal the Nov. 4 game here. Oklahoma will go 8-3.

■ Kansas (7-4, 4-0): In this prediction, I forecasted a 4-0 non-conference slate. KU is ranked for the first time in a few years, and the game at CU a week from Saturday will tell the tale. If KU stays close, it's for real. If they don't, they're not.

Final thought: KU will win three conference games against the bottom three teams and lose its games against the Big 4, but 7-4 is good enough for Glen Mason to get into a bowl.

■ Missouri (5-6, 2-2): The Tigers laid an egg against Bowling Green, so they'll have to steal a game against one of the Big 4 to finish 5-6. Not likely, but MU will beat Iowa State and Oklahoma State. MU has a brutal conference road slate, visiting K-State and Nebraska to start the Big 8 with games at KU and OU later.

Final thought: Larry Smith is in only his second season at Mizzou — give him another year. MU will finish at 4-7.

■ Oklahoma State (1-11, 1-3): Who cares?

Final thought: Ditto.

■ Iowa State (3-8, 2-2): ISU will beat OSU in the Big 8's version of the Toilet Bowl.

Final Thought: See Oklahoma State.

■ Your beloved Wildcats (9-2, 3-0): They no doubt have the best defense and wideout in the conference, but the rest of the offense?

No coach wants to put pressure on a quarterback, but if Matt Miller can't make it through the season — and he's been banged up the first three games — K-State is in big trouble. If Miller stays healthy, K-State should be in good shape, going 5-2 in the conference, but …

Final thought: By the time OU hits town Nov. 4, the Sooners will be clicking on all cylinders, and K-State will be coming off the big win over KU. I'll change the pick to 8-3, well below some of the 10-1 predictions that appeared in the Aug. 25 Collegian.

Wildcats send Roos hopping away defeated

■ K-State prepares for match tonight against Valparaiso

Shana Newell
staff writer

It was an early evening for the K-State Volleyball team last night as it improved its record to 11-2.

After a short struggle early in the first game, the Wildcats came on strong to deny the University of Missouri-Kansas City its third win, forcing the Kangaroos to drop their 13th match of the season.

The Cats won the match in three games scoring 15-6, 15-3, 15-2.

Coach Jim Moore chose not to start setter Devon Ryning or hitter Toie Young for the match.

"We were able to give the others a chance to play," he said.

"We are going to reinsert Linsey (Luther) who in the long run will turn out to be a good setter."

Although Luther, a freshman, did not play Wednesday, Moore intends to bring her into the lineup soon. She was originally recruited as a hitter, but Moore has been grooming her for a possible move to setter position.

The team tried a new type of pregame warm-up last night as it prepared for UMKC, practicing on the court for an hour and a half before game time.

"I have a certain drill, a sideout drill, where they have to sideout every so often at a certain percentage," Moore said. "It is important for them to stay focused. If they don't, they're going to lose."

The drill evidently had some effect on the women as they proceeded to stomp all over the Roos, hitting the ball strategically into unprotected holes on the court.

The Cats hit .347 in the match with 34 kills and only eight errors. Hitter Jill Dugan contributed six kills, and hitters Kim Zschau and Val Wieck each had five.

Middle blocker Debbie Miller's performance was definitely improved by the extra workout. She dominated the Wildcat offense, recording eight kills and 13 total attack, hitting .538 offensively.

Defensively she led the team in solo blocks with two.

"Debbie was unbelievable," Moore said. "I thought for sure she was going to get the all-time attack percentage for a match. At one point she was 12 of 13 attacks and no errors. I thought she had it, but then she had that one null and that error. She did great."

Filling in for Ryning at setter was Mariela Fasce, and she showed plenty of poise in leading the Cats.

"Mariela played really good and set pretty well tonight," Moore said.

"I noticed a change in her attitude. She was really nervous against Northeastern Illinois last weekend in her first game as setter. Tonight she showed a lot more confidence and guided the team well."

Looking toward Saturday's matchup against 16th-ranked Colorado, Moore sees tonight's match with Valparaiso as a stepping stone to the first Big 8 conference game.

"They're a tough team, and will give us a little more competition than we had here tonight," Moore said. "But we have to stay focused. Valparaiso lost in three games to Iowa State, but they were close games. They'll be harder to beat."

While Moore said he thinks receiving votes for the AVCA Top 25 this week is a great thing for the K-State volleyball program, he hesitates to jump for joy.

"Personally, I hate it. I'm the type of person that believes if we get ranked in the Top 25, we better deserve it. Right now, we don't deserve it," he said.

"I don't like to fall backwards. I would much rather inch up slowly and stay ranked once we get there than occasionally be ranked and fall back out."

Moore said that if K-State defeats the Buffaloes this weekend, he might say the Cats deserve to be ranked, but won't say so now.

"We have to execute at a high level for a long period of time," he said.

After falling to perennial Big 8 powerhouse Nebraska in three games last night, Colorado will enter Ahearn Field House with a three-game losing streak.

"They haven't lost four in a row in a long time. We would have to play well," Moore said. "We have the ability, but we just have to maintain the high level of play."

Wildcats advance at Clay Court Championships

■ One singles player, one doubles team remain in the first leg of the college Grand Slam

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

The K-State women's tennis team scored a victory in the qualifying rounds of the SkyTel National Clay Court Championships in Baltimore, Md., Tuesday afternoon as the doubles team of sophomores Dinah Watson and Lena Piliptchak defeated a duo from North Carolina State.

Watson and Piliptchak took the pro-set format match 8-3.

"Mentally, they were very sharp and tactically played a very sound match," Coach Steve Bietau said.

> STEVE BIETAU
> K-STATE TENNIS COACH

Following a rain delay Tuesday, qualifying singles play at the Clay Court Nationals began Wednesday for the Wildcats.

Sophomores Yana Dorodnova and Piliptchak were both dropped in the first round of play.

Piliptchak took Karen O'Sullivan of Duke to three sets before folding 6-2, 4-6, 6-2, while Dorodnova was routed 6-0, 6-1 by Katharina Bernstein of Virginia Commonwealth.

Watson moved into the second round with a 1-6, 6-4, 6-4 win over Martine Chra of Mississippi before falling to Melody Falco from the defending national champion Texas Longhorns 6-3, 7-5.

The loss was Watson's first of the year, and she now has a 4-1 singles record.

"Dinah fought hard," Bietau said. "She didn't execute at the highest level, but had a decent performance."

The losses leave K-State with only Karina Kuregian, seeded No. 7 in the main draw, remaining in singles action.

Kuregian, who was ranked No. 14 nationally in singles in the ITA preseason rankings, will begin play on Friday against Laura Zifer from Duke. Kuregian finished last season ranked No. 30.

The Cats' doubles team continued to cruise after a strong start last weekend at the Travelers Express Invitational. Watson and Piliptchak dropped the team of Thoste and Hart from Nebraska 8-3 in a pro-set format match Wednesday and will face the duo of McManus and Redondo from Boise State in the third round. The win makes Watson 4-0 in doubles play this season.

"The doubles team has looked very sharp so far in both matches," Bietau said. "We've had some tough matches and played pretty well in all of them."

The Wildcat doubles team of Kuregian and Dorodnova, ranked No. 26 in the ITA doubles rankings, did not play.

Bietau said he is pleased with the Cats' performance at the Clay Court Nationals.

"Overall, things are going well with the tournament," Bietau said.

"So far, we've been getting what we wanted, which is tough matches."

Dorodnova will team with Kuregian today in the main draw of the doubles action to take on Falco and Morose from Texas.

Football

▶ RUMORS OF ESPN COVERAGE UNTRUE

Rumors that the K-State vs. Kansas game Saturday, Oct. 28, will be moved to Thursday, Oct. 26, and televised on ESPN are unfounded, according to K-State sports information director Ben Boyle.

"We're getting a barrage of phone calls," Boyle said in a statement released Wednesday.

"At this point, we have heard nothing from ESPN, and its schedule for Thursday, Oct. 26, indicates that it will televise a Canadian Football League game at 7 p.m."

FEES

Tomb said he has always liked the idea of user fees rather than optional fees because then the people who use services will be paying for them.

One way user fees could be implemented is by giving refunds at a certain point in the semester to the people who did not use a service during that semester. Another idea would be to reduce the general privilege fee and increase the fees for services as students used them.

"I think most of the services will survive on user fees," he said. "Sure it's going to cost a little more, but things aren't going to go away."

The budget resolution will require the services and organizations with fees up for review to defend their fees and show how students benefit from the services.

"It will force us to look at privilege fees more carefully," John Potter, Senate chairman, said.

Tomb said he thought the information would make his committee's job easier. The services will have already taken a critical look at their budgets and looked for ways to cut costs and forecasted how a user-fee system would affect the services, he said.

"By no means are we on a witch hunt," Tomb said.
